Petition, under s. 24, C. P. C., for transfer of the case, from the Court of the District Judge, Jullundur, to some other Court in any of the adjoining districts.

Mr. Chandar Gupta for Lala Fakir Chand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Badri Dass, R. B., for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The petitioner is a widow who has filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge of Jullundhur against the order of the Trial Court dismissing her suit but she applies for a transfer of the appeal to some other Court on the ground that the District Judge has already expressed his opinion against her on certain points involved in the present appeal which were in issue in a Succession Certificate case decided on appeal by the learned District Judge. I am of opinion that this is no ground for transfer. The District Judge will evidently decide the present appeal on the material that has been brought on the record of this case. I, therefore, dismiss the application.

Hindu Law—Widow—Debts—Charge on estate.

Even the fullest legal necessity cannot make a debt incurred by a Hindu widow a charge on her husband's estate after her death unless she specifically creates that charge. A personal debt of the widow is payable out of the income of the estate until she declares her inability to pay it herself by alienating a part of the estate to pay it.

Ramasami Mudaliar v. Sellattammal, 4 M. 375; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1097, Upendra Lal Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee, 25 C. 565; 2 C. W. N. 425; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 373 and Kallu v. Faiyaz Ali Khan, 30 A. 394; 5 A. L. J. 367; A. W. N. (1908) 173, referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the Second Sub-Judge, First Class, Raipur, dated the 16th August 1924, in Civil Suit No. 91 of 1922.

Mr. W. Y. Deshmukh, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose and Messrs. S. N. Bose and P. N. Rudra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It has been held in this case that the statement of fact in the award to the effect that there was no separation between Keslal Singh and Anjor Singh is final as between the parties to the arbitration, in the same way as a decision by a Court between them. The correctness of that view is very doubtful, but the question does not arise because there is no such finding in the award. The nearest thing to it is the statement that the villages belonging to them both had not been partitioned. That can mean one thing or the other equally, and the effect of the rest of the award is the same, as it gives Keslal Singh's widow, in respect of the property of the family, a position midway between what she would have had if he had separated from Anjor Singh and what she would have had if they had remained joint.

The case, in these circumstances, would have to be remanded for a trial of the question of jointness if it were otherwise maintainable. But it certainly is not, for two reasons. All the defendants, of whom Anjor Singh has alone contested this appeal, were sued as the legal representatives of the estate of Keslal Singh, not of Bahora Bai who left none. But even the fullest legal necessity cannot make a debt incurred by a Hindu widow a charge on her husband's estate after her death unless she specifically creates that charge. The debt is her own personal debt, payable out of the income of the estate, until she declares her inability to pay it herself by alienating a part of the estate to pay it. The matter is fully explained in the judgments in Ramasami Mudaliar v. Sellattammal(1), Upendra Lal Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (2) and Kallu v. Faiyaz Ali Khan (3).

But there was no necessity of any kind here, even if we accept all the allegations of the plaintiffs. With the exception of the Rs. 48 borrowed for the purchase of the stamp for the deed that was executed, the whole of the Rs. 6,000 was borrowed for the expenses of the litigation in which Bahora Bai was attempting to get from Anjor Singh more of the estate than she was entitled to get. Most of it went in the suit in which she contested the validity of the award which was found to be valid, as it undoubtedly was. It is preposterous to talk of expenditure of that sort being necessary for the preservation of the estate.

The appeal will be dismissed and the appellants must pay all the costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, r. 20—Substituted service.

Under O. V, r. 20, C. P. C., the Court has power to order substituted service not only where it has reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way to avoid service but where it is satisfied that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way.

Appeal against a decision of the First Subordinate Judge, First Class, Nagpur, dated the 21st July 1925, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 88 of 1923.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and K. V. Deoskar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The vital question in this appeal is whether the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated 21st June 1921, for substituted service being effected on the appellant-defendant was a legal and proper one in the circumstances of the case. In this connection I desire to point out that under O. V, r. 20, C. P. C., the Court has power to order substituted service not only where it has reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way to avoid service but where it is satisfied that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the usual way. At the first hearing on 15th April 1921 defendant-appellant was not served. The endorsement on the connected summons by Gopinath at whose house he had been living was to the effect that appellant had been living at his house until two months before when he had left for an unknown destination. The summons for the next hearing of 21st June 1921 was to the effect that he had gone to Calcutta 15 days previously from the same house. In these circumstances there seems every reason to believe that in the meantime appellant had returned temporarily at least to the house in question and left without giving an address which would find him. It follows too that the reasonable inference is that the inmates of the house must have told him of the first notice and on the material before it then I think the Subordinate Judge was justified in passing his order for substituted service.

It does not follow, however, that there may not, all the same, on the allegations offered by appellant have been sufficient cause thereafter for holding that the application under O. IX, r. 13 should have succeeded if the appellant had established either ineffective substituted service or that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. For my own part I cannot see that the circumstances of this case bring it within the purview of the decision in Habibullah v. Karanju (1). Like the lower Court I am not satisfied that the appellant was continuously absent from Benares during the period in question as he alleges. The plaintiff had obtained his address from his cousin defendant No. 3; the endorsements on both summonses showed he had lived there and I find it utterly impossible to accept his story that he lived elsewhere in Benares himself.

Altogether apart from this all the reasonable inferences which arise from the facts set forth in paras. 10 and 11 of the order appealed against lead irresistibly to one inference only viz., that appellant must have notice of the ex parte decree passed on 18th February 1922 long before July 1923. Like the lower Court the case seems to me obviously one where the application has been made after a long lapse of time only with a view to harass the respondent-defendant No. 1 and I think the allegations of the appellant are unfounded in point of fact. The appeal is dismissed without notice to respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Discretion, nature of—Second appeal—Interference with refusal to exercise discretion.

Discretion vested in a Court under s. 5 of the Limitation Act is a judicial one and where a refusal of the Court to exercise this discretion is not based on appreciation and consideration of such facts as are relevant and the application of the right principles, the High Court is competent to interfere with it in second appeal.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, dated the 23rd October 1924, passed in Civil Appeal No. 328 of 1924, reversing that of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 2nd November of 1923.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellants.

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for determination is whether the learned Judge, who heard the second appeal preferred by the plaintiff, was justified in interfering with the decision of the District Judge declining to exercise his discretion under s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act and dismissing the appeal as barred by time. There can be no doubt that, when the lower Appellate Court has exercised its judicial discretion in a sound and reasonable manner and after due enquiry and careful consideration of the facts, the High Court as Court of Second Appeal cannot interfere with the exercise of that discretion, even though the High Court itself would have arrived at a different conclusion if it had heard the case as a Court of first appeal. The discretion, however, is a judicial one and the test in each case is whether the discretion has been exercised after appreciation and consideration of such facts as are relevant and after application of the right principles to those facts.

Now, it appears that the learned District Judge overlooked the fact that the value of the suit even after the amendment of the plaint, continued to be Rs. 100 and that no objection to that valuation was raised either by the defendant or by the Court of first instance. In these circumstances the plaintiff's Vakil, finding that the value of the suit as originally fixed for purposes of jurisdiction had not been challenged, preferred the appeal, to the Senior Subordinate Judge and these peculiar facts constituted a sufficient cause under s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act for extending the period of limitation.

The Court of Second Appeal was accordingly competent to interfere with the decision of the District Judge and to arrive at its own independent finding. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Application for revision against the judgment and decree of the Sub-Judge, Bara Banki, sitting as Judge, Small Cause Court, Bara Banki, dated the 23rd December 1925.

Mr. Motilal Saksena, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—I see no reason to issue notice in this matter. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court clearly applied his mind to the evidence and has arrived at a perfectly intelligent finding upon it. His judgment is in conformity with the first para. of O. XX, r. 4 for it does contain the points for determination and the decision thereupon. The learned Counsel has referred me to a decision of Mr. Wells, Additional Judicial Commissioner, passed some 21 years ago in Jai Lal v. Bakhtawar (1). There is nothing in that decision which is of an authoritative nature. Mr. Wells does not discuss in it the provisions of s. 203 of Act XIV of 1882 which correspond word for word with the present O. XX, r. 4, para. (1). Undoubtedly Mr. Wells had a perfect right to set aside the decision of the Judge in that particular Small Cause Court suit to which his mind was directed and order a fresh trial under the provisions of s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The superior Court has very wide powers under that section but I think it unfortunate that the decision has been printed as it cannot be considered in any way authoritative or of general value. Mr. Wells was of a certain opinion in that particular case. But it does not in the least follow that that opinion will assist Judges in deciding different cases. I reject this application.

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), ss. 14, 15—Sale by co-sharer—Notice—Estoppel.

Sections 14 and 15 of the Agra Pre-emption Act do not imply that unless a notice of a contemplated sale is given by the intending vendor to his co-sharers, they can in no case be estopped from claiming the right of pre-emption. If by taking an active part in the completion of the sale, and by his conduct in other ways, a co-sharer leads the vendee to believe that he (co-sharer) has waived his right of pre-emption, and no notice is, therefore, thought necessary to be issued to him, he would be estopped from claiming his right of pre-emption.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 25th August 1925.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The lower Appellate Court has found that when this sale-deed was executed the plaintiff was present there all along; that in fact he took an active part in obtaining the sale-deed, and that his own nephew who is a member of a joint Hindu family with him is one of the vendees under this sale-deed. It has further found it impossible to believe that when the sale was advertised in the whole village, and a large number of villagers took steps to raise large sums of money in order to acquire the property, the plaintiff remained uninformed as he professed to be. On these findings it has held that the plaintiff's claim for pre-emption is barred by estoppel. There can be no doubt that having regard to the findings arrived at, there is a clear estoppel against the plaintiff. Having himself taken an active part in procuring the sale-deed covering the property in dispute, he cannot now turn round and claim that he has a right of pre-emption left.

The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, argues that no question of estoppel can arise in this case inasmuch as no notice, as contemplated by s. 14 of the new Pre-emption Act, was given to the plaintiff. His contention is that under the new Act unless a notice has been issued a co-sharer's right of pre-emption can never be extinguished, no matter how much estoppel there may be against him. With this contention we are wholly unable to agree. Section 14 is only permissive which gives a co-sharer a power to give notice by registered post to all persons having a right of pre-emption.

In case such a notice is issued the right of such other co-sharers is extinguished.

But ss. 14 and 15 do not quite mean that in no other case can a co-sharer be estopped from claiming his right of pre-emption. If by his conduct he has led the vendee to believe that he has waived his right of pre-emption, then the estoppel would remain against him, even though under the circumstances it was not thought at all necessary to issue a notice to him.

The appeal has no force and is dismissed.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, dated the 31st January 1922.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. D. Bhalla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question to be decided in these two appeals is whethe a sonless Awan of the Tallagang Tahsil of Attock District has an unrestricted power of alienation of his ancestral property in favour of his daughter. The District Judge has decided the point in favour of the contesting reversioners and has reversed the finding of the Trial Court on this point. The authorities have been well-reviewed by the Trial Court and the chief reason given by the District Judge for coming to a different conclusion is that Lal Khan v. Nura (1), in his opinion, suggests that an Awan can only make an alienation of ancestral property with the consent of the reversioners, and it appears to him that the Riwaj-i-am compiled by Mr. Talbot when the Tallagang Tahsil was in the Jhelum District supports this view. So far as the Riwaj-i-am is concerned support can be found for both views. The concluding para. 105 to the effect that a sonless Awan has full power of alienation and in an earlier passage in answer to question No. 89 it is stated that an ancestral property cannot be given without the consent of the reversioners up to the 4th degree. We are of opinion that this Riwaj-i-am cannot be relied upon one way or the other, and on going through the authorities we find that the whole position has been most ably and carefully analysed in Amir Ali v. Baggo (2) by Johnstone, J. He quotes all the authorities up to that time and also the various instances which had occurred and his conclusion is in favour of an unrestricted right of alienation. So also the last authority, Rakhi v. Baza (3) which decided that an Awan of Tallagang had no power of making a Will disposing of his ancestral property recited as a well established proposition that a sonless Awan had unrestricted power to make such a gift.

Counsel for the respondent has attached great weight to Amir Ali v. Baggo (2) a Gujrat case in which a gift to a resident daughter was maintained and that to a non-resident daughter was set aside and he also relied on the general view taken in Yakub Khan v. Fateh Khan (4) and Lal Khan v. Nura (1). As against these authorities there appears to us a great weight of authority, in support of the contention of the appellant, and we need only quote Nur Ahmad v. Ghulam Husain (5), Devi Das v. Bhakra (6), Khuda Bakhsh v. Waham Ali (7) and Nur Khan v. Sarfaraz (8).

Mr. Mahesh Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The suit was brought by the plaintiff-appellant, who is the taluqdar of Ranipur, District Bahraich, for a mandatory injunction for removal of 27 trees and a thatched house standing on a plot of land situate in village Dharam Sarai, Pergana Fakharpur, District Bahraich, included in his taluqa. One Nand Kishore, father of defendant No. 1 was a tenant of the plaintiff in the said village. He was ejected in June 1916 and the land was then let out to another tenant. In a partition of the property of the family of which Nand Kishore was a member the land in suit had fallen into the share of the other defendants who were members of the same family, and the ejectment proceedings were taken against Nand Kishore because his name stood recorded in the village papers as a tenant of the land held by the family. After the ejectment the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title got the trees that existed on the cultivatory holding cut down except the 27 trees now in suit which admittedly were allowed to remain in possession of Nand Kishore and his family. Out of these 27 trees, 26 trees, had been planted by Nand Kishore and the remaining one was an aunla tree, self-grown and not planted. The plaintiff claimed that these trees should be removed and that the house in the village in which the defendants lived should be demolished. It had been alleged in the plaint that the trees in suit were only recently planted by the defendants and that the house in dispute was also recently built by them.

The defence was to the effect that the trees and the house in suit were old ones and had been in existence for more than 20 years, and that the suit of the plaintiff was, therefore, barred by limitation.

The learned Munsif of Kaisarganj, District Bahraich, who tried the suit found in favour of the defendants and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff carried the matter further in appeal to the learned First Subordinate Judge of Bahraich, who heard the appeal and by an exhaustive and well-reasoned judgment upheld the decision of the Trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's appeal.

The plaintiff has now come up to this Court in second appeal and the contentions raised on his behalf are to the effect (1) that the plaintiff should be allowed to eject the defendants from the house occupied by them on the ground that the said house was appurtenant to their tenancy and that they had now no right to retain the site of the said house against the wishes of the landlord when they had ceased to be tenants in the village, and (2) that the defendant has no right to retain the trees because they were allowed to remain in their possession by the plaintiff as a matter of mere favour which the plaintiff was not now willing to extend to them.

In deciding the appeal I should state clearly what are the findings of fact which have been arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. Regarding the house in suit it has been found that it was built some 20 years ago with the tacit permission of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title. As to the grove the finding is to the effect that it had been planted by Nand Kishore about the same time when the house was built by him, viz., 20 or 25 years ago. The learned Subordinate Judge has also found that in the year 1916 when Nand Kishore was ejected from his cultivatory holding the then proprietor of the village got about a hundred trees cut down which had been planted by said tenant on his cultivatory holding but had allowed the present trees to stand and the defendants were given a right to enjoy the shade and fruits.

It, therefore, appears to me to be clear on the above evidence that the plaintiff has got no right to dispossess the defendants of the 27 trees which are now in dispute and which were allowed to remain in their possession. The ordinary presumption which would attach to such an action on the part of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title was that the defendants were allowed to enjoy the produce of the trees as long as they existed. The plaintiff, therefore, cannot now be allowed to turn round and say that he has withdrawn the permission originally granted and has thus became entitled to eject the defendants from those trees. In my opinion, therefore, the Courts below were right in holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to get possession of the trees in suit.

As to the house in suit it is clear that the defendants cannot be ejected from it as long as any interest is retained by them in the village. It is evident that the defendants still possess an interest in the village inasmuch as they are entitled to retain possession of the trees in suit, and under those circumstances the plaintiff is not entitled to eject the defendants from the site of their house in the abadi of the village. This principle was clearly laid down by a Bench of the late Court of Judicial Commissioner Oudh in the leading case on the subject reported as Ram Harakh v. Ambika Datt Ram (1) decided by Lindsay, J. C, and Daniels, A. J. C. The plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to get a decree for ejectment with regard to the site of the house also.

In my opinion, therefore, the decree passed by the two Courts below was perfectly correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Transfer by tenant—Acceptance of transferee as tenant.

A landlord cannot be taken to have accepted a transferee from his tenant as his own tenant, merely because he brings a suit for possession against the transferee, which suit is not proceeded with and comes to nothing.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 26th June 1923, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court, Kandi, dated the 6th May 1922.

Babu Santimoy Majumdar, for the Appellants.

Babu Durga Charan Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent which has been decreed by both the Courts below.

The only point argued is that the tenants defendants having transferred their holding and the landlords having presented a plaint previously for possession of the land as against the transferee is precluded from suing the defendants for the rent of the land. The suit of the landlords as against the transferee was not proceeded with and it came to nothing. It is contended that the presentation of the plaint ought to be taken as acceptance of the abandonment of the holding by the recorded tenants, that is, the defendants in the suit. That can hardly be accepted as a correct proposition of law. The landlord is not bound to accept any person as a tenant other than his recorded tenant and he is entitled to bring a suit for rent and obtain a decree as against the recorded tenant.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 19 (f), 20—Concealment, meaning of—Carrying arms in gunny bag—Intention.

Each case of concealment of arms must be decided on its own merits.

For a conviction to fall under s. 20, Arms Act, there must be some special indication of an intention that the possession of arms was being concealed from a public servant or from a Railway Official. Where the arms are carried through a place where it is not anticipated that a public servant would be met, the intention to conceal is not easy to infer. Consequently when a person carried arms wrapped up in a gunny bag on a horse back to an appointed place for sale where he did not expect any public servant to meet, he could not be said to have had an intention to conceal. [p. 402, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 15th August 1925.

Mr. Muhammad Rafi, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Chet Singh has been convicted under s. 20 of the Arms Act for being in unlawful possession of two revolvers and ten loaded cartridges in such a manner as to indicate an intention that his possession of them might not be known to any public servant. He has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment together with a fine of Rs. 500 and he has appealed.

The case on the merits was not seriously argued and it has been established beyond dispute that he had these articles in his possession. In fact, a trap was laid for him into which he fell. Karam Singh, lambardar, informed the Police that the appellant was in the habit of selling revolvers and opium and the Sub-Inspector of Police asked him to let him know whenever he had any to sell. Accordingly the lambardar in question settled with the appellant that he would bring some persons to buy revolvers from the appellant at a particular place and time. The appellant went to this place on horse-back, carrying in front of him a gunny bag in which were the revolvers and cartridges in question together with 8¼ seers of Kabul opium. He was seized as they were settling the price. There is not the slightest doubt that he had these two revolvers and ten cartridges and he was properly convicted and the question only remains as to whether the conviction should have been under s. 19 (f) or s. 20 of the Arms Act.

It was held by a Single Judge of this Court in Ibrahim v. Emperor (1), that s. 20 of the Arms Act applied only to cases where the import or export of arms was attempted. This decision was based on Crown v. Azu (2) and Ahmed Hossein v. Queen-Empress (3). In Ahmed Hossein v. Queen-Empress (3), however, what had happened was that the Police searched the appellant's house and found some arms in it. It was held that in a case such as that s. 20 did not apply. It was not held that that section only applied to the import and export of arms. Crown v. Azu (2) was a similar case. There when the accused's house was searched certain fire-arms were found under a heap of straw where they were concealed in order that visitors should not see them. It was held that this was not a concealment with the intention specified in s. 20. The following words might be quoted:—"The possession was no doubt furtive, but it is not every act of furtive possession that is penal under the first paragraph of s. 20. The possession must be furtive or against public servants, railway servants or public carriers, and such cases would generally occur where arms were being illicitly imported or transported. It is probable that the accused concealed the fire-arms in order that visitors to his house should not see them and give information against him, but such a concealment would not fall under the first part of s. 20. There is no reason to suppose that the accused anticipated a search of his house by a public-servant, and if he had, he would probably have buried the fire-arms, I, therefore, think that the arms were not concealed in such a manner as to indicate the intention stated in the first part of s. 20." These words do not mean that a conviction under s. 20 can only be obtained in cases of import or export of arms. What was said was that such convictions would generally occur where arms were illicitly imported or transported, that is, taken from place to place, as it would usually be on such occasions that the person in possession of them would attempt to conceal them from a public servant or a Railway employee, etc.

In Khem Singh v. Emperor (4) the view taken in Ibrahim v. Emperor (1) was not followed and it was held that each case of concealment of arms must be decided on its own facts, that is as to whether it fell under s. 19 or s. 20 of the Arms Act and that the circumstances in that case showed that the concealment was made so that the possession of the weapons should not be known to the Police and the offence, therefore, fell under s. 20. Faqiria v Emperor (5) is another case of this High Court where the concealment of a chhavi was held to fall under s. 20 of the Arms Act and the principle laid down in Khem Singh v. Emperor (4) was again followed in Sher Ali v. Emperor (6). The head-note* of Channan Singh v. Emperor (7) is to the effect that something more than an ordinary concealment should be established in order to bring the illegal possession of arms within the meaning of s. 20 of the Arms Act. It also goes on to add that s. 20 applies only to cases where the import or export of arms is attempted. It would appear, however, from the body of the judgment that it was not necessary for the decision of the case to add what is given in the second part of the head-note.

In my judgment the general principle laid down in Khem Singh v. Emperor (4) which was decided by a Division Bench of this Court, is correct, namely, that each case of concealment of arms must be decided on its own facts as to whether it falls under s. 19 or s. 20 of the Arms Act. If, however, arms were merely concealed in a house, which, it could not be anticipated, the Police would come and search, s. 20 would not apply. For a conviction to fall under s. 20 there must be some special indication of an intention that the possession of the arms was being concealed from a public servant or from a Railway Official. For example, if arms were carried hidden on a railway journey this special intention might be easy to infer. The same would be the case if arms were carried concealed through a city where numerous Constables were posted or if they were carried past or through a Police Station. It would not be so easy to infer this intention if the arms were carried concealed in the open country where it was not anticipated that any public servant would be met, though even in such cases it might be possible to arrive at a finding that the intention was to conceal them from the Police. In fact the words already quoted from Crown v. Azu (2) and the principle laid down in Khem Singh v. Emperor (4) give the correct method of discriminating as to what section the offence does fall under.

In the case now before me it is obvious that it cannot be inferred that the appellant was carrying the arms in question so as to conceal them from the Police. He did not anticipate meeting the Police. He was merely carrying them in a convenient manner to the place arranged for their sale. He wrapped the opium, cartridges and two revolvers in a gunny bag and carried them to that spot in front of him on his horse. It was scarcely possible for him to have carried them exposed. This case, therefore, clearly falls under s. 19 (f) of the Arms Act.

I accordingly accept the appeal and alter the conviction to one under s. 19 (f), Arms Act. As this is a case of trafficking in arms, I sentence the appellant to the full sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment, together with a fine of Rs. 250 and in default of its payment, to three months' further rigorous imprisonment.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 118, 406, 417—Magistrate directing security to be furnished for good behaviour—Sessions Judge ordering accused to be discharged—Appeal by Local Government to High Court, whether maintainable—High Court's power to interfere on revision.

The order of a Sessions Judge passed on appeal under s. 406, Cr. P. C., discharging an accused ordered by a Magistrate under s. 118, Cr. P. C., to furnish security for good behaviour under s. 110, Cr. P. C., cannot be considered to be an original or an appellate order of acquittal within the meaning of s. 417 of the Cr. P. C., so as to give the Local Government a right of appeal to the High Court.

The Local Government has, however, a right to approach the High Court in revision and where the evidence against the accused is sufficient to justify his being bound over to be of good behaviour, it is open to the High Court to set aside the order of discharge and direct the accused to furnish security.

Application for revision against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Bahraich, dated the 7th December 1925, setting aside that of the Magistrate, First Class, Bahraich, dated the 7th November 1925.

Mr. G. H. Thomas, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances are these. Ram Gulam and Samai Din were called upon by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate under the provisions of s. 110 of the Cr. P. C. to show cause why they should not find security to be of good behaviour for one year on the ground that they were habitual thieves. The Magistrate after inquiry passed an order under s. 118 of the Cr. P. C. directing them to find certain security. They appealed to the learned Sessions Judge under the provisions of s. 406 Cr. P. C. He was not satisfied with the evidence against them to justify their being bound over to be of good behaviour and directed them to be discharged. Against this order the Local Government has filed Criminal Appeals Nos. 59 and 60 of 1926, and, in the alternative, Criminal Revisions Nos. 18 and 19 of 1926. We do not consider that the order of the learned Sessions Judge can be considered to be an original or an appellate order of acquittal within the meaning of s. 417 of the Cr. P. C., so no appeal lies, but we are of opinion that the Local Government has a right to approach us in revision. We base this opinion upon the reasoning contained in Queen Empress v. Mutsaddi Lal (1), King-Emperor v. Fyaz-ud-din (2) and Kharga v. Emperor (3). In revision we have power to reverse those orders.

Upon examination of the merits we have no doubt as to the fact that the evidence against these two persons was sufficient to justify their being bound over to be of good behaviour and we accordingly set aside the order of the learned Judge and restore the order of the Magistrate which directs these two men Ram Gulam and Samai Din to execute each a bond to be of good behaviour for one year, each in his personal recognizance for Rs. 200 with two sureties to each bond, each for Rs. 200, such sureties to be sufficient in the opinion of the Sub-Divisional Officer who passed the order or his successor. In default of finding such sureties each person will be rigorously imprisoned for one year.

Sessions Judge of Mangalore v. Malinga, 31 M. 40; 3 M. L. T. 25; 7 Cr. L. J. 29, followed.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 29th April 1925.

Mr. Abdul Razak, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the morning of the 3rd February, 1925, the corpse of a newly born child with a strip of cloth tied round its neck was found in the bath room of a mosque called Pir Gauhar Sultan Masjid, situate outside the Delhi Gate of the Multan City. The Civil Surgeon, who conducted the post mortem examination, deposes that the child had been born alive and that death was due to asphyxia caused by strangulation. The Sessions Judge of Multan has convicted the appellant Musammat Ghulam Jannat of the murder of the child, and has sentenced her under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, to transportation for life.

Now, the evidence of Miss Shaw, who medically examined Musammat Ghulam Jannat, leaves no doubt that the latter had recently given birth to a child; but the question for determination is whether she committed the murder. Musammat Ghulam Jannat lives in a small hamlet about 3 or 4 miles from the town of Multan, and there is ample evidence on the record that, on the afternoon of the 2nd of February, 1925, the day before the date of the discovery of the corpse in the bath room, she came to Multan accompanied by her mother Musammat Aishan; and that she was seen going towards the mosque. There is also reliable evidence to the effect that on the the 8th February the prisoner produced from a trunk inside her house a chaddar from one edge of which a small strip had been torn off, and the strip of cloth found tied round the neck of the child exactly fits that chaddar. Moreover, in the statement made by her on the 11th February, 1925, before the Committing Magistrate, she admitted that she had given birth to a child in the bath room of the mosque, and that after tearing off strip of cloth from her chaddar she had tied it round the neck of the child in order to stop its cries and thereby to prevent the discovery of the birth. It appears that the Magistrate, who recorded the statement, was subsequently transferred; and that the case was eventually committed to the Court of Session by his successor. In view, however, of s. 350, Cr. P. C., we consider that the statement recorded on the 11th February has been rightly admitted in evidence under s 287, Cr. P. C. [vide Sessions Judge of Mangalore v. Malinga (1)]

It appears that Musammat Ghulam Jannat, who is a young girl of 18 years of age, is married to a boy who is only about 13 years old; and that she contracted an intimacy with one Shahu and became pregnant. There can be little doubt that, when she suddenly gave birth to an illegitimate child in the town of Multan, she was anxious to conceal her shame, and she accordingly tied a strip of cloth round the neck of the child and strangled it.

The confession made by the prisoner before the Committing Magistrate, corroborated as it is by the circumstantial evidence described above, leaves no doubt that she killed the child. She has, therefore, been rightly convicted of murder, and transportation for life is the minimum punishment prescribed by law for the offence of murder We accordingly confirm the conviction and dismiss the appeal.

While we are unable to reduce the sentence inflicted by the Sessions Judge, we consider that this is a fit case in which, in view of the mitigating circumstances, the Local Government should exercise the powers vested in it by s. 401 and 402, Cr. P. C. We accordingly direct that the proceedings be forwarded to the Local Government with a copy of our judgment and our recommendation that the sentence of transportation for life may be commuted to one of rigorous imprisonment for three years.

Even if the action of a Police Officer in arresting a person is wholly illegal, yet the person arrested or the persons who assist the arrested person are not entitled to use more force than is necessary for protection against illegal arrest. [p. 405, col. 2.]

A Police Officer may first arrest any person as is mentioned in s. 55 of the Cr. P. C., and then make up his mind whether to proceed against him for some substantive offence or to put him before a Magistrate in order that proceedings under Ch. VIII may be taken against him. [p. 406, col. 1.]

If it is intended that a Police Officer should arrest a man with a view of taking proceedings under s. 110, Cr. P. Mr. Harchandrai Vishondas, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case two Constables Pandhi Khan and Mahomed Sidik went to the Bazar of Sakrand and arrested accused No. 2 Sukholosing. The allegation against the accused is that on the arrest of Sukholosing, accused No. 1 who is the brother of Sukholosing and accused No. 3 came and made an assault upon the two Constables and released accused No. 2. Accused No. 2 thereupon joined in the assault. One of the Constables Mahomed Sidik became unconscious and the other Constable Pandhi Khan effected his escape. On these facts the accused have been challaned for offences punishable under ss. 332, 333 and 225 (b), Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment totalling in all to rigorous imprisonment for three years and a fine of Rs. 500.

There seems very little doubt as to the facts. The Constables have given evidence and there seems no reason why they should tell a wholly untrue story. It is possible that they may have laid excessive stress upon the acts of one or more of the accused but it is not at all probable that they would unnecessarily introduce innocent people and intentionally absolve guilty people. [illegible] is also considerable corroborative evidence by outside witnesses and there seems very little reason to suppose that the facts are not substantially as found by the Sessions Court. The accused are all Sikhs and they seem to be unpopular in the village which might no doubt be a reason for exaggerating matters, against them. But, on the other hand, this fact gives a reasonable explanation why no one interfered to assist the Police. On the whole, therefore, we think, as far as the facts go, the case is made out against the accused. And the only question which remains is the legal question.

It need hardly be said that the Court would be reluctant to support the action of a Police-Officer who without any justification should walk into a man's shop and arrest him fasten him up with a rope and proceed to march him through the Bazar and the Court will not look with great severity on the action of any person who attempts to protect himself from such an illegal invasion of his liberty or on the action of any person taken to assist the arrested person in asserting his rights. But even so, it must be admitted that the defence made by the unlawfully arrested person or the persons who assist the unlawfully arrested person must not be excessive, so that even if the action of the Police Constables is wholly illegal yet the person arrested or the persons who assist the arrested person are not entitled to use more force than is necessary for protection against illegal arrest. Here very excessive force was used.

But we are not convinced that the arrest was illegal. The two Constables were acting under a so-called warrant or rather written instructions or orders issued by the Sub-Inspector of Mehrapur. No doubt this written instruction is informal because the powers given to the Sub-Inspectors are those conferred by ss. 55 and 56 and the Sub-Inspector may arrest persons who fall under certain categories given in s. 55. If he wishes any other Police Constable to arrest such person he must specify the cause for which the arrest is to be made that is to say he must state within which category as given in s. 55 the supposed offender falls.

In the present case the order merely recites that the person to be arrested that is to say the second accused was liable under s. 110 (d) and (e) of the Cr. P. C. It is clear that the person who can be dealt with under cls. (d) and (e) of s. 110 is in most cases a person who would fall within one of the categories given in s. 55. But that fact does not make it the less desirable that the orders of the Legislature should be strictly obeyed. If it is intended that the Police Officer should arrest a man with a view of taking proceedings under s. 110 it is strictly and specially necessary that he should specify one of the clauses given in s. 55, although it may be for the cause so stated that he intends to proceed under s. 110, Cr. P. C. It is possible, therefore, that the present warrant may be informal, but it is not illegal and the Constables who were attempting to execute it were no doubt acting in perfect good faith. It would seem, therefore, that the accused had not even that limited right of self-defence, they would have had, had the officers been acting mala fide.

Now an attempt was made to convince us that in no case can an officer who intends to proceed against a man under s. 110 cause him to be arrested. But that is not the law and it obviously, if it were the law, would in many cases render proceedings under Ch. VIII useless. If the Police or the Magistrates who are contemplating taking proceedings under the said Chapter against desperate and dangerous characters, or against persons who are taking precautions for concealing their presence with a view of committing an offence are to allow the suspects to remain free until all the formalities of Ch. VIII have been fulfilled and a regular committal order passed against such persons, it would oftentime happen that the offenders would abscond and the proceedings would be wholly infructuous. The Police can arrest a suspected criminal and then proceed against him either for substantive offence or under Ch. VIII and it is for that reason that s. 114, Cr. P. C. contemplates the serving of notice on the suspect while in custody.

It is, we conceive, to be the duty of the Police Officer who is aware that any such person as is mentioned in s. 55 is within the limits of his jurisdiction to arrest him or cause him to be arrested. He then may make up his mind whether to proceed against him for some substantive offence or to put him before a Magistrate in order that proceedings under Ch. VIII may be taken. In short, our opinion is that the mere fact that there is an intention to act under Ch. VIII does not grant to the accused persons immunity from preliminary arrest. There is thus no illegality in the proceedings of the Police and it does not seem they can be legally resisted.

The only question, therefore, is as to the sentence. And we are of the opinion, for the reasons given by the Sessions Judge, we should not interfere.

The result is, that we dismiss these appeals.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, at Sheikhupura, dated the 22nd June 1923.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-din, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ram Lal, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the afternoon of the 9th March, 1923, one Sazawar, an arain of the village Nawan Kot in the District of Sheikhupura, was subjected to a merciless assault, in the course of which he sustained no less than 34 injuries. To these injuries the victim succumbed within three or four hours. Two persons, namely, Sheru and Gama, have been found guilty of the murder of Sazawar; and have been sentenced under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, to the penalty of transportation for life each. Th[illegible] prisoners have preferred a joint ap[illegible] against their conviction, and we have [illegible] before us an application by the Local [illegible]ernment praying for an enhancement of the sentences imposed upon them.

The evidence for the prosecution le[illegible] no doubt that one Musammat Rakhi, [illegible] widow of Maula, a relative of the prisoners, [illegible] contracted a liaison with Shahab Din, the sister's son of the deceased Sazawar. This intrigue caused resentment to Gama and Sheru, with the result that the lovers left the village and migrated to Malakpur where they began to live as husband and wife. The convicts did not, however, like the marriage and were seeking an opportunity to cause injury to Shahab Din and his wife. It is beyond dispute that on the 27th February, 1923, Musammat Rakhi made an application under s 107, Cr. P. C., to a Magistrate, alleging that Gama, Sheru and seven other persons named therein were inimically disposed towards her and her husband and intended to assault them, and praying that they should be called upon to furnish security to keep the peace. It is alleged on behalf of the prosecution that the convicts could not find any opportunity to cause harm to Shahab Din or his wife, and that they accordingly decided to assault Sazawar who was not only the maternal uncle of Shahab Din but had also adopted him as his son.

On the day in question a fair was held at a well situate outside the village Nawan Kot, and was attended by a party of pilgrims and the inhabitants of the village including the prisoners, Sheru and Gama. It appears that these two persons had taken liquor and that, in a spirit of bravado, they declared that they were going to the deceased's field in order to kill him. The witness Labh Singh, who overheard them, galloped off on a mare to Sazawar's field, and warned him of the danger. Thereupon Sazawar left the field and ran off towards the west, while his companion Ranjha, who was working with him in the field, went off in another direction. Shortly afterwards, the culprits arrived and, finding Sazawar absent, they followed him to another field where he had concealed himself, attacked him with a dang and a hatchet, and inflicted upon him a large number of injuries. Upon hearing the outcry of the victim his cousin Alyas, who was cultivating his land at a short distance, hastened to the spot, and saw both the prisoners beating his relative. He tried to intervene but was himself threatened and was rescued by Labh Singh.

This, in brief, is the story for the prosecution and it is fully established by the evidence of a large number of witnesses. Two of them, namely, Alyas and Barkat, saw the convicts beating the deceased, and there is no reason to suppose that they are not telling the truth Their story receives corroboration from the evidence of Ranjha who saw both the prisoners coming to the field where he was working with the deceased. We have also the testimony of Labh Singh who states that he hastened to the scene on hearing the outcry of Alyas and found Sazawar lying injured on the ground and the two accused grappling with Alyas. It is true that Labh Singh's name was not mentioned in the First Information Report which was recorded by Alyas on that very day; but both the prisoners admit that not only Labh Singh but also Alyas and Barkat were present in the field in which the deceased was lying injured. There can, therefore, be no doubt as to the presence of these witnesses at or near the scene of the occurrence, and we are inclined to think that Labh Singh, when he says that he did not see the actual assault, is trying to favour the prisoners. Be that as it may, there is ample evidence on the record that both of them inflicted upon the deceased a large number of injuries which resulted in his death a few hours afterwards.

The defence put forward by the prisoners does not require any elaborate discussion. They try to make out that the deceased was beaten by some Sikhs belonging to a village called Mangawala, but the learned Vakil for the appellants has not invited our attention to the evidence produced in support of this version. Indeed, he admits that he does not wish to rely upon that evidence, and he has contended himself with criticising the evidence produced by the prosecution. The Assessors and the learned Sessions Judge have concurred in declaring the accused to be guilty, and, after examining the entire material placed before us, we have no hesitation in endorsing that conclusion.

As regards the application for enhancement, we find that the learned Sessions Judge holds that the culprits went to the field of the deceased with "the deliberate purpose of striking down Sazawar," but he has refrained from inflicting the death penalty on the sole ground that the offenders were, at the time of the assault, under the influence of drink. It may be conceded that both the prisoners had taken liquor, but there is no evidence to show that they were in a state of intoxication. Indeed, the evidence leaves no doubt that before they proceeded to the scene of the incident, they had declared their intention of assaulting the deceased, and that they then walked about a mile, pursued their victim, and inflicted upon him a large number of blows but were careful enough not to deal a deadly blow on the head or any other vital part of the body. The attack was a premeditated one, and we are not prepared to hold that the mere fact that they had taken some liquor should be regarded as a sufficient reason for not imposing the penalty of death. As held by the House of Lords in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard (1), evidence of drunkenness falling short of a proved incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime, and merely establishing that his mind was affected by drink, so that he more readily gave way to some violent passion, does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his acts. The learned Sessions Judge has relied upon the judgment in Pal Singh v. Emperor (2), but we find that there were peculiar circumstances in that case which led the Court to commute the sentence of death to one of transportation for life. It appears that the convict had no motive to cause the death of his victim and that the attack was a sudden one. These and other circumstances influenced the Court in holding that there was no adequate ground for making a distinction in the matter of punishment between the accused who had been sentenced to death and his comrade who had been sentenced only to transportation for life. In the case before us we are clearly opinion that both the prisoners primed themselves with drink in order to wreak their vengence upon their enemy and beat him mercilessly, and we consider that they deserve the maximum punishment provided by law. We accordingly enhance the sentence in the case of each of the convicts to one of death.

In every case, whether summons or warrant one, there must be an examination of the accused, under s. 342 of the Cr. P. C. the provisions of which are mandatory.

The words "if any" in cl. (g) of s. 263 of the Cr. P. C., do not leave the Magistrate any discretion as the words are intended merely to cover cases in which owing to the admission or plea of the accused or the weakness of the prosecution evidence, the accused can either be convicted on his own plea or can be acquitted on the evidence without an examination of the accused.

Application for revision of an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Kamptee, dated the 5th November 1925, in Criminal Case No. 84 of 1925.

Mr. V. N. Herlekar, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—The applicants Bhagwan and Pandurang have been convicted of an offence under s. 323, Indian Penal Code, by the First Class Magistrate, Kamptee, and fined Rs. 20 each in a summary trial.

Admittedly, the Magistrate did not record any examination of either applicant as an accused beyond taking their plea of not guilty, and it is urged on behalf of applicants that this omission is a fatal flaw in the trial: cf Mahomed Hossein v. Emperor (1). A great many Magistrates seem to be under the impression that the presence of the words "if any" in cl (g) of s. 263, Cr. P. C., leaves them a discretion, whether or not to examine the accused, but this is not so: there must be an examination, at least in every warrant case. Clearly the words "if any" occur in the provision referred to, in order merely to cover those cases in which owing to the admission or plea of the accused, or the weakness of the prosecution evidence, the accused can either be convicted on his own plea, or can be acquitted on the evidence, without an examination under s. 342 idem, the provisions of which are mandatory. I am aware of the decision in Ponnusami Odayar v. Ramasamy Thathan (2) but, with all deference, I am unable to agree that s. 342 does not apply to summons cases. The mere fact that this provision occurs in a Chapter dealing with trials generally seems to me to conclude this point and the mere use therein of the phrase "before the accused is called for his defence," a phraseology perhaps primarily more suited to a stage in a warrant rather than a summons case, is insufficient, in my opinion, to limit the applicability of sub-section (1) of s. 342 to warrant cases only. The other argument—which may be termed the utilitarian one—that inconvenience may be caused in summary trial by enforcing the application of s. 342 in summary trials, seems to me beside the point: that may be a good reason for amending the law but, as the Statute stands, I am of opinion that the objection taken in the present revision is a valid one and must succeed: cf. Local Government v. Maria (3).

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250—Complaint, false and vexatious or frivolous—Compensation.

Where there are depositions of some witnesses and a Zaildar's report to support a complaint without any rebuttal on the part of the accused, the complaint cannot be said to be false and vexatious or frivolous.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Karnal, with his No. 542-J of 16th December 1925.

FACTS.—Sanwalya had filed a complaint under s. 500, Indian Penal Code, against nine persons. The Magistrate sent the case to the Zaildar for preliminary inquiry and the Zaildar reported that the complaint was well founded and Kanhaya and Baru had really used ill language to the complainant, Kanhaya was not found. The Magistrate tried Baru alone and being not satisfied of the truth of the complaint discharged Baru and directed Sanwalya to pay Rs. 50 as compensation to Baru under s. 250 of the Cr P. C. Against this order the complainant has appealed to this Court. A reference to cl. (3) of s. 250 shows, however, that as the amount of compensation fixed by the Magistrate (of the First Class) is only Rs. 50, the order is not appealable. Appellants' Counsel prays that the appeal may be treated as an application for revision and I have acceded to this request.

GROUNDS.—A perusal of the evidence recorded by the Magistrate in the case shows that the order about the payment of compensation is not right. Complainant produced three witnesses in all. One of them does not know whether Baru was present in the panchayat or not but the remaining two state he was there and treated the complainant in an insulting manner. Even Baru accused admits that there was a panchayat who outcasted Sanwalya and fined him Rs. 100 but he says that he was not present in the panchayat though his brother was. In the presence of this evidence and the absence of all rebuttal by the accused, and in presence of the Zaildar's report supporting the complaint it is impossible to hold that the complaint was false and vexatious or frivolous. The order of payment of compensation was, therefore, not justified. The case is submitted to the High Court with a recommendation that the order may be set aside.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—For the reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge I set aside the order of the Magistrate directing the payment of compensation to the accused.

Excise cases—Sentence—Imprisonment desirable—Government Circulars—Reference by Magistrates—Practice.

In the case of the crimes such as illicit traffic in drugs where the offender may make great profits by breach of the law the payment of the fine is apt to be considered merely in the nature of a tax which is no deterrent at all.

Where there have been several cases when persons living on the border-land of foreign territory have imported excisable articles in British territory, it is desirable that the Courts should as far as possible inflict a substantive sentence of imprisonment to prevent the recurrence of such crimes.

Per Tyebji, A. J. C.—The object of Government in issuing Circulars is to bring to the notice of the Magistrates certain circumstances mentioned therein which when relied upon must be openly stated in Court and the parties allowed to comment thereon.

Nothing can be more deleterious to the administration of criminal justice than a notion that the Magistrate conceives himself to be under orders to pass any particular kind of sentence or that any considerations affect his decision but such as are openly stated in Court and are subject to comment by the prosecution and the defence.

Reference made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Nawabshah.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.—This is a Reference by the District Magistrate, Nawabshah, asking for the enhancement of the sentence of one Mastali, a fakir, who has been convicted of having illicitly imported and possessed foreign bhang weighing one seer and $36\frac{1}{2}$ tolas and charas weighing $2\frac{1}{8}$ totas. It is said that he lives on the border of the Khairpur State and has surreptitiously brought this quantity from that State. Its value is Rs. 14 in British territory though in Khairpur territory it is considerably less. He has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25 only.

There can be no doubt that the circumstances of this case required sufficiently deterent sentence to prevent these fakirs living on the border land going to Khairpur territory and importing therefrom excisable articles in British territory. There have been several cases of this kind and it is desirable that in such cases as far as possible substantive sentence of imprisonment should be inflicted to prevent their recurrence.

We accordingly exchange the sentence to one of ten days' rigorous imprisonment and order that the fine of Rs. 25 if paid, be refunded to the accused.

Tyebji, A. J. C.—I agree.

The learned Magistrate has referred to the Circular No. 8325B, dated 13th July 1925 from the Government as being "Orders laying down that the punishment in such excise cases should be deterrent", in such a context as leaves little doubt in my mind that he has failed entirely to appreciate the purport of the Circular. The Government may well take exception to his version. The object of the Circular is to bring to the notice of Magistrates certain circumstances, viz., that the sentences in respect of illicit traffic in intoxicating drugs have in the past had a tendency to be so light, or to be of such a nature, as to fail to act as deterrents against this class of crimes; and that in addition to the normal desire of Government to prevent all crime, there are international obligations undertaken by the Government to suppress such traffic. These circumstances deserve careful consideration by the Magistrates in view of the particular facts of the case under trial. Nothing, on the other hand, can be more deleterious to the administration of criminal justice than a notion that the Magistrate conceives himself to be under orders to pass any kind of sentence except such as the criminal law requires or that any considerations affect his decision but such as are openly stated in Court and are subject to comment by the prosecution and the defence.

The most unexceptionable course would be for the prosecution to mention such and similar circumstances in open Court before the Magistrate has pronounced sentence, and for the Magistrates to hear the Pleaders if there is anything to be urged either on behalf of or against the accused, and in view of all the facts to impose a sentence that serves the object of the administration of criminal justice. That object, it should hardly be necessary to state, is not to be vindictive but to deter the individual who is being tried from committing crimes and to prevent similar crimes from being committed in future. It is obvious that to serve this object the Magistrate must bring his mind to bear on the particular circumstances of each case together with the surrounding facts and conditions. In the case of the crimes such as illicit traffic in drugs where the offender may make great profits by breach of the law the payment of the fine is apt to be considered merely in the nature of a tax which is no deterrent at all.

On a consideration of the facts of this case the proper punishment appears to be not a fine of Rs. 25 (which it is stated to us has been paid by the accused and should, in our opinion, be refunded to the accused), but a sentence of ten days' rigorous imprisonment. If the accused has been habitually carrying on an illicit traffic, then the fine would be no punishment to him. If he has not been doing so, then the fine would be a severer penalty than imprisonment. The fine would, in either case, be either unnecessarily severe or ineffectually light. There may, of course, be other cases where both a fine and imprisonment may be imposed or even a fine alone may be the appropriate sentence, though for the reasons I have stated a fine by itself seems to me on general grounds to be ordinarily less suitable.

P. B. A. Answered accordingly.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), ss. 249, 250, 338, Sch. V, cl. (q)—Factory, construction of, permitted by Council—Annual license, failure to take out—Prosecution—Machinery under Sch. V (q), what is.

Where permission has been granted by a Municipal Council under s. 250 of the Madras District Municipalities Act for the construction and establishment of a factory to work a rice hulling machine, annual license is not necessary to be taken from the Chairman under s. 249 and where a person uses a 22 horse power gas engine in the factory without taking such license, he is not liable to be prosecuted under s. 338 of the Act.

The Madras District Municipalities Act clearly intends to draw a distinction between what is described as "industries" and 'factories'. The former are dealt with in s. 249 and the latter in s. 250.

The machinery referred to in Sch. V of the Act is machinery of a kind that is propelled by means other than those described in s. 250 which contemplates some sort of mechanical motive power and must be such as is likely to be dangerous to human life, health or property, the object of the clause being to bring under control the storing, manufacturing, and using of things which are dangerous to human life, health or property.

The last clause in Sch. V, cl. (q), namely, "which is likely to be dangerous to human life or health or property" governs that part of cl. (q) which begins with the words "using for any industrial purposes" and not the whole of cl. (q).

ORDER.

Waller, J.—This petition has been filed by the Municipal Council of Madura against the decision of the Sub-Magistrate of Madura Town. Respondent was charged under ss 249 and 338 of the Madras District Municipalities Act with having failed to take out a license for using a 22 horse power gas engine to work a rice hulling machine. The Sub-Magistrate refused to convict. He found that the case was governed by s. 250 and not by s. 249 of the Act. He was further of opinion that the machinery used for rice hulling was not the kind of machinery contemplated by Sch. V (q).

It is argued on behalf of the Municipal Council that all that is required by s. 250 is permission for the original construction or establishment of a factory and that for the actual working of the factory an annual license is necessary under s. 249. I agree with the Sub-Magistrate that the argument is unsound. The Act clearly intends to draw a distinction between what is described as "industries" and "factories" The former are dealt with in s. 249 and the latter in s. 250. The industries included in s. 249 and Sch. V are licensed by the Chairman subject to the control of the Council. The power factories referred to in s. 250 are regulated by the Council itself subject to the orders of the Governor in Council. It would, I think, be completely anomalous to hold that, after the Council had granted permission for the erection of a machanical power factory, it is open to the Chairman to refuse a license for its being worked or to impose impracticable conditions on its working.

I think that the Magistrate was right in holding that a license under s. 249 of the Act was not necessary in this case. I am also of opinion that the machinery referred to in Sch. V is machinery of a kind that is propelled by means other than those described in s. 250, which contemplates some sort of mechanical motive power. A decision of Krishnan, J., has been cited in In re Ram Chandra Rao (1) which deals with cl. (q) of Sch. V. As I consider that s. 249 and Sch. V do not apply to this case at all, that decision does not really call for any discussion. All that I need say in regard to it is that I agree with Krishnan, J., that the machinery referred to in cl. (q) of Sch. V must be such as is likely to be dangerous to human life, health or property. The object of the clause is, as he says, to bring under control the storing, manufacturing, and using of things which are dangerous to human life, or health or property. The "fuel or machinery" referred to in the clause must, I think, be of a sort that comes within that category. At the same time, I do not agree with him that the whole clause is governed by the words "which is likely to be dangerous to human life, or health or property." The first two parts of it cannot be so governed. The words "manufacturing anything from which offensive or unwholesome smell arise" cannot grammatically be subject to a clause which begins "which is likely." Nor is it necessary to hold that the first two clauses are governed by the last. It is sufficiently obvious that the storing of explosives or combustibles and the manufacturing of things from which offensive or unwholesome smells arise are likely to be dangerous to human life, or health, or property and no further qualification of them as such appears to be necessary. In my opinion the last clause governs that part of cl. (q) which begins with the words "using for any industrial purpose . . ."

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 79, 88, 89—School-master punishing pupil—Offence.

A school-master may for purposes of discipline inflict moderate punishment and such punishment may be inflicted for offences committed not only within the school limits but also outside the school walls except when the school is closed for any length of time for a period of regular holidays. Criminal revision from an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Zigon, in Criminal Ragular Trial No. 126 of 1924.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, a school-master, has been convicted and fined for caning a school boy under his charge under the provisions of s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code. It appears that when the school was closed a pupil of the school was assaulted by other boys. The school re-opened two days later, and on complaint by the mother of the boy who was assaulted the petitioner held an enquiry, and finding that a boy named Hoke Sein had taken part in the assault, gave him some eight or nine strokes with a cane. Hoke Sein was a pupil of the school. The evidence is conflicting as to whether he did actually take part in the assault on the boy, but there is no reason for doubting the good faith of the petitioner in the matter. There is no suggestion that he was actuated by improper motives, or that he was not acting bona fide in the interests of school discipline. Nor does it appear that the punishment was unduly excessive or conducted in other than a humane manner. The question for decision, therefore, is whether a school-master in such circumstances is justified in inflicting corporeal punishment by way of school discipline. There is no doubt that school-masters have such rights within limits under English Law. It was held by Cookburn, J., in the case of R. v. Hopley (1) that "a parent, or a school-master who for this purpose represents the parent, may for the purpose of correcting what is evil in the child, inflict moderate and reasonable corporeal punishment, always, however, with this condition, that it is moderate and reasonable." There is no specific provision in the Indian Penal Code dealing with this point. It would appear, however, to have been incorporated into the Code, by the provisions of s. 79 under which nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is justified in law in doing it, and of s. 89. Section 89 lays down "that nothing whic[illegible] is done in good faith for the benefit of [illegible] person under twelve years of age.......................by or by consent, either express or implied, of the guardian or other person having lawful charge of that person, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause, or to be known by the doer to be likely to cause." There are certain provisos to this section but they are not relevant to the present case. The infliction of chastisement by way of parental discipline by the parent or guardian would come within the scope of this section provided it was inflicted in good faith for the benefit of the child. And when a child is sent by its parent or guardian to a school, the parent or guardian must, in my opinion, be held to have given an implied consent to the infliction of such reasonable punishment as may be necessary for the purposes of school discipline. In the case of boys of over twelve years of age the same principle would probably be applicable under the provisions of s. 88 of the Code though as the boy in this case was aged ten years it is not necessary to decide this point. The general principles of the English Law as to infliction of corporeal punishment by way of school discipline are to my mind applicable to the circumstances of the present case, and the question is the extent to which this right to punish goes. If the offence of which the boy had been found guilty had been committed in school there would be no difficulty. Nor would there be any difficulty if it were committed whilst the boy was on the way to or from school. In the present case, however, the school was actually closed at the time the offence was alleged to have been committed. It is not quite clear to me from the record whether the school had been open on the day on which the assault is alleged to have taken place. But it is clear that it was closed for a period of two days only. It appears from the evidence of the boy Maung Ngoat Yin who was assaulted and of Maung Ba Chit, one of the boys who assaulted him, that Ngoat Yin was called out of his house by Ba Chit on the ground that the school-master wanted him and was then assaulted on the road. It also appears that the boys were in the habit of going to night classes, and that in the ordinary course of events they would have gone to such a class that night. Hoke Sein says that he did not go that night because the teacher had gone to play football. Ngoat Yin says that the reason the boys did not go on that night was that there was a confinement in the house of the teacher. A number of boys from the school were engaged in the assault which took place on the road and apparently in fairly close proximity to the school. Other boys who were caned in connection with the same matter have stated that they were rightly punished, and Hoke Sein's grievance appears to be rather that the finding that he took part in the assault was mistaken than that the master had no authority over the boys at the time. The petitioner took action on the complaint of Ngoat Yin's mother who made a complaint immediately.

(1) (1861) 2 F. & F. 202.

I have found no Indian authorities on the point, and I have been able to find no authority precisely bearing on the facts of the present case in English Law. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XII at page 124, it is stated that for the purposes of correction the school-master may inflict moderate punishment, and that such punishment may be inflicted for offences committed not only within the school limits but also on the way to or from school. This was the decision come to in the case of Cleary v. Booth (2). In the course of his judgment in that case, Collins, J., remarked: "In my opinion the purpose with which the parental authority is delegated to the school-master, who is entrusted with the bringing up and discipline of the child, must to some extent include an authority over the child when he is outside the four walls. It may be a question of fact in each case whether the conduct of the master in inflicting corporal punishment is right." And Lawrence, J., says: "It is difficult to express in words the extent of the school master's authority in respect of the punishment of his pupils; but, in my opinion, the authority extends, not only to acts done in school, but also to cases where a complaint of acts done out of school, at any rate while going to and from school, is made to the school-master." Neither of the learned Judges definitely lays down the limits within which the power of the school-master extends to inflict punishment for offences committed out of school. But it would appear to depend largely on the facts of each case whether the school master had authority to act. The questions for decision appear to me. "In the circumstances of the case is it a reasonable inference that the boy was at the time the offence was committed under the authority of the school-master and was the punishment bona fide reasonably considered necessary for the purposes of school discipline?" I think it clear that if the school were closed for any length of time for a period of regular holidays, the boy would have to be held to have returned to the charge of his parents and the authority of the school-master would cease. But in the present case, although the school was closed for two days, it was not closed for a long holiday. The boys but for an accident would have actually been attending night school at the time the assault was committed, and the boy who was assaulted was on the scene because he had been called by another boy to visit his master. An assault by a number of boys of the school on another boy of the school may reasonably be held to be a matter seriously affecting the discipline of the school. Ngoat Yin at least thought at the time that he was under the authority of the school-master, and the other boys appear to have been of the same opinion. It was presumably as pupils of the school that the boys had collected together on the road, and a direct complaint was made to school-master by the mother of the boy who was assaulted. If the school-master were bound in such cases to refuse to take action it is difficult to see how he could be expected to maintain proper control over the boys under his charge and as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge in his order of reference he would probably incur opprobrium if his boys misbehaved themselves in such places. In all these circumstances I think it is a reasonable inference that the implied consent of the parents of the boy to his being under the discipline and control of the school-master extended to the alleged offence for which the school-master found it necessary to punish him, and that the boy must be held at the time to have been under the authority of the school-master. It may be that the school-master made a mistake and that Hoke Sein was not actually guilty of taking part in the assault. But as I have said there is no suggestion that the action of the school-master was not bona fide and that he did not honestly believe that the boy deserved punishment. A proper inquiry was made, and the view that the punishment was necessary in the interests of school discipline was a reasonable one. I am of opinion that in this case the school-master was acting within the implied authority delegated to him by the parents or guardians of the boy Maung Hoke Sein, and that he must be held to have inflicted the punishment bona fide for the good of the boy and in the interests of school discipline. In this view of the case he committed no offence under the provisions of s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1729 OF 1924.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 489-B, object of —"As genuine", effect of—Person selling forged note—Offence.

The object of Legislature in enacting s. 489-B, Penal Code, is to stop the circulation of the forged notes by punishing all persons who knowing or having reason to believe them to be forged, do any act which would lead to their circulation.

A person who knowingly sells a forged note to a person who also knows it to be forged is guilty under s. 489-B, Penal Code.

The words "as genuine" in s. 489-B, Penal Code, govern only the verb 'uses' and not any other verb.

Criminal revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 3rd December 1924.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—There is ample evidence in support of the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the petitioner Bhika Ram sold a forged currency-note of Rs. 50 to one Jas Karan for a sum of Rs. 25; and that at the time of the sale both the parties knew that the note was, not a genuine note but a forged one. The question for co[illegible]sideration is whether Bhika Ram is guilt[illegible] of an offence described in s. 489 B of the Indian Penal Code.

Now, the aforesaid section runs as follows:

> "Whoever sells to, or buys or receives from, any other person, or otherwise traffics in or uses as genuine, any forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine."

Mr. Sethi for the applicant contends that in order to satisfy the requirements of the section it is necessary to prove that the accused sold the forged currency-note as a genuine one, and that, as this essential ingredient of the offence has not been established, the accused is entitled to an acquittal. This contention is based upon the assumption that the words " as genuine " in the section go, not only with the verb "uses" which immediately precedes them, but also with all other verbs used in the opening portion of the section. The interpretation sought to be placed upon the section would reduce the law to an absurdity. The section, if construed in the manner suggested by the learned Connsel for the applicant, would punish the following persons:

(1) Whoever sells to any other person as genuine any forged or counterfeit currency-note ar bank note, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit.

(2) Whoever buys from any other person as genuine any forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit.

(3) Whoever receives from any other person as genuine any forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit.

(4) Whoever traffics in, any forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note, as genuine, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit.

(5) Whoever uses as genuine any forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit.

Now, we fail to understand how a person can buy or receive as genuine a forged currency-note knowing the same to be forged. This is obviously a contradiction in terms.

There is no decided case on the subject but we are clear that the words "as genuine" govern only the verb " uses " and not any other verb. It is true that when a person sells a forged note as a forged note, he practises no deception upon the buyer who enters into the transaction with his eyes open; and such a seller should not be subjected to any criminal liability. It appears, however, that the object of the Legislature in enacting this section was to stop the circulation of forged notes by punishing all persons who knowing or having reason to believe them to be forged, do any act which would lead to their circulation. Judged by this test the sale of a forged note as a forged note is as reprehensible as a sale of a forged note as a genuine one. A person, who purchases for value a forged note knowing it to be forged, is ordinarily expected to make money out of the transaction by circulating the note as a genuine one. It is possible that a perfectly honest man, such as a mere collector of curios who does not intend to put the instrument into circulation, may come within the ambit of the section, but such exceptional cases cannot furnish any argument for modifying the plain meaning of the enactment.

We consider that the petitioner, who knowingly sold a forged note to a person who also knew it be forged, is guilty under s. 489-B of the Indian Penal Code. It appears, however, that he was released on bail by this Court in December 1924; and that the punishment imposed upon him includes a fine of Rs. 500. Having regard to these facts we reduce the term of imprisonment to the period already undergone. The application for revision is accepted pro tanto, and the order of the Sessions Judge modified accordingly.

Petition for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 8th July 1925, reversing that of the Additional District Magistrate, Amritsar, dated the 14th May 1925.

Diwan Ram Lal, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—Although this case is of small importance in itself, the question involved as to the procedure affects a very large number of Courts exercising summary powers in this Province. The accused was found guilty after a summary trial under s. 381 and sentenced to three months' imprisonment—an appealable sentence. No written charge was drawn up. He appealed to the Sessions Judge, who followed Natabar Khan v. Emperor (1) and ordered a re-trial.

Against this order the Crown has presented a petition for revision, and Diwan Ram Lal has drawn my attention to the wording of ss. 262, 263, 264 and 265 of the Cr. P. C., and also to certain rulings. Queen-Empress v. Keru (2), Tittu Sahu v. Emperor (3), Kuchi v. Emperor (4) and also to Vol. II, page 180 of the Rules and Orders of this Court in which it is stated that the framing of a formal written charge is not necessary. The Calcutta ruling, which has been followed by the Sessions Judge is very clear, and it lays down that whereas in regard to non-appealable cases it is stated in so many words in s. 263, that no charge need be framed, in s. 264, which deals with appealable cases, there are no words to this effect, and this omission when coupled with s. 262 is tantamount to a clear direction that the ordinary procedure in warrant cases is to be followed and a formal charge is to be framed. The ratio decidendi I understand to be the silence of s. 264, but this section is also silent regarding the preparation of a record of evidence except in so far that sub s. (2) states that the judgment shall be the only record in such cases In order to reconcile the words of s. 264 (2), with Natabar Khan v. Emperor (1) it appears to me to be necessary to hold that the charge is not part of the record—or that what is usually called the record of the evidence is no part of "the record" in the sense in which the words are used in s. 264 (2), or that, in spite of the wording of s. 264 (2) the silence of s. 264 (1) regarding the charge and the record of the evidence necessitates the preparation of both while s. 264 (2) forbids their incorporation into the record of the case. In my opinion, sub-s. (2), especially when read with the opening words of s. 265, makes it clear that the judgment and the judgment alone, embodying, as it does, the substance of the evidence and the particulars mentioned in s. 263, is the self-contained record of the case, and apart from this record, there is no other, and what is more, there is no document, which can be defined or described as a portion of a record.

It is clear from the unreported Division Bench judgment of the Bombay High Court that the contrary view to that contained in Natabar Khan v. Emperor (1) was taken by two Judges of that Court, and in Tittu Sahu v. Emperor (3) a Judge of the Patna Court did the same. Kuchi v. Emperor (4) which is a judgment of the Burma Chief Court deals with a kindred question of the record of evidence, and in our own Rules and Orders emphasis is laid on the necessity of charging the accused in an appealable summary case but it is explained that the charge need not be reduced to writing. With all respect to the Judges of the Calcutta High Court who gave the decision, which has been followed by the Sessions Judge of Amritsar, I find that the language of ss 264 and 265 when read with ss. 262 and 263 makes it clear, although this is nowhere said in so many words, that in no summary trial, whether it be appealable or non-appealable, need a formal charge in writing be framed.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Sessions Judge in this case and direct that the appeal be heard on the merits.

In a suit for possession of land under cultivation plaintiff, in order to succeed, must prove his possession and dispossession within twelve years.

Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi, 16 C. 473; 16 I. A. 23; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 321; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 312 (P. C.), followed.

Where, though the plaintiffs and defendants are shown in the Revenue Records as landlords and tenants, those very records show that the defendants never paid any rent and were in possession as trespassers, the relationship of landlord and tenant is not established between the parties.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 4th February 1925, affirming that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Ambala, dated the 7th July 1924.

Mirza Jalal-ud-Din, for the Appellants.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a boundary encroachment or banna shikni case and an encroachment to the extent of 3 biswas 1 biswansi was established, but the Courts below have held that the suit was time-barred as the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they had been in possession within 12 years before suit. One of the plaintiffs, [illegible]mely, Faiz Bakhsh, died while the suit [illegible] pending in the Trial Court and as his [illegible]esentatives were not brought on the [illegible]rd within the period prescribed by the Law of Limitation, that Court held that the suit had abated with regard to his share in the land. This is not contested.

The oral evidence produced by the plaintiffs has been disbelieved and the documentary evidence consisting of entries in the Revenue Records is undoubtedly adverse to them. The entry in the last Settlement of 1915-1916 was that the defendant was in possession by means of dual shikni, i. e., boundary encroachment; but there was no knowing when this dual shikni took place. No copy of the relevant entries in the previous jamabandis was produced and presumably the encroachment was already in existence when the Settlement Record of 1915-1916 was prepared. As the land was under cultivation and not waste, the plaintiffs were decidedly out of possession and according to the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case reported as Mahima Chunder Mozomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi (1) the plaintiffs could not succeed without proving possession and dispossession within twelve years. The onus of proving this was rightly placed on them but they failed to discharge it. Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants argues that as in the Revenue Records the plaintiffs are shown to be owners and the defendants, tenants, the possession of the latter as tenants cannot be adverse to their landlords, but it appears from those records that the defendants never paid any rent and were in possession as trespassers. So the relation of landlord and tenant never existed between the parties and it was not even alleged that the defendants had entered into possession as tenants. According to the general rule which the Revenue Authorities follow the name of a person, who is not the owner of the land of which he is in possession, is entered in the column of tenants.

The appeal fails and I dismiss it with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sylhet, dated the 25th September 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, Habiganj, dated the 6th November 1922.

Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gopal Chandra Das and Babu Satyendra Kishore Ghose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal is by the plaintiffs and it arises out of a suit for redemption of an alleged usufructuary mortgage. The defence was that the property never belonged to the plaintiffs and that there was no mortgage but the property belonged to the defendants.

The Trial Court accepted the story of the plaintiffs and made a decree in their favour. On appeal by one of the defendants the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decree on the finding that the property has not been proved to have ever belonged to the plaintiffs or that there was any mortgage on that property by the plaintiffs to the defendant. On that finding he dismissed the suit.

No question of law arises upon this finding. But it is contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants that the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was incompetent as all the parties were not joined in the appeal; and secondly, the appeal was preferred only against the preliminary decree on the mortgage after the final decree had been made, and so it was not maintainable. Neither of these two points was raised in the lower Appellate Court. As these are matters of procedure dependent upon certain facts the appellants are not entitled to raise these questions for the first time in second appeal.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Eviction, what is—Suspension of rent

Eviction is not a mere trespass but is something of a grave and permanent character done by the landlord with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises. [p. 419, col. 2.]

Upton v. Townend, (1855) 17 C. B. 30 at p. 61; 25 L. J. C. P. 44; 1 Jur. (N. S.) 1089; 139 E. R. 976; 104 R. R. 562 and Dhunput Singh v. Mahomed Kazim Ispahani, 24 C. 296; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 864, relied on.

The facts necessary to cause suspension of rent must be distinctly found in order to bring into operation the rule of suspension of rent which has been applied as a punishment to the landlord for his illegal acts. [p. 419, col. 2.]

Mere mistake of landlord in including in a previous decree lands not forming the subject-matter of the suit in consequence of which they were sold, would not entitle the tenant to suspension of rent as the error could have been rectified by the tenant. [p. 420, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Jessore, dated the 21st of April 1923, modifying those of the Munsif, First Court, Jhenidah, dated the 5th of September 1922.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal, Babus Purna Chandra and Subodh Chandra Dutt, for the Appellant.

Babu Patit Paban Chatterji, for Babu Panna Lal Chatterji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—These three appeals arise out of three suits for rent. The plea of the defendants mainly was that the plaintiffs having dispossessed them from certain portions of their holdings they were entitled to have the entire rent suspended for the years in suit.

There were previous suits for rent in 1915 for these very holdings. It appears tha[illegible] the defendants in those cases also rais[illegible] the plea that they had been dispossesse[illegible] those very lands which are now in dis[illegible] and consequently there should be su[illegible]sion of rent. The question of suspension of rent was decided against the defendants and it was found in those cases that there had been no dispossession by the landlords.

The learned Munsif held that the question of suspension of the rent was res judicata. He also held upon the facts that it was not satisfactorily proved that the defendants had been dispossessed from any of the lands. Upon that finding the Munsif passed a decree for the entire amount claimed by the plaintiffs. On appeal by the defendants the learned Judge approached the question of res judicata from the point of view as to whether the defendants were entitled to a proportionate reduction of rent on account of dispossession from portions of the holdings. His view was, following the case of Nil Madhab Sarkar v. Brojo Nath Singha (1), that the question of the amount of rent payable for a particular period in a suit for rent cannot be held to be res judicata on account of a previous decision as to the amount of rent for a different period. The learned Judge then proceeded to apportion the rent in a certain proportion.

Defendant No. 1 appeals to this Court and his contention is that the whole of the rent should be suspended with regard to these jamas.

The decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question of res judicata considered from the point of view taken may be right. But he did not approach the question of res judicata with regard to the plea of suspension of rent on account of the dispossession alleged by the defendants to have occurred before the previous suits for rent in the year 1915. The learned Judge also does not mention in his judgment what were the issues in those rent suits. As the Munsif has pointed out the question of suspension of rent on account of dispossession was distinctly raised in those previous suits. As the decisions in the previous suits are not before us and we are not aware what the issues were in the previous rent suits it is not possible to say whether the decisions in the previous rent suits operated as res judicata with regard to the question of suspension of rent. For the purpose of the present appeal it may be taken that this question was not res judicata. It appears, however, from the judgment of the learned Judge that the question of suspension of rent was not taken before him at all But the statement of the learned Advocate for the appellants may be accepted that this question was raised before the District Judge.

Taking now the facts found by the District Judge on which the suspension of rent is claimed it will be observed that the learned Judge has found that the defendants were dispossessed of two plots measuring 2⅓ bighas and 2 bighas out of 87 bighas of land and of one plot of 2¾ bighas out of an area of 150 bighas of land by the plaintiffs by accepting kabuliyats from different tenants with regard to these small portions of land. The learned Judge does not say distinctly under what circumstances these kabuliyats were taken by the plaintiffs. But it has been found by the Munsif on the admission of the defendants' gomashta that these plots of land were sold as appertaining to some other jamas belonging to these defendants in a suit for rent brought by the plaintiffs for those other jamas. It would thus appear that this dispossession took place by virtue of a decree of a Court against these very defendants under which these plots were sold as appertaining to some other jamas.

It is true the rule of suspension of rent on account of eviction by the landlord of the tenant from a portion of the demised premises has been adopted in this Court in a series of cases and it is too late to question the adoption of that rule in our Court now. But the facts necessary to cause suspension of rent on account of an alleged eviction by the landlord must be distinctly found in order to bring into operation this rule which has been applied as a punishment to the landlord for his illegal acts. It is unnecessary for me to state in detail what findings are necessary to support the proposition that the entire rent should be suspended for the eviction of a tenant from any part of the demised premises, however, small it may be. The facts which would bring into operation the rule may be found in the observations made in the case of Upton v. Townend (2) by Jervis, C. J., which has been quoted and followed in the case of Dhunput Singh v. Mahomed Kazim Ispahain (3) which may be considered as the leading case on the subject in our Court. Jervis, C. J., states what the modern meaning of the word eviction is. He says it is "not a mere trespass and nothing more, but something of a grave and permanent character done by the landlord with the intention of depriving the tenant of enjoyment of the demised premises". Then he goes on to abserve. "If that may in law amount to an eviction, the Jury would very naturally cut the knot by finding whether or not the act done by the landlord is of that character and done with that intention". In all the cases in our Court where suspension of rent has been allowed on this ground it has been found that the landlord had done such an act with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises. Or as I have already stated it is a punishment awarded to the landlord for his illegal act or highhandedness. In the present case there is no such finding. The facts only amount to this, that in a previous rent suit against these very defendants a portion of the land appertaining to these jamas in question were included in the decree for rent of the other jamas and sold along with other lands. It was open to the defendants in that case to point out that the lands now in question did not appertain to the other jamas. They refrained from doing so. It must be either through inadvertence or for some other cause that the lands which have been found now to appertain to the jamas in suit was stated as appertaining to some other jamas. That can hardly be construed as an act done by the landlord with the intention of depriving the tenants of the enjoyment of the demised premises. It has not been so found by the learned Judge who considered it to be only a case of apportionment. It seems to me that as the rule of law as regards suspension of rent has been introduced in this country as a rule of equity, justice and good conscience, or as it is said in some of the cases a rule of policy, we must look to the circumstances of each case in order to apply that rule. Having regard to the fact that the defendants have been deprived under the circumstances stated above of only a very small fraction of the land comprised within their jamas as equitable decision seems to have been arrived at by the learned Judge by apportioning the rent in the proportion he has done, that is deducting the rent of 2 bighas and 2½ bighas out of 87 bighas and of 2¾ bighas out of 150 bighas of the holdings. Otherwise it would have the effect of making the defendants practically the owners of the properties as they would be entitled to hold the lands in perpetuity without paying any rent whatsoever.

For setting aside an ex parte decree it is not enough to find that the judgment-debtor was ignorant of the decree, the Court must also decide whether the summons was not duly served.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Pali, dated the 4th August 1924, in I. A. No. 346 of 1924, in O. S. No. 5 of 1923.

JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif has not decided whether "summons was not duly served" as he was bound to do under Art. 164 of the Indian Limitation Act. A mere assertion of his ignorance of the decree by the petitioner and acceptance of that by the Court will not give the Court jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte decree. It has to decide also whether the summons was not duly served. This order was, therefore, made without jurisdiction and is hereby set aside and the case sent back for fresh decision.

Costs upto date will abide the result. Refund of Court-fee on the civil revision petition is allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53, proviso—Simple money-decree against judgment-debtor—Mortgage of property by judgment-debtor—Mortgagee unaware of execution proceedings—Intent to defeat creditors—Deed, validity of.

Where a judgment-debtor executes a mortgage of his property on a date prior to the service of notice under O. XXI, r. 54, C. P. C., on him, with a view to defeat the creditor who has obtained a simple money-decree against him, but the mortgagee has no notice of the execution proceedings, the mortgage-deed cannot be declared void under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 29th July 1924, affirming a decree of Munsif, Sitapur, dated the 20th November 1923.

The facts of this case so far as it is necessary to state them for the purpose of disposing of this appeal are as follows:—

Ram Charan (appellant) obtained a simple money-decree against Bachchu Singh and Durga Singh (respondents Nos. 2 and 3) for Rs. 966-11-0 on the 18th April 1921. He applied for execution of the decree on the 30th November 1922. The necessary notices were issued by the Court but service was not effected on the judgment-debtors before the 17th December 1922. The prohibitory order issued under O. XXI, r. 54, Sch. I, of the C. P. C. was affixed on the court-house on 6th December 1922, though it had not been proclaimed till then at some place on or adjacent to the property as required by the said rule. On the 13th December 1922 the respondents Nos. 2 and 3 executed a mortgage-deed in respect of the property in question in favour of Raghu Singh respondent No. 1 for Rs. 500 Raghu Singh filed an objection in the Execution Court on the basis of this mortgage after the attachment of the property but his objection was disallowed on the 10th February 1923. He then filed the present suit out of which this appeal arises on the 27th February 1923.

Both the lower Courts have held that the deed was executed for consideration and that the transferee had no knowledge of the execution proceedings. They have, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's claim. Ram Charan decree-holder has now come to this Court in second appeal.

I have examined the record and heard the learned Counsel for the appellant. So far as I see there is no force in this appeal. The appellant's learned Counsel has argued that the mortgage was executed by the judgment-debtors to defeat the decree-holder. He has referred to the ruling in Narmal Das v. Chet Ram (1). So far as I see that ruling does not help the appellant in this case. It has been found by the lower Courts that the deed was executed for consideration and the transferee had no knowledge of the execution proceedings. This finding is based upon admissible evidence and must be accepted in second appeal.

The appellant's learned Counsel has referred to s. 53 of Act IV of 1882, but that section itself provides that "nothing contained in this section shall impair the rights of any transferee in good faith and for consideration." The contention of the appllant's learned Counsel that the transaction should be presumed to be invalid cannot be accepted. He contends that the transaction appears to be highly suspicious. However the Courts' decision must rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony.

The respondent's learned Pleader has referred to the ruling in Hassan Abbas Ali Khan v. Razia Begam (2). In that case the evidence showed a fraudulent intention on the part of the judgment-debtor to defeat his creditors but there was no proof that the transferee was aware of or participated in the fraudulent intention. It was held that in the circumstances the deed could not be declared to be void. That case was decided by a Judge of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh on the 3rd March 1911.

Under these circumstances the appeal fails and must be dismissed. I dismiss the appeal with costs and order that the appellant should pay the costs of the contesting respondent. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is confirmed in all respects.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are as follows. The suit of Samail and others was decreed on 21st December 1920. An appeal was lodged by the defendant and admitted on 10th March 1921. Samail, plaintiff-respondent, died on 22nd January 1924, and on the 24th of April 1924 the appellant applied to have his representatives brought on the record, alleging that Samail had died two months previous to the date of the application. This application was granted "subject to all just exceptions" and at the hearing of the appeal on the 11th of February 1925 it came to light that Samail had actually died on the 22nd of January and the application had been made more than ninety days after that date. The order passed was that the appeal was shown to have abated as against one of the respondents, and this being so it had abated against all and was dismissed with costs.

On the 2nd of April 1925 a petition was presented purporting to be under O. XXII, r. 9, s. 151 and O. I, r. 10, C. P. C., applying that the abatement and dismissal be set aside, and that the representatives be brought on the record; and, as an alternative; that the representatives be impleaded under s. 151 and O. I, r. 10. Counsel relied on Gujrati v. Sitai Misir (1) while respondent has urged that in Sarat Chandra Sarkar v. Mihar Stone and Lime Co. Ltd. (2) precisely contrary view was taken, and that that view had been generally followed by this Court. He quoted Raghbir Saran v. Sohan Devi (3) and Ram Gopal v. Har Kishen (4). The views taken by the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts are diametrically opposed to each other, the latter being that after 90 days have expired from the date of a man's death, no application having been made in the interval, the appeal automatically abates or dies; from that moment time begins to run and, unless within 60 days an application be made under O. XXII, r. 9, the matter ends. On the other hand, the view of the Allahabad Court is that before there can be an abatement, there must be an order, and it is from the date of the order that limitation begins to run, and that 60 days are allowed for the making of an application to have that order set aside. In Ram Gopal v Har Kishen (4) the lower Appellate Court had followed the view taken by Allahabad; on appeal a Division Bench of this Court took the same view as Calcutta, and this has indeed always been the view of this Court, where applications made beyond time are treated as equivalent to applications under O. XXII, r. 9. Counsel for the petitioner urges that in Raghbir Saran v. Sohan Devi (3) that matter was not fully argued, but it must have been so argued in Ram Gopal v. Har Kishen (4) and anyhow we are of opinion that the view of the Calcutta High Court is correct, and must prevail. The Code speaks nowhere of an order of abatement; O. XXII, r. 4, has not been dealt with in so many words in Gujrati v. Sitai Misir (1), and the only contention which impresses us at all is that in ordinary English a fact is not "set aside" but an order is. Where O. XXII, r. 9, speaks of setting aside an abatement or dismissal, it would possibly be more correct to use some other word and to reserve the use of the words "set aside" for the cancellation of an order as opposed to the ignoring of an event. We are, however, of opinion that as soon as 90 days have expired the appeal abates. No reference to that abatement gives a fresh starting point and such reference is merely the recital of an event. Where, therefore, the appeal is dismissed with costs as in this case as having abated in toto, it would no doubt be more correct to say: "The appeal has abated against one of the respondents. It cannot, therefore, proceed against the remaining respondents and is dismissed against them with costs." It is unnecessary to dismiss it against the respondent against whom it has already abated. Where O. XXII, r. 9 speaks of an abatement or dismissal, the word "dismissal" refers back to the only form of dismissal dealt with in O. XXII, namely, the dismissal of a suit on the ground of a plaintiff's insolvency. Where the suit or appeal is dismissed against certain defendants or respondents as a consequence of a previous abatement, it is dismissed in exactly the same way as if the plaintiff or the appellant had failed to implead an essential party and such failure necessitated such dismissal. We find, therefore, that abatement is automatic after the 90 days have expired, and, unless that abatement be set aside on an application presented within 60 days or a period further extended in virtue of s. 5 of the Limitation Act, the suit or appeal is dead. No reason has been shown in this case why there should be any extension of time and in fact Counsel has not even addressed us on this point.

Application to revise the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court Judge, Karachi.

Mr. Hiranand Bulchand, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act against the order passed by the learned Small Cause Court Judge, Karachi, dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

It appears that the plaintiff who is a local merchant agreed to sell a bale of piecegoods to the defendant who resides and carries on business at Amritsar. There were disputes between the parties as to the delivery of the bale and each party claimed damages from the other for breach of contract. The defendant, however, forestalled the plaintiff by instituting a suit in the Small Cause Court at Amritsar for recovery of Rs. 20 paid as earnest-money and Rs. 64 as damages for failure by the plaintiff to deliver the bale to him, stating that the cause of action arose at Amritsar where the bale was to be delivered. The plaintiff failed to appear in the Amritsar Court and permitted an ex parte decree being passed against him. Subsequently he brought the present suit in the Small Cause Court, Karachi, for recovery of Rs. 900 and odd as the loss suffered by him for failure of the defendant to take delivery of the bale. The defendant pleaded the judgment and decree of the Amritsar Court as a bar to the present suit.

It was urged on behalf of the plaintiff that as the Small Cause Court, Amritsar, has jurisdiction to try suits upto Rs. 500 and as the Small Cause Court, Karachi, has jurisdiction to try suit upto Rs. 1,000 and as the present suit was one exceeding Rs. 500 and as such not cognizable by the Amritsar Court, the judgment and decree of that Court could not be pleaded as a bar to the present suit.

Now, the plea of res judicata is not limited to a judgment of a Court of a concurrent jurisdiction being pleaded as a bar to the subsequent suit which is dealt with in s. 11 of the C. P. C. but it extends also to a judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction. This was laid down in England as early as 1776 in the celebrated case of The Dutchess of Kingston's case (1) where the joint opinion of the Judges delivered in answer to the questions put by House of Lords was as follows:—

"From the variety of cases relating to judgments being given in evidence in civil suits these two deductions seem to follow as generally true.

First that the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, as a plea, a bar, or, as evidence, conclusive, between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another Court: Secondly that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidently in question in another Court for a different purpose.

But neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidently cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment." In England a judgment of a County Court corresponding to the Court of Small Causes if not appealed against or set aside has been held to be a bar to proceedings in respect of the same matter in the High Court, cf. the case of Poyser v. Minors (2), Pease v. Chaytor (3) and Flitters v. Allfrey (4).

The same principles would indubitably apply to a decision of the Small Cause Court. Section 16 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act gives exclusive jurisdiction to the Small Cause Court over certain suits for small amounts and s. 27 declares that the decree or order made under the provisions of that Act shall be final. It was faintly suggested that s. 11, C. P. C., was exhaustive and whatever may be the law in England the present suit being outside the competence of the Amritsar Small Cause Court was not barred by res judicata. But as held in Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Rup Kuari (5) and again pointed out in the more recent case of George Henry Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal (6), the plea of res judicata still remains apart from the limited provisions of the Code. If the plea of res judicata were not to prevail in suits of this nature the vary object of the Legislature in providing for a speedy and summary remedy by conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the Court of Small Causes in India would, in our opinion, be frustrated.

We are aware of a Single Judge judgment of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Dulare Lal v. Hazari Lal (7) where the suit filed in the Small Cause Court had been transferred to the Court of the Munsif to be tried along with the cross-claim and on the claim in the Small Cause Court suit being decreed the cross-claim was dismissed by the same Judge. On appeal against the decree dismissing the cross-claim the Appellate Court decreed the cross-claim after allowing credit for the claim in the Small Cause Court suit and the plea, that the decision in the Small Cause Court suit which had not been appealed against operated as res judicata to the maintainability of the appeal, was not allowed to prevail. The circumstances of that case were peculiar and were such as not to invite the application of the maxim nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa which is the basis of the plea of res judicata. The two suits were tried together and the cross-claim which was appealable may well have been tried as the principal suit and the Small Cause Court suit made to follow the result thereof. The appeal was a continuation of the same suit and the opposite party was not being twice vexed for the same cause of action.

The defendants' case as laid was triable by the Small Cause Court, Amritsar. That Court had exclusive jurisdiction to try that suit and the question directly in issue in that suit was, whether the present plaintiff was guilty of a breach of contract. The decree of that Court is, therefore, final in respect of the matter which was directly in issue. It was the duty of the plaintiff to appear there and to have defended that suit. If he treated that Court with contempt and failed to appear relying upon the fact that he would be able to bring down the defendant who was the plaintiff in that suit to Karachi and finds now that his suit cannot proceed on the plea of res judicata, he was to thank himself.

We think that the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was right in dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

This application, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Premises damaged by combustion of cotton stored—Liability of tenant.

In Agra, on 25th March 1920, defendants hired a room on the ground floor of the plaintiff's house and stored therein 388 bales of cotton. The cotton was of 1919 season and remained in that room throughout the hot weather of April, May and June 1920. There were three doors to the room but no ventilation and when the doors were shut the whole room was a sealed chamber. Some days prior to 28th July rain had been falling. At 4 P. M. that day the cotton was found to be on fire and the fire was not got under until great damage had been done to the upper portion of the house:

Held, that the defendants were liable for damages on the ground that the fire which occured would not have happened had the defendants exercised proper watchfulness and control over the cotton. They had the exclusive control and custody of the cotton and must be presumed to know the degree of care required by persons who store cotton in India in bulk in unventilated rooms during months of April, May, June and July. [p. 427, col. 1.]

First appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 25th April 1922.

Sir Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Dr. S. N. Sen, Messrs. B. Malik, Baleshwari Prasad and Ajudhia Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. N. P. Ashthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge of Agra who on the 25th of April 1922 gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 12,800 damages on account of the destruction by fire of the major portion of a house owned by them on the ground that such fire originated through the negligence of the defendants.

The defendants are Bankers at Ajmere. They also carry on the business of cotton commission agents at Agra and elsewhere and are a firm of high financial repute.

On the 25th of March 1920 they had occasion to require premises at Agra to store some 388 bales of cotton of which 363 were the property of a firm Sukar Nand-Sham Lal. They hired on monthly rent a big room on the ground floor of the plaintiff's house at Belanganj, Agra. There they deposited the cotton. This cotton was of the 1919 season and remained in that room throughout the hot weather of April, May and June 1920.

There were three doors to the room but no ventilation and when the doors were shut the whole room was a sealed chamber. The rainy season in 1920 commenced in this Province on or about July 8th, and for some days or parts of days prior to the 28th July, rain had been falling at Agra. At about 4 P. M. on that day smoke was seen issuing from the room, the alarm was raised, the doors were eventually opened or broken open and the cotton was found to be on fire. The fire was not got under until great damage had been done to upper portion of the house.

The plaintiffs launched a claim against the defendants, basing it, unfortunately, upon a very unwise ground and one which they would have ascertained to have no reasonable foundation had they taken the least trouble to consider the position of the defendants and the circumstances of the case. They alleged and principally relied upon incendiarism. They alleged that the defendants in consequence of a fall in the price of cotton deliberately set fire to the bales.

They further sought to prove, and alleged it as a circumstance supporting incendiarism, that the defendants, when they were informed of the fire, refrained from taking proper measures to extinguish it.

The evidence to support incendiarism was given by Bhagwat Prasad who was undoubtedly untrustworthy. We can have no doubt that in respect of one important matter, namely, an allegation that he received compensation from the defendants (see pages 67 and 68), he was telling falsehoods. Mr. Prag Narain's evidence, supporting the suggestion of incendiarism, was, in our opinion, ill-considered. Mr. Prag Narain was engaged at one time in this very case as a Vakil, he gave evidence as a witness to the fire and in speaking of the firm of Sham Lal Sukar Nand said "I believe they have lost heavily and have failed." My belief is based on bazar reports. "The rumour, if there was one as to their failure was entirely untrue".

We regret that a Vakil should have aspersed the financial solvency of a firm in this way in support of a theory of incendiarism or of any other theory and that the Judge should have permitted it. He even adopted it in his judgment saying that there was nothing on record to show that the Vakil was in any way interested in giving a false deposition or that the rumour was not afloat. He evidently, therefore, attached weight to the rumour.

It is impossible to understand from the judgment whether Mr. Harihar Prasad really thought it a case of incendiarism or that the cotton was ignited by fire, brought negligently into contract with it, by the servants of the defendants, or, whether liability should fall on the defendants upon the ground that admittedly a fire broke out on premises occupied by them and under their control under circumstances which put the burden of proving that they had acted in all respects with reasonable care.

In the result he gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 12,800 based not upon a calculation of the amount which it would cost to make good the damage done but on the capital value of the destroyed portion of the house, regarded from the letting point of view. The plaintiff called only one witness on the question of the cost of making good and we agree with the Judge in regarding his evidence as unreliable and his figures extravagant and exorbitant. The plaintiff, who could have given the Court enlightenment on the proper amount of damages, deliberately refrained from furnishing figures f alleged enlargements, repairs and rebuilding to the original house and all that is known is that he spent Rs. 6,400 in the purchase of the house in 1917 and made additions to it. He produced no books and gave no details. He is apparently aggrieved at the amount of damages awarded to him but he should have produced evidence of his actual expenditure and reliable witnesses with fair figures to prove the cost of rebuilding.

On the question as to liability we have already indicated our view as to incendiarism. We do not believe for one moment the evidence of Bhagwat Prasad who says he saw men of the defendants on the premises at 3 in the afternoon with a lamp or candle.

The defendants set up a story that they had complained that the students who lived on the upper floor used to throw cigarettes and fore on the balcony and that Chaturbhuj had asked them not to do so. "lest sparks should enter by the sky lights." The defendants alleged that ventilation was given to the room by 3 square skylights placed over the doors. It is obvious from the photographs and plans that no such sky-lights ever existed. From the evidence of Nathu Lal (page 84) it is clear that the cotton once it was stored in the room was left to itself and all that happenned was that a servant on the 2nd or 4th day would go and see it. By going to see it the witness explained that he went to the locked doors without the key and looked through to see if it was all right. It was only when a customer wanted to see bales that the room was opened and there was evidence showing that cotton had slumped so badly that there was no buyers. No evidence was given to show that the room was ever opened during the tremendous heat of April, May and June, or the rains of July. At page 130 of his judgment the learned Subordinate Judge assumed, because it had been raining, that, therefore, it could not be a case of spontaneous combustion. A great deal of argument in this Court was addressed to us on the negligence in leaving cotton on the ground floor of a residential house unwatched for months and in an unventilated room. The cotton must have become bone-dry by the end of June and in a condition in which it would eagerly absorb moisture during the rains and the pressure of one damp bale upon another is exactly the very circumstance which gives rise to spontaneous combustion and which has to be guarded against by adequate ventilation, the moving to and fro of the bales, temperature tests and daily watchfulness

The plaintiffs were so set upon running the case of incendiarism that they overlooked the importance of getting expert evidence on the liability of cotton to self-ignition, but we are at liberty to, and do, disagree with the Judge that the fact of wet weather precludes the theory of spontaneous combustion. On the other hand, it indicates the likelihood of it.

We think that the judgment, unsatisfactory as it is on the issues propounded, may yet be supported by his finding at page 132 lines 30 to 40.

We confirm his decision on the ground that the fire which undoubtedly occurred would not have happened had the defendants exercised proper watchfulness and control over the cotton. They had the exclusive control and custody of the cotton and must be presumed to know the degree of care required by persons, who store cotton in India in bulk in unventilated rooms during the months of April, May, June and July.

The principle of liability is set out in the cases of Scott v. London Dock Co. (1), Byrne v. Boadle (2) and the Indian case of the River Steam Navigation Co. v. Choutmul Doogar (3).

Now as regards the damages. The learned Subordinate Judge was, as we have said, unable to accept the evidence of Janki Prasad, the plaintiff gave the Court no help. Mr. Prag Narain, who expounded theories on the way cotton burns when an incendiary has been at work also gave expert evidence as to the price houses fetch in the locality based upon a rental calculation. We are of opinion that if the plaintiff had disclosed his books and given the Court a straightforward calculation of the total cost of the house at the date of the fire and also produced two or three reliable quantity surveyors and builders he might have shown a greater loss than Rs. 12,800. However, he failed to do so, and we propose to leave the damages at the amount awarded by the learned Subordinate Judge.

In view of the manner in which this case was conducted in the lower Court we deprive the plaintiff of his costs in that Court and whilst dismissing this appeal do so also without awarding any costs to the plaintiff-respondent.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in A. S. No. 50 of 1921. (A. S. No 368 of 1920, District Court, Chingleput), preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, in O. S. No. 231 of 1919.

Mr. K. Jagannatha Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues upon an alleged equitable mortgage in his favour by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The other defendants are alienees from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The District Munsif gave a personal decree and declined to give a mortgage decree against the property covered by the equitable mortgage. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the equitable mortgage was not proved and that in consequence the suit was barred by limitation. The contention of Mr. Jagannatha Iyer for the appellant is that the loans given by the plaintiff's father were covered by the deposit of title-deeds. Exhibit C is a usufructuary mortgage-deed executed by the defendant in favour of one Desikachariar for Rs. 400 on 13th July 1903. This document was deposited to cover the loan. Mr. Jagannatha Iyer's contention is that this is a title-deed. I am unable to see how a mortgage deed executed by the owner of a property in favour of a third person can ever be deemed to be a title-deed. A mortgage-deed may be evidence of the fact that the mortgagor dealt with the property as his: but in no circumstances can it be considered that a mortgage-deed is the title-deed of the mortgagor. I, therefore, hold that there was no equitable mortgage created by Ex. C.

Exhibit D is no doubt a title-deed and the evidence of P. W. No. 2 is that it was deposited on 15th January 1910. He has not been cross-examined on the point and the Subordinate Judge was not right in considering that the evidence did not make out a deposit of title-deed. An entry in the plaintiff's book, Ex. A (5), shows that the two loans of Rs. 350 were covered by the deposit of title-deeds. From this evidence it is quite clear that Ex. D was deposited for the purpose of creating an equitable mortgage in respect of the loans already advanced. The contention of Mr. Bhashyam Iyengar for the respondents is that there is no evidence as to under what circumstances Ex. D was deposited. But from the evidence and the circumstances it is clear that Ex. D was deposited to cover the loan already advanced. An equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds is created by the borrower depositing with the lender his title-deeds. All that is required to create an equitable mortgage is depositing the title deeds with the lender, the intention of the lender being to hold them as security and the intention of the borrower to leave them as security with the lender. If there is any writing to evidence the transaction that would require registration: in the absence of registration any writing which embodies the transaction cannot be proved. Lord Cairns observes in Shaw v. Foster (1): "It is a well-established rule of equity that a deposit of a document of title, without more, without writing, or without word of mouth, will create in equity a charge upon the property referred to."

This passage is quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pranjivandas Jagjivandas Mehta v. Chan Mah Phee (2). The gist of the transaction, therefore, consists in depositing the title deed with the intention that it should be held as security. From the evidence of P. W. No. 2 it is quite clear that Ex. D was deposited with the plaintiff's father to cover the loan already advanced.

The next question is whether the loan of Rs 50 evidenced by the promissory-note dated 2nd June 1910 Ex. G is covered by the equitable mortgage. Exhibit H is a letter written by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the plaintiff's father on 22nd June 1910. In that they say :

"Please retain the title-deeds of our undermentioned property in Koluthur North, Chingleput District as equitable mortgage of title-deeds for the amount of pro-note of this day Rs. 50." I consider that this document contains the terms of the arrangement under which the loan was made and, therefore, this as rightly held by the Subordinate Judge, requires registration and in the absence of registration is not admissible in evidence. Mr. Jagannadha Iyer relies upon a recent decision of this Court in Velamakanya Krishnaiya v. Ponnuswamy Aiyer (3) as supporting his contention that

Ex. H does not require registration. In that case the expression used was

"Let it be known that for that I have retained with you as collateral security my document of the collector's Certificate No. 815 in respect of my house bearing door No. 11, Tiruvateswaranpet Madras".

There the letter refers to a past transaction. If a person writes a letter to another to the effect that he had already left with him certain documents as security for loans already made that letter does not require registration. But Ex. H is not such a letter. It contains the terms on which the loan was advanced and says that the document should be kept with him as security. Therefore, as regarde the loan of Rs 50 the plaintiff is not entitled to get a decree as equitable mortgagee.

The Subordinate Judge's decree is set aside and the plaintiff will have interest in respect of the property covered by Ex. D. The appellant will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Time for redemption will be three months from to-day.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 53—Insolvency Court, powers of, to go into question of title—Two years' limitation under s. 53, starting point of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53, scope of.

By the Court--Under s. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, full power is given to the Insolvency Court to decide not only all questions of title or priority, but also of any nature, whatsoever, whether they involve matters of law or of fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognisance of the Court or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice. Therefore, there is nothing to prevent the Insolvency Court from declaring, even though it be at the instance of the Receiver, that certain property belongs to the insolvent and that any other person who is putting forward a claim to it is not really entitled to it. The limitation of two years prescribed under s. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, is applicable to all cases where the transfer when originally made was a good transfer of property though it was subject to an option of avoiding it to be exercised by the receiver, that is to say, to a transfer which is only voidable and not void. [ibid.]

Where an alienation has been effected by a registered deed the period of two years under s. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, is to be counted from the date of execution and not of registration of the deed. [p. 430, col. 1.]

Documents which are voidable under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act, are good in law so long as the option to avoid them is not exercised by the creditors who are defrauded. [p. 430, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This is an appeal by Hari Chand Rai who holds a lease, dated the 27th February 1922, and registered in June following, from the insolvent Lachhman Das, who executed it for himself and as guardian of his minor nephew. So far the interest of the minor is concerned, that does not at all arise in these insolvency proceedings. We have to confine our attention to the interest of the insolvent in the property covered by the lease. Originally the Receiver moved the Court under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, for the annulment of this lease. In the petition however, he alleged that the insolvent, in order to defeat and delay his creditors had executed a fictitious thekanama of a major portion of his property for a nominal sum in favour of his brother-in-law for a period of 20 years. He further alleged that this thekanama was only a paper transaction and was fraudulently executed. The original prayer asked for was its annulment. The lessee, however, objected that no such theka could be annulled under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, inasmuch as it was executed more than two years prior to the application for adjudication. The Receiver had taken up the position that the two years were to be counted from the date of its registration. This was not accepted by the learned Judge, and I have no doubt rightly so. He has held that the theka could not be annulled as a voidable document under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. At the request of the Receiver he treated the application as one under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act for avoiding a transfer, which had been effected with a view to defeat or delay creditors. He, however, went into the question of fact raised by the insolvent, viz., whether the document was really fictitious and a paper transaction, and has recorded a finding that the transaction was a fictitious one. He further found that, although mutation of names had been effected in Revenue papers in favour of Hari Chand Rai, this was a purely fictitious transaction and Lachhman Das himself continued to collect the rents as before. Perhaps it would be convenient to mention a few facts in connection with this lease. It is not disputed that two decrees for a sum aggregating to nearly Rs. 25,000 were in execution against the debtor Lachhman Das, and proceedings taken up to the High Court resulted adversely to Lachhman Das. This lease was executed soon after the termination of these proceedings, while the decrees for the above mentioned amount were still in execution. The lease was in favour of his own brother-in-law and no premium, whatsoever, was paid. It does not appear what urgency or pressure there was for executing this document. The statements of the Patwaris for the three villages covered by the lease show that even subsequent to the execution of this document Lachhman Das continued to realise the rents from tenants and was in effective possession. The gross profits of the property covered by this lease came to about Rs. 1,300; but the net rent reserved was only Rs. 600, out of which Rs. 370 had to be paid as Government Revenue to the lambardar. Neither the lessee, Hari Chand, nor the debtor Lachhman Das has gone into the witness-box to explain under what circumstances this lease had been executed. No account books have been produced by the lessee to indicate that he has been in effective possession of these properties. No doubt, one or two decrees for rent against tenants obtained through the Revenue Court have been produced. But they by themselves would not be conclusive. Having considered the case on the merits, I am satisfied that there is no good reason for differing from the finding of the learned District Judge that this lease was in reality purely fictitious and a paper transaction and did not pass title to the lessee, Hari Chand Rai.

The learned Advocate for the appellant contends before us that it was not open to the Insolvency Court to go into this matter at all. If the petition of the Receiver were to be construed strictly and he were pinned down to the section under which it was made, there may be something to be said in support of this contention; but there is no doubt that allegations made in the petition, although the wrong section was quoted, amounted to an assertion that the transaction was wholly fictitious one and was in no way binding on the insolvent. In view of this circumstance, I am of opinion that the finding of fact arrived at by the District Judge was not improper.

The question remains whether it was open to the Insolvency Court to go into this matter at the instance of the Receiver. The learned Vakil for the respondent has strongly relied on the case of this Court reported as Shikri Prasad v. Aziz Ali (1), where two learned Judges expressed the view that the Insolvency Court has to apply and decide all questions of general law, including such questions as are raised by s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. After expressing this opinion, the learned Judges remanded the case for disposal of the question that was raised. It may, however, be pointed out that documents, which are voidable under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, are good in law so long as the option to avoid them is not exercised by the creditors who are defrauded. A prayer to avoid such voidable documents does not necessarily raise a question of title or of priority mentioned in s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 As to whether it is covered by the wider expression "of any nature whatsoever" I would require further consideration before expressing any final opinion. It, however, seems to me that there is nothing to prevent an Insolvency Court from going into the question of title and holding that a certain document executed by the insolvent is not only voidable but really void, being fictitious. If a document which is never intended to take effect and which in law does not pass title, is void ab initio, the property remains vested in the insolvent and belongs to him. Any person, who puts forward a claim to such property is a claimant to it and raises a question of title. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the Receiver cannot at his own instance have such a question of title decided by an Insolvency Court. Even prior to Act V of 1920, when there was no provision corresponding to s. 4 of the new Act, a Bench of this Court held that, even if a case did not fall under s. 36 of the old Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court had power to inquire whether a disputed property was the property of the insolvent or not; vide Bansidhar v. Kharagjit (2). As pointed out by me in the case of Mahrana Kunwar v. David (3), there was a conflict of opinion between this Court and the Calcutta High Court, the view prevailing in the latter Court being that a question of title could be disposed of by a regular suit only. The enactment of s. 4 gives effect to the view which prevailed in this Court. Under that section, full power is given to the Insolvency Court to decide not only all questions of title or priority, but also of any nature, whatsoever, whether they involve matters of law or of fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognisance of the Court or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice. It seems therefore, that the Insolvency Court has full power to declare, even though it be at the instance of the Receiver, that certain property belongs to the insolvent and that any other person, who is putting forward a claim to it, is not really entitled to it. This by no means implies an annulment of a voidable transfer within the meaning of s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The limitation of two years, prescribed under s. 53 is applicable to all cases where the transfer when originally made was a good transfer of property though it was subject to an option of avoiding it to be exercised by the Receiver. But such a transfer is only voidable and not void and remains good so long as it is not annulled by the Court. On the other hand, a transfer which is wholly fictitious from the very beginning, is of no effect and does not require to be annulled. All that the Court has to do in such a case is to decide that it is void, which decision will bind the claimant to the property as if it were by an ordinary Civil Court. In this view of the matter, I am unable to hold that the Court below has acted without jurisdiction in recording its finding that the transfer is wholly fictitious and not binding on the insolvent or the Receiver.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Mukerjee, J.—While I agree entirely with my learned brother on the question of fact, I have the misfortune to disagree with him on the question of law. I agree that the transaction in the present case was a fictitious one and was only a cloak to protect the insolvent Lachhman Dass's property from being taken in execution of decrees. But the matter does not end there.

The Receiver sought the aid of the Insolvency Court by a petition setting forth that the transaction was voidable as against him and asking that under s. 53 of the Insolvency Act it might be avoided. It was pointed out on behalf of the transferee, the lessee, that the transaction had taken place more than two years prior to the adjudication of the insolvent and that therefore, it was beyond the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court to touch the transfer. The learned Judge was of the same opinion. But he allowed the petition of the Receiver to be treated as a suit under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. He accordingly took cognisance of the petition and having heard the case, came to the conclusion already stated.

I have given the point raised my best consideration and I am clearly of opinion that an Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application of the Receiver to declare an ostensible transfer void within the meaning of s. 53 of the Insolvency Act if the transaction took place more than two years before the adjudication.

It is clear that s. 4 of the Insolvency Act is controlled by the opening words subject to the provisions of this Act. The question is whether an adjudication of a question of title is or is not controlled by the provisions of s. 53 of the Insolvency Act. It has been urged on behalf of the respondent that s. 53 would apply to the case of a transfer which would be good enough, unless challenged by the Receiver but would not apply where the transfer is void ab initio and in fact is fictitious giving no title to the ostensible transferee.

This alleged distinction, in my opinion, does not exist so far as s. 53 of the Insolvency Act is concerned. All that it lays down is this that a Receiver can ask the Insolvency Court to declare as of no effect certain transactions which appear to be on the face of them transfers. The section has nothing to do with the distinction between a transaction which is void ab initio and a transaction which is voidable at the option of a party. Indeed, in the case of transfers by debtors, either they are meant to operate bona fide or they are meant to be mere cloaks for the protection of debtor's property. So far as I am aware there is no third class. Either the property is to be protected from the creditors or the property is to be taken by the ostensible transferee as under a real transfer. Where a transfer is meant to be good and is bona fide no title whatever remains in the transferor, the debtor, and the property passes beyond the control of the debtor and also of the Receiver in insolvency. Where the transfer is a mere cloak for the protection of the debtor's property, the creditors and also the Receiver can seek proper remedy for a declaration of the character of the transfer. The question is as to the forum where the creditor or the Receiver will seek his remedy. In my opinion s. 53 of the Insolvency Act declares that so far as the Receiver is concerned he can seek the relief in the Insolvency Court, provided the transaction is within two years as already mentioned. If the transaction is beyond two years he must seek his remedy by an ordinary civil suit instituted under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

As for authority. The only authority that has been produced before us by the learned Counsel for the Receiver is the case of Shikri Prasad v. Aziz Ali (1). In that case no distinction, as has been sought to be drawn on behalf of the respondent, was drawn. The case decided that it was open to an Insolvency Court to try question raised under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Court was not called upon to decide what would be the effect of s. 53 of the Insolvency Act in particular cases. In my opinion this case is no authority on the question which we have now to decide. On the other hand in the case of Gaura v. Muhammad Abdul Majid (4) two learned Judges of this Court [one of whom composed the Bench which decided the case in Shikri Prasad v. Aziz Ali (1)], held that where the transaction was more than two years' old, it was not open to the Insolvency Court to scrutinise it under the provisions of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is true that the learned Judges considered the provisions of s. 36 of the Insolvency Act of 1907 and they had not to construe the present Act. But, in my opinion, that is no distinction, because s. 53 of the present Insolvency Act is a pure re-production of the old s. 36 of Act of 1907 and s. 4 of the present Act is subject to the provisions of s. 53.

I may point out that if the question of limitation and jurisdiction that has been raised in this case has to be determined after a trial on the merits of the question raised, no utility will be left for a section like s. 53 of the Insolvency Act. One party, the Receiver, would assert that the transfer is fictitious, pure and simple, and that it did not pass any title to the transferee, and that, therefore, a declaration to that effect should be made by the Court. The other party, the ostensible transferee, would assert that it is a good transfer, and that he has been holding the property for more than two years in good faith. The preliminary question of limitation and jurisdiction cannot be decided without the Court going entirely into the merits of the case and finding whether the transaction is a good one or a bad one. This, I think, could not have been contemplated by the framers of s. 53 of the Insolvency Act.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the Receiver's application with costs.

By the Court.—The appeal is accordingly dismissed, but as it raised a difficult question of law we direct that the parties should bear their own costs of this appeal.

R. L. Appeal dismissed.

Muhammadan Law—Inheritance—Shia Law—Last owner dying heirless—Imam, rights of—Escheat, law of—Sovereign act—Right of suit—Trust in favour of poor Shias—Community, right of, to sue for declaration—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, scope of.

Even if a trust be in favour of poor men of Shia community, the entire community is interested to have the trust declared. [p. 436, col. 2.]

According to Shia Law proper where a Shia dies without leaving any heir his property goes to Imam to be dealt with by him as he pleases. But the practice of the Imam had established a rule which was binding upon the Mujtahids who took the property during the absence of Imam Mehdi on his behalf, and under that practice property was to be distributed among the poor and the indigent. But this rule of inheritance is not in force in British India. In British India any question touching inheritance is determinable in a manner personal to the last owner. But when it is made out clearly that by the law applicable to the last owner there is a total failure of heirs, then the claim to the property ceases to be subject to any personal law, the law of escheat intervenes and prevails. Private ownership not existing, the State must be owner as ultimate Lord. [p. 439, col. 1; p. 440, col. 1.]

Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavely Vencata Narainapah, 8 M. I. A. 500; 2 W. R. P. C. 59; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 417; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 752; 19 E. R. 620, followed.

There is a great and clear distinction between acts done in the exercise of what are usually termed Sovereign powers and acts done in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by private individuals without having such powers delegated to them. [p. 437, col. 1.]

If the Secretary of State takes the property by an act of Sovereignty then no suit lies, but if on the other hand he takes it under the colour of a legal title then his act will be within the jurisdiction of the Courts. When the Secretary of State takes property under a decree of Court, the acquisition is one under the colour of a legal title and not by an act of Sovereignty. [p. 437, col. 2.]

Section 92, C. P. C., regulates suits where there is a breach of an express or constructive trust created for public purpose of a charitable and religious nature but a suit to establish the existence of the trust itself is beyond its ambit. [p. 438, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The first plaintiff was the President of the Anjuman Imamia of the town of Gaya. After his death his widow has been substituted for him. The 2nd plaintiff is the Mufti of the said Anjuman. The plaintiffs sue on their own behalf and on behalf of the Shia community. The defendant is the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The case of the plaintiffs is that one Raja Mode Narain Singh of Tikari in the District of Gaya had a Muhammadan mistress named Barati Begum to whom he granted large moveable and immoveable properties. Barati Begum had four children, Mirza Himmat Bahadur, Mirza Ekbal Bahadur, Bismillah Begum and Sharf-un-nissa Begam. She died on the 16th of February 1860, leaving her surviving the first three of the aforesaid children who belonged to the Shia sect of Muhammadans and succeeded to her property. In respect of one mahal called Taluka Belkhara she had executed a deed of taksimnama in favour of her children. Mirza Ekbal Bahadur was in possession of properties yielding an income of more than a lakh of rupees. He married Sahebzadi Begum, a lady of Benares, and died childless in 1867, his properties passing to his widow. He had brought up as his own son the son of his sister named Mirza Jalal-ud-din Bakht Bahadur, and Sahebzadi Begum executed a deed of gift of all her properties in his favour in 1872. She died in Karbala in 1875. In 1878 a suit was insituted by the Secretary of State for India in Council against Mirza Jalal-ud-din Bakht Bahadur in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya for the recovery of the entire estate of Mirza Ekbal Bahadur and of Sahebzadi Begum on the ground that Mirza Ekbal Bahadur being the son of a Hindu Raja could not succeed under the Shia Law to the estate of his mother Barati Begum; and that, as he died childless under the Shia Law his widow could not succeed to his estate; and, therefore, the deed of gift in favour of Mirza Jalal-ud din Bakht Bahadur was invalid. On the 7th of May 1879 the suit was decreed for possession of the immoveable properties and dismissed as regards the moveables. The plaintiff in that suit obtained possession of the immoveable properties. The judgment in that suit is made part of the plaint and it is pleaded that no regard has been paid to the finding recited in the plaint. Immediately after the decision of the case the Secretary of State got possession over all the immoveable properties. The plaintiffs contend that while they have no objection to the right of the Government to hold possession of the estate, the escheated estate is a trust property for the benefit of the Shia community and that the Government is bound to apply the income to pious and religious purposes as enjoined by the Shia Law. It is alleged that under the Muhammadan Law of the Shia sect no Shia dies heirless for the last Imam named Hazrat Imam Mehdi is the heir when there is no natural heir, and that this position was admitted by the Secretary of State for India in the aforesaid litigation. It is further alleged that the Anjuman Imamia of Gaya exists from 1892 and represents the whole Shia community in the district and the Anjuman and the plaintiffs as beneficiaries under the trust. It is also stated that a memorial was submitted to the Governor of Bihar and Orissa in Council for a grant for religious purposes out of the income of the trust estate and that the memorial was rejected and that at a meeting of the Anjuman Imamia held on the 10th of December 1922 the plaintiffs have been authorised to institute this suit. The cause of action is the disregard of the defendant to spend the income of the trust estate according to the Shia Law and it is a recurring cause of action. The date of the refusal of the Government to entertain the memorial of the Anjuman, namely, the 12th of August 1922, is stated as the date of the cause of action. The bulk of the trust estate, namely, the Mahal Belkhara is situated in the District of Gaya. The plaintiffs pray for a declaration that the escheated estate described in the schedules to the plaint is a trust property for the benefit of the Shias in general and of the Shia community of Gaya in particular; for an injunction restraining the defendant and his Government from using the income of the trust estate for any purpose other than that enjoined by the Shia Law: for costs and for general relief.

The defence is that the plaint is insufficiently stamped; that the suit is barred by limitation; that the defendant has been in possession of the properties in suit as full owner for upwards of 40 years; and that no Shia ever put forth any claim on any ground to the same. It is denied that the estate is a trust estate and that the plaintiffs or other Shias have any interest of any sort in the properties in suit or have any cause of action against the defendant. It is alleged that the defendant is not a trustee and is incapable of being a trustee; that he did not get the properties in suit under the Shia Law, but under the law of escheat and that he has been in possession of the escheated estate as absolute owner and not as trustee; that Barati Begum, Sharaf-un-nissa Begum and Mirza Ekbal Bahadur died heirless and their properties escheated to the Crown; that the properties were claimed in 1878 in suits against Jalal-ud-din Bakht Bahadur and Bismillah Begum and Mirza Himmat Bahadur not on the strength of the Shia Law but on the law of escheat and that the title of the Crown under the law of escheat was declared and possession was decreed and that the Court rejected the plea that the Imam Mehdi was the heir and that the Mujtahids were entitled to possession. It is pleaded that the plaintiffs' interpretation of the judgment is not correct. It is further pleaded that the religious and moral injunctions and directions of the Shia Law are not binding on and enforceable against the defendant; that the income of the properties cannot be spent according to the Shia Law; and that the Anjuman and the plaintiffs and other Shias are not beneficiaries and are not interested in the properties in suit. In a supplementary written statement it is pleaded that the suit is not maintainable without compliance with the provisions of s. 92 of the C. P. C. and that it is barred as res judicata. In a further supplementary written statement it is pleaded that five properties specified therein had been transferred to other persons who were necessary parties and that the defendant has no interest in them and the suit is barred in respect thereof by general and special limitation.

The following issues were framed:—

1. Has the claim been undervalued? Is the Court-fee insufficient?
2. If the cause of action recurrent? If so, to what extent? Is the suit barred by limitation?
3. Is the suit barred by the principle of res judicata?
4. Are the plaintiffs entitled to maintain the suit?
5. Does the suit lie against the Secretary of State for India in Council as agent of the Sovereign?
6. Does the suit infringe the provisions of s. 92 of the C. P. C.?
7. Is the Imam Mehdi the legal heir, under the Shia Law, of a Shia dying without natural heirs? Was this not found in the judgment of the 7th May 1879 annexed to the plaint? Was this not admitted by the plaintiff in the suit?

8. If so, does the defendant hold the property in suit to the use of the Shia community until the Imam Mehdi appears?

9. Has the defendant obtained the said property under the general law of escheat, free from the restrictions of the Shia Law, by the aforesaid judgment or otherwise?

10. Is the defendant capable of being a trustee? If not, is the suit maintainable against him?

11. To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled?

Before discussing the issues it may be mentioned here that by an order, dated the 16th of January 1924, an application under O. I, r. 8 for permission to sue on behalf of the Shias generally who are interested in the subject-matter of the suit and also for notice of the institution of the suit being given to all the persons interested was granted and notice was duly given in the usual way.

Issue No. 1.—This issue has been decided in favour of the plaintiffs by order, dated the 6th February 1924 which is to be read as part of this judgment.

Issue No. 2.—From the plaint in the present suit it would appear that Taluka Belkhara was the subject of a deed of taksimnama executed by Barati Begum. This is stated in para. 4. In para. 18 of the written statement while certain of the allegations of para. 4 of the plaint were traversed, there was no denial of this taksimnama; and for the purposes of this suit the allegation in the plaint must be accepted, although no document has been produced and, so far as I can discover in the litigation of 1878 there was no reference to any such instrument. Barati Begum died in 1860. As no trust was set up, time began to run from that date; and, as regards the estate other than Taluka Belkhara which was the subject of the taksimnama, the title of the Shia community, if any, became barred long before the suits of 1878 gave the property to the Secretary of State. As regards Taluka Belkhara time began to run as to the share of Ekbal Bahadur from the 15th of August 1867 when he died. The property became vested in the Secretary of State on the 7th of May 1879. It was stated in the argument by the learned Vakil for the defendant that possession was not taken until the year 1881, but this does not appear to be correct. On the contrary the plaintiffs said in their present plaint that immediately after the decision of the case the decree was executed and the Secretary of State for India in Council got possession over all the immoveable properties claimed by him. The original record has been sent for from the record room of the Calcutta High Court and it appears from the petitions of compromise filed in the appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 8th of June 1880, that the Secretary of State had already executed the decree and obtained possession. There is, therefore, no material for holding that possession was not obtained until more than twelve years had expired from the date of the death of Ekbal Bahadur; and as regards the interests of Himmat Bahadur and Bismillah Begum in the taksimnama properties it is clear that, as they were alive when the suits of 1878 were decided, time had not begun to run in respect of their interests when the Secretary of State entered into possession. With regard to the taksimnama properties, therefore the question of limitation must be decided with reference to s. 10 of the Limitation Act. The argument of the plaintiffs is that as to this part of the property they are protected by s. 10 of the Limitation Act: (s. 23 was also referred to, but that has obviously no application.) Now by pleading limitation the defendant admits that the Shias once had title, but it has been lost by lapse of time. The plea, therefore, is in this form that the property was trust property but not property held in trust for a specific purpose. In Burdick v. Garrick (1) Giffard, L. J., said "I do not hesitate to say that where the duty of persons is to receive property, and to hold it for another, and to keep it until it is called for, they cannot discharge themselves from that trust by appealing to the lapse of time. They can only discharge themselves by handing over that property to somebody entitled to it." In Lyell v. Kennedy (2). Lord Macnaghten in adopting that dictum said "Nor do I think it can make any difference whether the duty arises from contract or is so connected with some previous request, or whether it is self-imposed and undertaken without any authority whatever. If it be established that the duty has in fact been undertaken and that property has been received by a person assuming to act in a fiduciary character, the same consequences must, I think, in every case follow." The determination of this question will, therefore, depend upon (1) whether the Shia Law impressed a definite trust upon this property; and (2) whether under the judgment of 1879 the Secretary of State took the property with notice of that trust. The result, therefore, is that with regard to the property in suit except Taluka Belkhara the suit is barred by limitation and, whether as regards Taluka Belkhara it is also barred, will depend upon the decision of the issues on the merits.

Issue No. 3.—The suit is not barred by the principle of res judicata as it is not between the same parties in the suits of 1878.

Issue No. 4—The plaintiffs sue on behalf of the entire Shia community. In order to conduct the action the plaintiffs must represent the class. They have been permitted to sue as representing the class. They must also give an opportunity to the class to say whether the class wants to be represented by them. This has been done by the notice under O. I, r. 8. But learned Counsel for the defendant contends that as representing the entire Shia community the plaintiffs cannot be said to represent the Shia poor in particular (who are the true cestuis que trustent) and that the Shia poor have a hostile right to the general Shia community. It is contended that a claim on behalf of the Shia in general cannot be joined with a claim on behalf of the Shia poor because their interests are necessarily conflicting. The principle governing representative actions is thus stated by Lord Macnaghten in Duke of Bedford v. Ellis (3) "Given a common interest and a common grievance, a representative suit was in order if the relief sought was in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposed to represent." Now while it is true that community of interest is the essence of a representative action, and an order appointing a person to represent a class does not affect one of the class who has a distinct and independent right in another capacity [In re Lart (4) and Daniel's Chancery Practice, 8th Edition, 869] yet it seems to me that so far as the present suit is concerned it is a suit for a declaration of trust and in this matter the interests of all Shias are identical. It may be that if there is a trust it is the poor Shias who are the beneficiaries, but the entire Shia community is interested to have the trust declared even if it be a trust in favour of the Shia poor, and in this matter it seems to me impossible to distinguish, or to infer a conflicting interest, between those who are actually poor and those who are only potentially so. I would, therefore, decide this issue in favour of the plaintiffs.

Issue No. 5.—The statutory provisions relevant to this issue are s. 79 of the C. P. C. and s. 32 of the Government of India Act. Section 32 provides that every person shall have the same remedies against the Secretary of State for India in Council as he might have had against the East India Company if the Government of India Act, 1858, and this Act had not been passed, and that the property for the time being vested in His Majesty for the purposes of the Government of India shall be liable to the same judgments and executions as it would have been liable to in respect of liabilities lawfully incurred by the East India Company if the Government of India Act, 1858, and this Act had not been passed. The question of the liability of the Secretary of State for India in Council to an action in the Municipal Courts was discussed in the Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Company v. Secretary of State for India (5) where Barnes Peacock, C. J., said: "In determining the question whether the East India Company would, under the circumstances, have been liable to an action, the general principles applicable to Sovereigns and States, and the reasoning deduced from the maxim of the English Law that the King can do no wrong, would have no force. We concur entirely in the opinion expressed by Chief Justice Grey in the case of Bank of Bengal v. East India Company (6) which was cited in the argument, that the fact of the Company's having been invested with powers usually called Sovereign powers did not constitute them Sovereigns." We are further of opinion that the East India Company were not Sovereigns, and, therefore, could not claim all the exemptions of a Sovereign, and that they were not the public servants of Government, and, therefore, did not fall under the principle of the cases with regard to the liabilities of such persons, but they were a Company to whom Sovereign powers were delegated, and who traded on their own account and for their own benefit, and were engaged in transactions partly for the purposes of the Government and partly on their own account, which without any delegation of Sovereign rights, might be carried on by private individuals. There is a great and clear distinction between acts done in the exercise of what are usually termed Sovereign powers and acts done in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by private individuals without having such powers delegated to them Moodaley v. East India Company (7). But the Master of the Rolls, afterwards Lord Kenyon, said: "I admit that no suit will lie in this Court against a Sovereign power for anything done in that capacity but I do not think the East India Company is within the rule. They have rights as a Sovereign power, they have also duties as individuals"......But where the act is done or a contract is entered into in the exercise of powers usually called Sovereign powers, by which we mean powers which cannot be lawfully exercised except by Sovereign or private individuals delegated by a Sovereign to exercise them, no action will lie." The same principle was laid down in the [Raja of Tanjore's case] Secretary of State for India v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba (8) where the question was put thus: "The next question is, what is the real character of the act done in this case? Was it a seizure by arbitrary power on behalf of the Crown of Great Britain of the dominions and property of a neighbouring State, an act not affecting to justify itself on grounds of Municipal Law? Or was it, in whole or in part, a possession taken by the Crown under colour of legal title of the property of the late Raja of Tanjore in trust for those who, by law, might be entitled to it on the death of the last possessor?" Similarly in Forester v. Secretary of State for India in Council (9) it was held that the resumption was not an act of State. It was the "resumption of lands previously held from the Government under a particular tenure, upon the alleged determination of that tenure. The possession was taken under colour of a legal title, that title being the undoubted right of the Sovereign power to resume, and retain or assess to the public revenue, all lands within its territories upon the determination of the tenure, under which they may have been exceptionally held rent-free. If by means of the continuance of the tenure or for other cause a right be claimed in derogation of this title of the Government that claim, like any other arising between the Government and its subjects would prima facie be cognizable by the Municipal Courts of India" Sirdar Bhagwan Singh v. Secretary of State for India (10) was a case where the act of Government was done in accordance with the notions of the Government of what was just and reasonable and not according to any rules of law to be enforced against them by their own Courts.

These decisions make it clear that if the Secretary of State took the property in suit in this case by an act of Sovereignty, then no suit will lie, but if, on the other hand, he took it under the colour of a legal title, then his acts will be within the jurisdiction of the Courts. As the property came to the Secretary of State by a decree of the Court it would seem that it was not taken by an act of Sovereignty, but under the colour of a legal title. It was said, however, that the property came by escheat, that is by the prerogative of the Crown and, therefore, by an act of Sovereignty. This argument, however, involves the question which arises on the merits as to the nature of the estate taken by the Secretary of State under the judgment of 1879. It was futher contended on behalf of the defendant that no suit could have been brought against the East India Company in respect of property taken by escheat and referenc was made to Regulation No. XIX of 1910 which deals with the custody and disposal of escheat. By that Regulation a right of suit is reserved in respect of lands and buildings of the nature described therein and it is said that no right of suit is reserved with regard to escheats. But this merely repeats the former argument and the answer to this contention depends upon the merits of the case. Reference was aslo made on behalf of the defence to s. 20 of the Government of India Act which provides that the revenues of India shall be received for and in the name of His Majesty and shall be applied for the purposes of the Government of India alone, and the expression "revenues of India" is defined as including all moveable and immoveable properties of British India escheating or lapsing for want of an heir or successor and of property in British India devolving as bona vacantia for want of a rightful owner. This argument does not advance the matter further as its validity also involves the question of the nature of the estate taken by the Secretary of State in the property in suit. The answer to this issue, therefore, depends upon the decision on the merits of the case.

Issue No. 6—In my opinion s. 92 of the C. P. C. is not applicable to the present suit. Section 92 regulates suits where there is a breach of an express or constructive trust created for public purpose of a charitable and religious nature; but here the suit is to establish the existence of the trust itself and the whole question involved is whether such a trust exists or not. In my opinion, a suit of this nature is not within the purview of s. 92 of the Code. This issue is decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Issues Nos. 7, 8 and 9—In dealing with these issues it will be convenient in the first place to ascertain what the law of the Shias is with regard to the heirship of the Imam. The principal modern authorities are as follows: In Baillie's Digest of Muhammadan Law, Imameea, at page 261 the scheme of inheritance under the Shia Law is set forth "Inheritance is founded on nusub or consanguinity and on subub or special connection." One of the forms of subub is wula or dominion and the last form of wula is the wula of Imamut or headship of the Musalman community. At page 301 the rule is laid down that where there is no surety for offences (that is the second form of wula) the Imam is the heir of a person who has no other heirs, and this is the third kind of wula. If then the Imam be present, the property belongs to him to do with it as he pleases. Aly, on whom the peace, was accustomed in such cases to give the property to the poor and indigent of the deceased's city and the weak and infirm among his neighbours gratuitously. And if the Imam is absent, the property is to be divided among the poor and indigent, and not be given up or surrendered to any other but a righteous Sultan or ruler, except under fear or actual compulsion. It may be explained here that by all the followers of the twelve Imams Imam Mehdi their twelfth and last spiritual as well as temporal leader, is believed to be still living, but to have retired from human observation since his last appearance on earth (ib page 272 foot-note). The wula of the Imam or Doctrine of escheat to the Public Treasury is more fully explained at pages 362 and 363 where the authorities are cited which prescribe the partition of the property among the poor and indigent of the Shia sect in the same manner as they enjoy the fifth of the spoils taken in battle. Mr. Shamma Churun Sircar in his Tagore Law Lectures, 1874 at page 264, discusses the wula of Imamat and lays down, quoting the authorities that if the Imam be present the property goes to him to do with it as he pleases and that the most approved opinion is that the property thus vested in the Imam should, while he is absent, be distributed among the Sayyids who are his descendants, preference, nevertheless being given to such of them as are poor and indigent. Several authorities are quoted, including the Sharaya-ul-Islam, to show that the property should be distributed among the poor and indigent. Mr. Ameer Ali in Volume II of his Muhammadan Law 4th Edition, at pages 132 to 134 discusses the Walaul Imam. In his view the right of the Imam is not in the nature of an escheat to the Sovereign, but the property goes to him as the spiritual head of the Shia Commonwealth to be distributed among the poor and indigent of the locality where the intestate lived, or where he was born, and in the absence of the Imam the property goes to his representative the Mujtahid, the chief expounder of the law, to be distributed by him equitably and properly among the poor and indigent of the place where the intestate lived or for such charitable and religious purposes as may seem consonant to his last wishes. The right of the Imam is not qua Sovereign, but qua Spiritual Leader, and is, therefore, subject to the ordinary bar of the Statute of Limitation. The learned Author, after quoting a Fatwa pronounced by a leading Mujtahid of Iran, goes on to say.

"In Shia countries not subject to foreign control the Mujtahid who is the chief expounder of the law, is also frequently vested with the power of the Kazi. When this is the case no difficulty occurs in the application of the principle of Shia Law. But in India, where the Shias are subject to a non-Moslem power, the question may arise under whose directon the distribution contemplated by the Shia Law should take place? These questions it seems to me are answered by the dictum quoted from the Jama-ush-Shittat. The Civil Court, representing the Hakim mentioned in the Fatwa, would assume the charge of the property and make it over to the Mujtahid, if there be any, to be distributed among the poor and indigent of the deceased's village, or native city under the Court's own control and supervision so as to leave no room for doubt as to its proper application. If there be no Mujtahid, some Shia officer should be appointed for the purpose of distribution. It must also be remembered that the law does not necessarily contemplate application of the proceeds in the shape of alms. If the object of the law which has in view the benefit of the poor and the indigent, who are always in need of help, can be attained by establishing an institution by which regular assistance can be rendered to them, it would be valid." Sir Roland Wilson in his Anglo Muhammadan Law (First Edition, page 378) deals with the difference in the Shia Law of inheritance from the Hanifi Law by which the property of Muhammadan dying without heirs devolves upon the Government and says that "the surplus does not return to the wife even where there are no other heirs but passes by escheat, in Shia theory to the Imam, and according to Anglo Mahammadan Law, to the British Government." It is noteworthy, however, that in the last Edition (that is, the 5th Edition) of this work which has been revised by Mr. Yusuf Ali, this qualification is omitted. It is simply stated at page 451 that "there is no final escheat to a bait-ul-mal." Where a deceased person leaves no possible heir, his property is liquidated by the Mujtahid as representing the Imam, the proceeds to be distributed among the poor of the city in which the deceased was born (or presumably, where that is impracticable, where he died).

The learned Subordinate Judge of Gaya in his judgment in the suits of 1878 cited numerous original authorities, Shurra-al-Islam, Mustanid-ul Sheea, Mansubood, Mussalik-ul-efham and Zeinul-ul-ehakam ; and on a review of these authorities he came to the conclusion that the majority of the traditions concur and agree that the property of a Shia should be received by Sayyids, the poor and the indigent especially of Shia sect.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs cited also the following passages from texts of authority (1) Mustanad Shia, on Jurisprudence by Ahmad b. Muhammad b. Mahdi b. Abi Darr, Vol. II, Juzv, 26, the Book of Inheritance, Chapter IV, Edited in Tehran Rajab A. H. 1273. (2) Sharai-ul-Islam, page 267 by Abu'l Qasim Najm-ud-Din Jafar b. Muhammad b. Yahya b, Said-al-Hilli, also known as alMuhaqquiq (the Scholar), who died in A. H. 676=A. D. 1275. (3) Jawahir-ul Kalam-fi-Sharh-i-Sharai-ul-Islam by Muhammad Hasan b. Baquir an Najafi. Book of Inheritance Vol. VI; (4) Najat-ul-Ibad, page 400 on the heirship of the Imam and (1) Copy of an Istifa (Precept) in connection with the property of one who has no heir, taken from the book entitled Jami's Shattah by Abdul Qasim Alib Abdul Hamid-al-Quami; (2) Jawahir-ul-Kalam Vol. VI. The Book of Inheritance; (3) Najat-ul-Ibad by the Author of Jawahir-ul-Kalam. Edition of A. H. 1318 page 404, (4) Ar-Rahdat-ul-Bahiyah by Zainud-Din b. Ali Al-Amili, who died, A. H. 966-A. D. 1558 and (5) Mustanadush-Shia Vol. II on the mode of dealing with property left without heirs.

These authorities make it clear that the last heir of a Shia leaving no other heirs is the Imam; and that the Imam being infallible could dispose of the property as he pleased. But the practice of the Imams had established a rule which was binding upon the Mujtahids who took the property during the absence of the Imam Mehdi on his behalf; and under that practice the property was to be distributed among the poor and indigent. There is some difference of opinion as to whether the beneficiaries were to be Sayyids, especially poor Sayyids or whether they were to be the poor and indigent, whether Sayyids or not, and whether they were to be the poor of the native town of the deceased or the poor of the place where he resided or the poor of the place where he died, or of all these places, or whether they were to be poor Shias generally. While, therefore, it is clearly the intention of the Shia Law that the property should be devoted to the poor and indigent, there is some vagueness as to the persons who are intended to be benefited; and in some of the authorities the matter is left to the discretion of the Vicegerent of the Imam.

I now turn to consider the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya in the suits of 1878; and, in order to ascertain the effect of his decision on Issue No. 2 in these suits, it will be convenient first to deal with the decision of the Judicial Committee in Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavely Vencata Narrainapah (11). That was a case dealing with the estate of a Brahmin dying without heirs and the matter which called for consideration was the effect of the prohibition in the Hindu Law "If there be no heir of a Brahmin's wealth, on his demise it must be given to a Brahmin, otherwise the King is tainted with sin". The Judicial Committee first of all discussed the question as one to be determined merely by Hindu Law; and it was held that according to Hindu Law the title of the King by escheat to the property of a Brahmin dying without heirs ought, as in any other case, to prevail against any claimant who could not show a better title, and that the only question that arose upon the authorities was whether Brahmanical property, so taken, was, in the hands of the King, subject to a trust in favour of Brahmins. Their Lordships then proceeded to say that they were not satisfied that the Suddar Court was not in error when it treated the appellant's claim as wholly or merely determinable by Hindu Law. They conceived that the title which he set up might rest upon grounds of general or universal law. They pointed out that any question touching inheritance is determinable in a manner personal to the last owner; but when it is made out clearly that by the law applicable to the last owner there is a total failure of heirs, then the claim to the land ceases, they apprehend, to be subject to any such personal law. And as all property not dedicated to certain religious trusts must have some legal owner, and there can be, legally speaking, no unowned property, the law of escheat intervenes and prevails and is adopted generally in all the Courts of the country alike. Private ownership not existing, the State must be owner as ultimate Lord.

Their Lordships, further, held that the Suddar Court was in error in applying the actual or supposed Hindu Law (which negatives the King's right to Brahmanical property) in derogation of the general right of the British Sovereignty, and they came to the conclusion in favour of the general right to the Crown to take by escheat the land of a Hindu subject, though a Brahmin, dying without heirs and they thought that the claim of the appellant to the zemindari in question (subject or not subject to a trust) ought to prevail.

There are, therefore, three grounds for the decision; in the first place, supposing the case to be governed by Hindu Law, then the King must take as, at least, intermediate holder of the property, in the second place, where there is no heir under the personal law, the personal law ceases to govern the case and the King takes by the general law of escheat; and, in the third place, the personal law cannot be applied in derogation of the general right of the British Sovereignty.

Now it seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge has followed closely the line of reasoning in that case. He first of all sets forth the Shia Law on the heirship of the Imam. During the absence of the Imam the property is to be held by his deputy, the Mujtahid. There is no Mujtahid in British India with the powers required. "On the contrary, as regards this estate, in the absence of the Imam the most influential, honest and faithful person is the Sovereign for the time being, that is, the Queen-Empress. It is most likely that she on receipt of possession of this estate, shall use it for good purposes in the way that she thinks best". This line of reasoning seems to correspond with the first part of the decision of the Privy Council. Then he goes on to say that this line of reasoning is inapplicable because the defendants in these suits were not entitled to raise objections for or on behalf of the Imam or Mujtahid and they, at all events, had no title. He then holds that, apart from this, in this matter the plaintiff, that is, the Secretary of State, is not bound by the religious books of the Shia sect. When the defendants had no right, there was no heir to the estate. That being so the Sovereign for the time being is under the general law of escheat entitled to take possession. He then points out the analogy between this case and the case of a Brahmin dying without heirs, and as the principle of the Hindu Law could not prevent the Government for the time being from taking the estate under the general law of escheat, in like manner the doctrine of the Muhammadan Law could not bar the plaintiff's claim. "In this age the Government should, in my opinion, be held as the last heir just in the same way as the Imam has been declared the last heir in the Shurra". That this is the scheme of the judgment is apparent also from the form of the issue framed. "According to the general law and the law of the Shias (Kanunan o'Sharan) who is entitled to take the estate of a Musalman of the Shia sect who has no issue nor relation entitled to the estate?"

The argument of the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs is that the Subordinate Judge found title to be in the Imam. He then looked for some one to hold the property and that must mean some one to hold it with the obligation of a Mujtahid. The Crown was selected because it was honest and the Crown must, therefore, take the property with the conditions of the Shia law attached and has freedom only within the ambit of Shia purposes. The estate had vested in a heir who could not take possession; he was not present to perform his obligations; the deficiency was to be made up by the Sovereign. The Subordinate Judge did not hold that title went to the Secretary of State, but he got the estate in accordance with the principles of the Shia Law. The Secretary of State in the plaint had based his claim to the property explicitly on the Shia Law, and that in two respects: "By the Imamia Code of Muhammadan Law an illegitimate child has no nusub or parentage and is not an heir of his mother. By this law, therefore, neither Himmat Bahadur, Ekbal Bahadur or Bismillah Begum were the heirs of Barratee and as Barati Begum left no other heirs her surviving the properties possessed by her at the time of her death passed in default of other heirs by escheat to the Crown" (para. 8) "Under the Imamia Code of Muhammadan Law by which the family of Ekbal Bahadur was governed, Sahebzadee Begum being a childless widow was not entitled to inherit any portion of the immoveable property of her late husband and as Ekbal Bahadur was himself an illegitimate child and had no issue of his body the whole of his immoveable property and 12 annas of his moveable property escheated on his death to the Crown "(para. 12). It is clear that whatever claim the Secretary of State may have had on principles of general or universal law to the property other than the taksimnama property, he had no such claim to the taksimnama property and his claim to that property so far as Ekbal Bahadur's share was concerned was based wholly on the peculiar provision of the Shia Law that a childless widow is not a heir. There is, therefore, great force in the argument of the plaintiffs that inasmuch as the Secretary of State took the property, or at least the taksimnama property, under the peculiar provisions of the Shia Law, he should hold it under that law. But the argument is not conclusive. By the personal law governing the parties the estate was strictly heirless (apart from the claim of the Imam), the persons holding it had no title to it. The Crown was, therefore, entitled to come in under the general law and to hold the estate. As regards the heirship of the Imam, there was, in the words of the Privy Council, no person in the nature of an heir capable of succeeding," and on this ground also the Crown was entitled to come in. It is clear that no trust was imposed upon the Secretary of State by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The question of the heirship of the Imam was discussed only as a theoretical question, because it was definitely held that the defendants in these suits were not entitled to raise it. No trust, therefore, could have been imposed by the judgment because there was no one to set up any trust.

It was also argued that the second ground of decision in Collector of Muslipatam v. Cavaly Venkata Narrainapah (11) cannot apply to the present case, because in fact there is an heir and consequently there can be no escheat under the general law. But the question is whether there was anyone in the nature of an heir capable of holding the property; and the answer to this question must be in the negative. And the analogy with Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Venkata Narrainapah(11) is complete because in the case of a Brahmin dying without heirs the Mitakshara repeatedly describes the other Brahmins as his "heirs." Consequently a Brahmin dying without natural heirs is no more heirless than a Shia.

Then apart from the judgment, does the Secretary of State hold this property impressed with a trust? This raises the questions, who is the trustee? And who is the cestuique trust? If there is substance in the plaintiffs' contention, then the Secretary of State occupies the position of the Mujtahid. But the Mujtahid is not a trustee for the poor and indigent; he is agent of the Imam. If it be assumed that the Imam could give directions, and by law has given directions, to his deputy to distribute the estate, which is in the nature of spoils, this would not establish the relation of trustee and cestuiqui trust between the deputy and the poor. The law binding upon the deputy would not create a trust enforceable by the Court for the benefit of the poor [see Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India (12).] There was no means of enforcing the law against the Mujtahid and there is, in my opinion, no ground in the Shia Law for holding that the present claim can be enforced against the Secretary of State. On these grounds, therefore, I think that these issues must be decided against the plaintiffs (1) the trust set up is, on the texts, vague and not enforceable, (2) no trust was imposed by the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge awarding possession of the property to the Secretary of State; and (3) no relation of trustee and cestui que trust exists between the parties.

Reference was made in the argument to the practice of the Crown in England in the matter of re-granting escheated lands. "Property which has escheated to the Crown may in certain cases be granted to the family of, or to persons adopted as part of the family of, the person whose estates the same have been" (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. II, page 27). This is a matter, however, which rests in the discretion of the Government alone.

Issue No. 10. That the Secretary of State is capable of being a trustee is indisputable. In the Secretary of State for India v. Guru Proshad Dhur (13), Piggot, J., said "It need not be discussed whether or not the East India Company could be a trustee. It is certain that it could be and often was." See also Secretary of State for India v. Radhika Prasad Bapuli (14). This issue is decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Issue No. 11. No injunction could in any view be granted as the effect would merely be to hold up the property without imposing any duty. On the findings on the above Issues Nos. 7 to 9, the plaintiffs are not entitled to any declaration and, therefore, to no relief.

The suit must, therefore, be dismissed; but, in view of the importance of the question that has been raised and of the fact that the plaintiffs did not raise it for their own benefit, I think that the costs of both parties should come out of the estate; hearing-fee Rs. 1,000 per diem, for seven days.

Das, J.—I agree.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1379 OF 1923.

February 23, 1926.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji.

GAURI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS —APPELLANTS

MANGLA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 76 (e)—Mortgagee's duty to mortgagor—Suit for redemption—Mortgagee setting up occupancy rights—Estoppel.

A mortgagee is precluded from doing anything which might put a hinderance to the redemption of the property. Therefore, in a suit for redemption a mortgagee cannot be allowed to set up occupancy rights even if his mortgagee rights have passed to third parties under an auction-sale.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarnagar, dated the 6th August 1923.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. C. Mital, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a nice question of law and on the point there does not appear to be any clear authority. The respondent No. 1 brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for recovery of a certain plot of land over which there is a grove by way of redemption. He alleged an ancient mortgage said to have been made by his father Kallu in the year 1863 for a sum of Rs. 500 in favour of three persons, Dewan, Yad Ram and Kanhaiya, being the ancestors of the defendants Nos. 3 to 7. It is common ground that out of the entire area mortgaged the mortgagees made a sub-mortgage, in favour of certain persons, of all but the plot in suit, for a sum of Rs. 400. The sub-mortgage has been redeemed by the plaintiff and only the plot in suit remained unredeemed. The mortgagee interest of the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 was sold by auction on the 21st of January 1878 to the father of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiff impleaded all the seven persons in his suit, viz., defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as the auction-purchasers of the rights of the descendants of the original mortgagees and also the descendants of the original mortgagees themselves. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 contested the suit separately. The common defence was that there was no mortgage and the special defence of the defendants Nos. 3 to 7, some of whom are the appellants before me, was that they were occupancy tenants of the plot in suit and even in the case of redemption they could not be ousted.

The suit has succeeded in both the Courts below. They both found the mortgage established and subsisting.

In this Court the learned Counsel for the appellants has taken virtually two points, viz., (1) the mortgage has not been established, and (2) in any case the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 were tenants and could not be ousted in spite of their redemption. As an argument relating to the second point it was urged that the Courts below ought to have taken proceedings under s. 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Taking the first point first. The ground No. 2, viz., the evidence of Bhagwan is not legally sufficient to prove the mortgage was taken because of the rather meagre grounds given by the lower Appellate Court for coming to the conclusion that the mortgage had been proved. The Court of first instance deals with the entire evidence in full and it shows that there was sufficient material from which the existence of the mortgage could be inferred lawfully. It appears that there is a village record of the year 1254*F*. (corresponding to 1848 and not 1833) and it does not mention any mortgage by Kallu although it does mention another mortgage by a different person. In the Settlement Record of 1863 the mortgage in question is mentioned in all its details. It would be a reasonable inference to draw that between these two dates, viz., 1848 and 1863 the mortgage in question was made. Then comes the acknowledgment of 1876 in the deed of sub-mortgage. I hold that there was sufficient material before the Courts below for the purpose of holding that there was a mortgage of 1863 and that it did subsist at the date of the suit. The next question is whether the lower Courts should have directed the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 to institute a suit in the Revenue Court to obtain a declaration that they are occupancy tenants of the land in suit. The Courts below have not gone into this question, they being of opinion that the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 were estopped from raising any plea which would disentitle the plaintiff from recovering what is his own. I think the Courts were right. The position taken up by the learned Counsel for the appellants before me, was this. He alleged that after the mortgagee interest of the ancestors of the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 passed to the father of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the 21st of January 1878, the ancestors of the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 (the mortgagees) took the land from the auction-purchaser as a tenant, cultivated the same, acquired an occupancy tenancy and then planted the grove. It is said that it was a pure accident that the original mortgagees themselves took the land for cultivation instead of some other person. The argument is that if instead of the original mortgagees themselves somebody else had obtained a letting of the land and had acquired an occupancy right in the land it could not be said that he was a necessary party to the suit and that he should be ejected. The argument no doubt has some force, but in my opinion it ought not to be allowed to prevail. The mortgagees were bound by their contract to hand over the property to the mortgagor intact and without any diminution in its value or in the income to be derived from it. It is immaterial whether they sold the mortgagee interest by a private treaty or whether the same was sold at an auction sale in execution of a decree against them. They were precluded by their contract with the mortgagor from themselves doing anything which might put a hindrance to the redemption of the property. It is true that by the auction-sale the mortgagee rights in the property passed to the father of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The auction-purchaser became a privy to the contract on account of the property and not on account of any personal covenant entered into between himself and the original mortgagor. But the personal contract between the original mortgagor and the original mortgagees subsisted and the latter cannot be heard to say that their entire character as mortgagees ceased with the sale of their mortgagee rights and they became free to do anything although that anything might put an obstacle in the redemption of the mortgage. There is no direct authority on the point either way. But on broad principles I am not all inclined to let the original mortgagees' profit by an act of their own to the detriment of the interest of the mortgagor, whose rights they were bound to guard on general principles recognised in s. 76 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. There can be no doubt that creation of an occupancy right (assuming that such has been created in this case) seriously affects the usefulness of a piece of land. If the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 are allowed to hold the land as occupancy tenants it is clear the plaintiff would not be permitted to cut any of the trees standing on the land or to bring the land under cultivation. I think that the Courts below were right in their opinion.. In the view I take of the case it is no longer necessary to consider whether s. 202 of the Tenancy Act is applicable to the case. Mr. Mital has strenuously argued that the suit is not for an agricultural holding and s. 202 has no application to it. He relied on the allegation in para. 9 of the plaint and on the admission of the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 in their written statement as regards that paragraph. The question, however, does not arise and need not be considered. The result is that the appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Courts on the higher scale.

IMPERIAL TOBACCO Co. (INDIA) LTD.—DEFENDANTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. Where a party maliciously obtains an order for the detention of goods of a person under s. 19A, Sea Customs Act, the latter is entitled to bring a suit for damages and limitation for such a suit is two years under Art. 36 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 458, col. 2.]

Nemi Chand v. Wallace, 34 C. 495; 11 C. W. N. 537, referred to.

A suit for damages for wrongful interference with the property of a person by obtaining an order from a Court in a suit or proceeding, when malice and want of reasonable and probable cause is established, is maintainable. The summary remedy provided by s. 95, C. P. C., is no bar to such a suit. [p. 450, cols. 1 & 2.]

For purposes of limitation a suit for slander of title or slander of goods is governed by Art. 36 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 451, col. 2.]

A provision as to limitation for a particular suit in the Limitation Act is no argument that such a suit is maintainable, for the Act does not create a cause of action if it does not already independently exist. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for damages arising out of certain acts of the defendant Company alleged to be wrongful and malicious. The defendant Company had been formed in 1910 to take over the business for importing and selling within the limits of India various cigarettes under the manufacturers' brand of W. D. and H. O. Wills including this Gold Flake brand. On the 1st September 1910 an agreement was executed with that object, the parties being the British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd., the British American Tobacco Co, (India), Ltd., and the defendant Company. No actual document of assignment or transfer was executed until the 11th April 1922. The shares in the defendant Company were owned to the extent of some 80 per cent. or 90 per cent. by the vendor Company, and from 1910 onwards the sale of these brands in India was entirely in the hands of the defendant Company acting under the agreement. At the termination of the war the Army Canteen Authorities found themselves in possession of a very large stock of cigarettes purchased from the British-American Tobacca Co., and from elsewhere: accordingly they took steps to sell them off, but imposed on purchasers the restrictive condition that the goods should not be disposed of in Great Britain. The plaintiff was one of those who came forward and made considerable purchases of these cigarettes of the Gold Flake Brand from the Canteen Authorities through Venis & Co., Ltd. and M. Drapkin. Some he disposed of in Europe, Egypt or Palestine. Others he imported into India for sale through Calcutta or Bombay. The first arrivals in India were at the end of February and beginning of March 1922. By the middle of March 1922 the defendant Company too was alive to the plaintiff's intrusion and the effect it might have on its trade. On the 12th April 1922 the defendant Company moved the Collector of Customs in Calcutta for confiscation of some of these goods which had arrived and were lying in bond. The goods were accordingly detained by the Collector of Customs under his statutory powers, and the usual period of 30 days was later extended by 10 days at the request of the defendant Company. On the 10th May 1922 the indenture of assignment (dated 11th April 1922) was executed in Calcutta by Mr. Abbott as agent of the British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd., and by Mr. Abbott and another as Directors of the defendant Company: the 10th May 1922 was also the date of registration of that document in Calcutta.

On the next day, the 11th May 1922, the Company filed a suit in the High Court here against the plaintiff and A. Bonnan & Co., claiming an injunction to restrain him from selling his goods. The defendant Company in that suit based its claim upon an exclusive proprietary right in the brand and also upon the allegation that the Gold Flake cigarettes had acquired amongst purchasers in India the reputation of being goods imported by the Company and that the plaintiff in selling his goods in India would be deceiving purchasers by passing off his goods as those imported by the defendant Company. The Company also gave notice of motion for an injunction and obtained an interim order for injunction covering the 100 cases then in the Customs in Calcutta, the plaintiff giving the usual undertaking in damages. This injunction was dissolved by an order of 8th June when the plaintiff undertook to place a certain sum of money out of the sale proceeds on deposit of receipt with the Bank and lodged the receipt in Court. The suit in Calcutta was dismissed on the 18th July 1922, the appeal on the 10th April 1923 and the appeal to His Majesty in Council on the 13th May 1924.

Similar action was taken by the defendant Company in Bombay. On the 1st May 1922, application was made to the Collector of Customs in regard to 60 cases by S S "Australia." An order for detention for one month was passed, but this was re-called and the goods were released after 48 hours' notice from the 5th May. An unusual feature was that in this instance in addition to the usual indemnity bond, a Bank guarantee was taken from the Company. On the 22nd May the defendant Company filed a suit in the High Court in Bombay against the Cigarettes Importers Agency and Bonnan & Co., under which names the cigarettes had been imported, claiming an injunction and other relief similar to that in the suit filed in Calcutta. Notice of motion was given on the 23rd May for an injunction restraining the defendants in that suit from importing, advertising, exposing for sale or selling their goods. On the 19th June 1922 when the motion came on, it was ordered by consent that it should stand over to the hearing on the 17th July 1922 and it was further ordered by consent that pending the hearing of the suit the defendants undertook not to dispose of or in any other way deal with the cigarettes then lying in Bombay or to arrive in the interim and it was further ordered by consent that the plaintiffs' undertaking as to damages should continue pending the final disposal of the suit. On the 2nd August 1922 an order was passed staying the suit until after disposal of the appeal in the Calcutta suit, the defendants' undertaking was also vacated, they having agreed to keep an account of sales. Subsequently on the 25th September 1923 an order was passed discharging the defendants' undertaking of 2nd August 1922 to keep account of the sales. Finally on the 9th January 1925 a consent decree was made in the suit whereby the suit was dismissed with cost, "without prejudice to the defendants' rights, if any, to claim and recover damages from the plaintiffs in any other proceedings."

On the 21st January 1925 the present suit was filed against the Company to recover damages in regard to the detention of the plaintiff's goods by the Collector of Customs in Calcutta and Bombay: damages in respect of the injunction and restraint on the goods in the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay: and damages for injury to his trade and reputation caused by untrue and disparaging statements as to the quality, etc., of the plaintiff's goods.

One of the important questions which arises in the suit upon the facts is whether malice finds place in the action of the Company in procuring the Collector of Customs to exercise his powers of detention over the goods, and in instituting and carrying on the proceedings in the two suits in the High Court. From the correspondence before me I find that on the 15th March the Company in Calcutta was writing to the British-American Tobacco Co. in London with whom constant communication was maintained, that 60 cases had arrived of Gold Flake cigarettes. The letter is headed "competition" and shows that it was realised then that the goods were those of the British-American Co.'s manufacture, made in United States of America and Mr. Abbott, the writer, adds: "Evidently the cigarettes form part of some more stocks and they may cause us some trouble here." On the 16th March the Company's Bombay office informed the Calcutta office of the arrival of 80 cases there, intimating that "the goods though old are still sound." On 23rd March 1922 Mr. Abbott again wrote to London with news of the Bombay consignment of which 10 cases had been sold to dealers at Rs. 20 per thousand (the Company's selling price for Gold Flake cigarettes being Rs. 36 per thousand). "This," says Mr. Abbott, "is most annoying, but we cannot so far as we can see do more than warn our dealers that we accept no responsibility for these goods." He also says that it is possible there may be a difficulty in disposing of the plaintiff's goods in the carton packing for which the demand is limited; "if, however, they get below the Scissors price" (which was Rs. 19 per mille) "they may cause no trouble." On the 23rd March the Bombay office through Mr. Selfe wrote that these importations "will certainly have bad effects on the sale of our Gold Flake and Capstan on account of the cheap rate at which they are being or will be marketed." Mr. Selfe also stated in his weekly report that these importations had affected the sales of Gold Flake Magnums. On the 28th March Mr. Abbott wrote to London asking for particulars of the stocks of Gold Flake cigarettes available on the Continent or elsewhere.

On the 4th April 1922 the Company received a telegram from a Mr. Macnaughten of the Legal Department of the British-American Tobacco Co. in London in reply to Mr. Abbott's letter of the 15th March:—

"60 cases Gold Flake the sale of these cigarettes is infringement of your mark and if the bond customs should be asked to destroy them if owners will not re-export."

Until that moment it never seems to have occurred to Mr. Abbott or anybody else that they possessed any right in law to which recourse was possible in order to stifle the competition of the plaintiff's cigarettes. The reason for that was that so far as they knew, they had no such right: that is clear from a passage in Mr. Abbott's letter of 10th May, where he says, "We may say that as soon as the first shipment of 'Gold Flake' came to our notice, we immediately questioned ourselves as to what was our position. A few years ago some 'Three Castles' cigarettes were imported into Rangoon from Singapore, and the legal advice we then had was that we were not in a position to prevent them from being imported. As the Gold Flake shipment was on a par, as far as we know, with that of the 'Three Castles' from Hongkong, we felt it was no use taking the matter up from a legal point of view." This is an important statement of the Company's state of mind and knowledge with reference to the period to which it refers.

Mr. Macnaughten's telegram, based on what materials I do not know, was on the 4th April. The Bombay weekly report of 7th April brought the information that the whole consignment of 80 cases had been disposed of to dealers, and the anticipation that the goods, if not disposed of before the monsoon, would probably not hold out; on the 12th April 1922 came the application to the Collector of Customs in Calcutta to confiscate the 60 cases arrived by the "Sardinia." The ground expressed in the application itself was that the importation of plaintiff's goods was "infringement of our trade mark in W. D. & H. O. Wills brand of Gold Flake cigarettes," but Mr. Ryan had already been down himself to interview the Collector on the subject before the application was put in. Section 18 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, deals with the classes of goods whose importation is prohibited and whose detention or confiscation may be allowed under s. 19A of the Act. It is admitted that the endeavour in the present case was to bring the plaintiff's goods under s. 18 (d) which relates to "goods having applied thereto a counterfeit trade mark within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, or a false trade description within the meaning of the Merchandise Marks Act." Mr. Ryan, a solicitor, who is in charge of the legal department of the Company in Calcutta says that his opinion was that the plaintiff's goods could be brought under neither category. Mr. Abbott though he must have known Mr. Ryan's view says that he charged the plaintiff's goods as being counterfeit before the Collector and if he did so before the Collector, it is difficult to think that he would restrain himself otherwise. Some attempt has been made to whittle away the offensive meaning, but from any point of view it is a dangerous word for one trader to use of the goods of another. That that was the view which they desired to impress on the Collector and in which they succeeded, is clear from paras. 4 and 5 of the Collector's order, dated the 19th June 1922, where reference is made to the earlier application.

Then there are two letters, dated the 12th April 1922 and 19th April 1922 from the British-American Tobacco Co., and received on the 8th and 10th May respectively. The last named Company played a prominent part throughout in this correspondence and apparently took upon itself to advise if not to dictate the course to be followed by the defendant Company. The intrusion of the plaintiff's goods affected the one as much as the other. These two letters refer to Mr. Abbott's previous question as to the amount of old stocks and the passages in them are as follows.—"We believe there is still a very large quantity of old stocks of this description in various parts of the world, and if you do not take steps to stop their importation in India now, it is very probable that you will be having constant repetitions of this trouble." Then in the letter of 19th April is this; "We regret to say that it is impossible to estimate what quantities of goods of this description are available in different parts of the world but we may say that it is probable that they are very large indeed. This makes it all the more important that you should establish the fact as soon as possible that goods of this nature cannot be imported in India, otherwise those at present holding stocks will very soon hear that they can dispose of them in India, and there is no saying to what extent the trouble may grow." There is no doubt that the steps initiated by the Company were all calculated to make it "as difficult as possible for the plaintiff to market his goods" (see Ex. LL) and so further representations were made to the Collector of Customs after suit with the object of obtaining from him an assessment of the plaintiff's goods to duty at the same rate as that paid by the defendant Company. The Collector, however, ultimately allowed an assessment based on the invoice value of the plaintiff's goods.

Mention must be made of an interview which took place between Bonnan and Abbott on the 6th May, as to which the oral evidence is somewhat conflicting. The plaintiff's version was not put to Mr. Abbott, but Mr. Ryan was present on the occasion; his version of the story is borne out by a letter written to the British-American Tobacco Co. on the 10th May which summarises the result of the interview, and may be assumed to be substantially true, namely, that the Company wanted an undertaking from the plaintiff not to remove the goods from bond, to which the plaintiff was agreeable if the Company would pay him Rs. 13-8-0 per thousand in bond for what arrived. I have little doubt that there may have been suggestions by the plaintiff in the course of the interview as to the Company taking over the whole of his purchases at their own selling rate of Rs. 36 per thousand but the letter of 15th May bears out the Company's story of the interview quite sufficiently. The offer was not accepted by the Company, however, as they "felt certain that the British-American Tobacco Co. would not listen to this." The result was the filing of this suit on the 11th May.

Paragraph 11 of the plaint alleges the circulation by the defendant Company of statements and rumours in the nature of slander of the plaintiff's goods, that they were inferior in quality, not in a sound and merchantable condition, and not genuine and also that the Company would boycott dealers purchasing or selling the plaintiff's cigarettes. As regards the quality of the cigarettes themselves, I do not forget the plaintiff's own representations to the Collector as to his cigarettes being entirely different in quality and everything else, the plaintiff's explanation of which in his evidence I find it difficult to accept. But the evidence clearly shows that in fact there was no difference; also that the condition of the plaintiff's cigarettes was somewhat inferior due to age, the chief effect of that being that they would deteriorate quicker than fresh stock and be more easily affected by adverse climatic conditions, such as those prevailing in the monsoon. At the same time there is no doubt that the plaintiff's cigarettes on arrival in this country were sound, smokeable, and at their price freely merchantable. Mr. Abbott in his letter of 10th May says he can quite believe that Baksh Ellahi would be a willing purchaser of plaintiff's goods and further mentions that they are in surprisingly good condition (though to Mr. Abbott's rival palate they "smoke rather nasty." Khodadad, one of the dealers, says that when he was first shown them he considered them as good as the Company's both in quality and condition. Mr. Selfe when he says in para. 8 of his affidavit in the Bombay suit that the plaintiff's cigarettes are "old, inferior in quality and in preparation and packing" is not strictly accurate. They are indeed old, and the packing was inferior, because the Company had air-tight tin containers, for the smaller quantities within the tin-lined cases, whereas the plaintiff had not: but the quality was the same, both of the cigarettes and of their preparation. The plaintiff has called a witness named Corr, a servant in 1922 of the Company who stated that it was his business in particular to look out for competition. He says that Mr. Selfe's instructions were to warn the various dealers about the plaintiff's cigarettes as being old stock and inferior in quality, and that he could do anything he liked so long as he stopped competition, and kept the market for the Company. Khodadad says that he was visited by Corr who informed him that plaintiff's cigarettes were not genuine but imitations imported from Basra, and he would get into trouble and be involved in litigation with the Company if he continued. Corr's evidence taken by itself would hardly be safe to act upon. He is apparently now a dismissed servant of the Company, over some monetary defalcation in regard to which he seems to have put forward two different explanations, added to which his demeanour in the box could not be described as well-balanced or impartial. The details given by Khodadad are difficult to accept because they are not put to Mr. Abbott or spoken to by Corr. It is, however, difficult to brush it aside entirely having regard to the other evidence which goes to support it, and to the way in which the Company had already overstepped the mark in the matter of the applications to the Collector. Two Calcutta dealers Kalipada Roy and Narendra Nath Chakraverty, father and son, gave evidence that they had been visited by officials from the Company and had had it impressed on them that the goods were "bad" (kharab) which I think was used not so much applying to their quality as to their merchantability having regard to the litigations that were going on. The evidence of these witnesses was to some extent damaged by their identification in Court of Mr. Ryan as one of the persons whom they had seen on the occasions in question, whereas I am quite clear that Mr. Ryan's denial must be accepted and those witnesses are consequently mistaken in that particular. There is some further evidence of the same nature from other dealers. Undoubtedly the Company's servants were going round warning dealers that they would not be responsible for the plaintiff's goods. There is no harm in that, and they could probably employ the whole of their organisation in broadcasting it to the dealers. There seems to be no doubt, however, that they went further and wrongly impressed on dealers a non-existent difference in the quality of the goods; and also made full use of the litigation in Bombay and Calcutta with its attendant threat of trouble to others as an obstruction to the plaintiff and as a deterrent. That is a clear impression which I retain after hearing the evidence. Considering these matters to which I have referred I hold that the conduct of the Company in regard to the proceedings before the Collector was malicious and without reasonable and proper cause. Between the application to the Collector and the filing of the suit nothing has emerged, though privilege has been claimed for certain documents, to show that the Company can say it was now in any better position as regards the filing of the suit. I have supported the claim of privilege, but I am certainly not going to assume in the Company's favour that the documents in question would support its case on the question of malice or want of reasonable and probable cause. Looking to the evidence, as it stands, I hold that in filing the suit and proceeding with it as it did the Company was acting maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause. These findings also apply to the Bombay proceedings both before the Collector and in Court. I also find that the Company did make and circulate the statements in para. 11 to the extent already mentioned. In connection with the question of malice I should mention a further fact that was relied upon as evidence of malice, namely, the filing of the suit in Bombay when the Company were already amply protected by the suit instituted in Calcutta and the injunction there. The contention, I think, is unsustainable, having regard to the fact that the injunction in Calcutta was limited to the Calcutta goods, the plaintiff being apparently not then within the jurisdiction, and also to the fact that the plaintiff was using different names or styles for his importations, so that the parties to the suits were nominally different, though in fact, as it turned out, the plaintiff alone was interested. That the plaintiff suffered damage by reason of malicious acts of the Company cannot I think be reasonably contested. A certain amount of delay occurred in consequence of the Collector's action and the injunction and undertakings and other proceedings in the suits, while plaintiff had to cancel a very favourable contract with one of his buyers and had also to arrange to submit a cancellation of some of the goods he had still to take up from his own sellers under his original purchase contracts. He started off very well in Bombay: it made a lot of difference to him if he could dispose of his perishable goods before the arrival of the monsoon and the Company knew it. But instead of finding a fair field for his goods he found himself faced with obstruction after obstruction maliciously raised by the Company, courses of delay, disparagement of his goods, assertion of unfounded rights —all of which interfered with his right to trade his goods in the ordinary way.

It is argued by the Company that notwithstanding the injury he has suffered, the plaintiff cannot recover. So far as the action of the Collector goes, it is said that it was a judicial act of the Collector and the Company cannot be held responsible for it. I think that Nemi Chand v. Wallace (1) supports the opposite contention that such a suit will lie, at any rate where, as in the present case, there is evidence of malice, and no reasonable and probable cause exists.

As to the suits and the proceedings in them the same contention is made by the Company, that no action will lie for damages, even if malice was present and reasonable and probable cause was absent. In support of this the case of Mohini Mohan Misser v. Surendra Narain Singh (2) is cited. That is a suit where damages were claimed against the defendant for having previously instituted an action against the plaintiffs for an injunction to restrain them from erecting a building on a certain land. An interim injunction had been granted but the action had ultimately terminated in favour of the defendants in the action. The defendants were sued for damages for malicious prosecution of the suit for an injunction. The question of the maintainability of such a suit was raised and Fletcher, J., came to the conclusion that there was no authority for the proposition that a suit was maintainable for maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause obtaining a perpetual injunction which was subsequently dissolved on appeal. He relied upon Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (3), while pointing out that there are certain exceptions where the proceedings involve either scandal to reputation or the possible loss of liberty to the person. In Bishun Singh v. Wyatt (4), a case of wrongful attachment, Mookerjee, J., in the course of his judgment remarks that the statement that the institution of an ordinary civil action, however, unfounded, vexatious and malicious it may be, is not a good cause of action must be qualified where there has been arrest of person or seizure of property. In Bhut Nath Pal Mistry v. Chandra Benode Pal Chowdhury (5), the plaintiff sued for damages for an injunction, wrongfully issued against him at the instance of the defendants, restraining him from erecting a building. It was there held that such a suit was maintainable on the ground that the defendants had unlawfully interfered with the exercise of his property rights by the plaintiff. The defendants, therefore, committed an act in the nature of trespass to the property, "and are consequently liable in an action for trespass ; it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove any malice or want of reasonable or probable cause." In Narendra Nath Koer v. Bhusan Chanara Pal (6), the plaintiff sued for damages for wrongful attachment and wrongful detention of certain chattels belonging to him. The question was raised of whether Bhut Nath Pal Mistry v. Chandra Benode Pal Chowdhury (5) was correctly decided having regard to other decisions of this Court including Madras Steam Navigation Co. v. Shalimar Works Ltd., (7), and the case, already cited, of Mohini Misser v. Surendra Narain Singh (2). The point was accordingly referred to a Full Bench, which, however, disposed of the case by re-affirming the general principle that a suit does not lie for damages against a defendant for maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause instituting a civil action ; as also the other principle that a person who unlawfully interferes with the exercise of the property rights of another, commits an act in the nature of trespass to property, and is liable for damages in an action for trespass. I may draw attention here to that portion of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in the referring judgment of Narendra Nath Koer v. Bhusan Chandra Pal (6), where he indicates that the defendant in his view should not be held liable because the injunction under which the chattels are detained was an act of the Court "and inasmuch as it has been held that there was no mala fides on the part of the defendant and as there is no finding that there was an absence of reasonable and probable cause." So in the case of Madras Steam Navigation Co. v. Shalimar Works Ltd. (7), already mentioned, an action in rem against a vessel had been instituted in this Court in its admiralty jurisdiction. The vessel was arrested but the suit was subsequently dismissed for want of jurisdiction. In a suit by the owners for damages for the arrest on the footing of trespass, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., held that the action based on trespass would not lie, and he also refers to the fact that the "arrestment of the ship is a judicial act of the Court and an ordinary step in an action in rem. So, where it constitutes a legal grievance, it is not an independent wrong, but an integral part of an action in rem in which there was malice, or its equivalent, entitling the aggrieved person to seek compensation either in the admiralty proceedings or by separate action" and (at page 109*) he adds that "in the absence of proof of malice or its equivalent the suit if treated as one for trespass, will not lie in the circumstances of this case."

So Clissold v. Cratchley (8), referred to in some of the cases in this Court cited above shows that a wrongful seizure of goods under a writ of fi. fa., where the judgment is already satisfied, may make a party liable in trespass, whether malice is present or not? but that where it is an action on the case the plaintiff must fail unless he can also prove malice. In Kissorimohun Roy v. Harsukh Das (9), a case of wrongful attachment of the goods of a third party for which damages were claimed, it was argued that the plaintiff could not recover unless he proved malice and want of probable cause. "That," says Lord Watson (at page 27†), "is a rule which obtains between the parties to a suit when the defendant suffers loss through its institution and dependence." It is unnecessary for me to consider further the cases in this Court above referred to in so far as any of them may seem to afford ground for the contention that a suit may lie for damages for wrongful interference with the property rights of another by obtaining an order from a Court, even though no malice is proved. It is enough that in the circumstances of this case malice has been proved and want of reasonable and probable cause, both in regard to the proceedings before the Collector in Bombay and Calcutta, as also in regard to the proceedings in the two suits instituted and carried on in those places. That damage resulted to the defendant in consequence is clear, and in my view he has a good cause of action, on which a suit is maintainable.

As regards the injunction, it may be a question whether it is to be regarded as separate and independent or as a part of and a step in the suit itself which as I have held bears the taint of malice. It is argued that no action will lie in respect of damages arising out of the injunction. If there was reasonable and probable cause or absence of malice, it may be that is so; if otherwise, what is the position? The defendant relies upon Mohini Mohan Misser v. Surendra Narain Singh (2), to show that even then no suit is maintainable. I am not satisfied that that principle is applicable to the facts of this case, and if necessary I should say that the circumstances place the matter on a different footing, otherwise it might be that in the case of perishable goods they might be utterly destroyed, yet the defendant for all his malice could shelter behind the injunction as the act of the Court and get off scot-free. True it is obtained on evidence on which the Court will say that a prima facie case is established, but that evidence is afterwards shown to be unacceptable. As already stated, the injunction of this Court only affected 100 cases then in Calcutta and continued from the 11th May till the 8th June. An undertaking was given by the Company in damages. That undertaking might have been acted upon by the Court on application of the plaintiff in that suit. In Smith v. Day (10), Brett, L. J., says that if the injunction had been obtained fraudulently or maliciously the Court would give exemplary damages. No case, however, has been shown to me where upon such an enquiry as to damages the Court has consented to assess damages upon the footing that the suit had been maliciously carried on, where such malice had not arisen as an issue for decision in that suit. It is argued that the fact that the undertaking is embodied in the order is itself an indication that apart from it the defendant could not recover. Similarly that when s. 95 of the C. P. C. allows limited damages in the case of an injunction being obtained on insufficient grounds, it is because apart from such provision of law, no such damages would be recoverable. On the other hand, it may be argued that the undertaking is inserted because it gives a quicker remedy, and so with the application under s. 95. As to the latter and the inference to be drawn, it seems illogical to allow a defendant who has incurred Rs. 1,000 damages to recover Rs. 1,000 and only allow the same to a defendant who has incurred Rs. 10,000. I agree that the existence of Art. 42 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act is in itself no argument that a suit is maintainable for damages for an injury caused by an injunction wrongfully obtained, because such an Act cannot create a cause of action if it does not already exist independently. Nevertheless in the circumstances of the present case I think that a cause of action may exist in respect of the injunction and the resulting damages to the plaintiff's trade: but whether that be so or not the plaintiff can obtain his relief in respect of it as a proceeding forming part of the suit which is itself affected by malice in its entirety.

As regards the Bombay suit the order of 19th June 1922, made upon the notice of motion, dated 23rd May, for interim injunction, was a consent order, the defendant in the suit undertaking not to deal with the goods in Bombay or to arrive, and the plaintiff Company giving an undertaking in damages. The defendant's undertaking was vacated by the order of 2nd August, without prejudice to his rights in damages. As to this part of the case I think that the plaintiff's remedy, if at all, would be limited to the enforcement of the undertaking in the suit in which it was given, and that as he submitted to the making of the order by giving his consent, he has no separate cause of action in this respect although he may say his consent was accorded only under pressure of the circumstances maliciously brought about by the Company.

Next, it is contended that even if the present suit is maintainable it is barred by limitation, whatever the cause of action may be. That appears to be so partly. I think that limitation intervenes in so far as the proceedings before the Collector are concerned. The detention terminated not later than June 1922. Article 36 is the general Article which provides a period of two years' limitation for a suit to recover damages in tort, unless any specific Article provides otherwise. Article 48 has been referred to but in my view does not apply, if for no other reason because the defendant Company never had possession of or control over the goods and the Collector cannot be looked upon as the Company's agent. In so far as the cause of action may be slander of title or slander of goods the limitation would be either one year under Art. 25 or two years under Art. 36, the latter is, in my opinion, applicable in the circumstances, for I think the action would be on the case. Nevertheless I think it is a fair inference to draw from the evidence that the statements alleged and complained of, continued, to the extent already mentioned, to be repeated within two years before suit, particularly having regard to the continuance of the previous suits which throughout were designed as a disparagement of the plaintiff's goods and in obstruction to the unfettered exercise of his rights as a trader, of which I have no doubt the Company made the fullest use the whole time the litigation lasted, and whenever occasion so required. I am not prepared to say that in any view of the matter the Company is excused by the principle that a trader is entitled to protect his own property and his own interests, because I think in this case there was mala fides and ulterior motive from the beginning until the end.

There remains the question of damages. One head of damages is that for loss of trade and business based upon the suggestion that the plaintiff might have established himself in the tobacco trade in India at any rate to the extent of the remaining canteen war stocks of cigarettes which were very large indeed. He says that it was his intention to do so, but the evidence does not appear to me to be sufficient to enable me to hold that he has established his case in this particular, or that his failure in this respect could be said to be the proximate effect of the defendant's action. Similarly he has claimed damages under certain other heads which I think are inadmissible. These are the items at the end of his schedule of claim, namely, (1) living expenses in India for 642 days, (2) travelling expenses to and from India and also in India, and (3) difference between party and party costs allowed to him in the previous suit, and his attorney and client costs.

As regards the remainder of the claim I think that the plaintiff must recover damages substantially according to the headings of his schedules. Exhibit O is a convenient resume furnished to me by plaintiff's Counsel of the goods that came to India, and their disposal as well as the other goods contracted for of which the plaintiff lost the benefit owing to concellation of the contract. The sales effected by the plaintiff after he had undertaken to keep an account show that in many instances he was able to dispose of his goods at so high a rate as Rs 30 per thousand. At the end of March he started his sales to Sheriar & Co, and other Bombay dealers at rates of Rs. 18 and Rs. 20 per thousand: while he contracted to sell 220 cases to Sheriar at the rate of Rs. 23 8. The Company argues that the sales paper in packets of these Gold Flake cigarettes are shown from their own experience to be very small in India, and, therefore, the plaintiff would have had the greatest difficulty in disposing even of what he had actually brought out; but that argument could only have weight if the plaintiff were selling at the same rates as the Company, whereas he was in a position to undersell them heavily. It leaves out of account the attraction of a bargain price. Besides, if there was any substance in the argument the best course for the Company would have been (subject to warning their dealers) total passivity. The best answer is the conduct of the Company itself, the passages from the letters already referred to and the considerable sales to the Bombay dealers. There would be no doubt a certain amount of deterioration, particularly in the rains once the cases are opened, and indeed, I find the plaintiff writing to the Collector about the end of the rains claiming further reduction of duty on the ground of substantial deterioration; but I believe upon the evidence before me that but for the defendants' action plaintiff would have been able to dispose of his goods that had already come out here before the monsoon season, and as regards those at home they would still have been saleable by the time they were brought out. Still, there would necessarily have been some amount of deterioration among them in the matter of condition.

On the question of damages I am not inclined to attach much weight to the evidence of the interview of 8th May, even accepting the Company's version of it, because that took place when the interference through the Collector was actually in existence, and the impending litigation was held over the plaintiff's head. The plaintiff's claim under the headings with which I am now dealing is based upon the assumption that he would have been able to dispose of his goods at the uniform rate of Rs. 30 per thousand. Taking the various matters into consideration I have endeavoured to put myself in the place of a Jury and arrive at a fair and reasonable figure which may be taken as an average rate to form a basis for the calculation of damages, and in the circumstances I think an all round figure of Rs. 23 8 would not be excessive. The defendant Company does not admit the items of the account as set out in the schedule to the plaint, so that subject to the rate of Rs. 23-8 which I have fixed, there must be a reference to ascertain what is the amount of damage under the claims numbered 1 to 5 in the schedule. The decree will be made accordingly and the plaintiff will have his costs of the suit on Scale No. 2.

R. L. Order accordingly.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

City Civil Court Appeal No. 38 of 1924.

November 10, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir Charless Gordon Spencer, Kt.

MUNUSAMI PILLAI—Appellant

MAHDI HUSSAIN KHAN SAHEB—Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Amendment of decree after satisfaction.

Section 152 of the C. P. C. permits clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments and decrees to be corrected at any time, but an amendment of a decree after satisfaction has been entered up is a mere nulllity unless steps are also taken at the same time to set aside the order recording satisfaction. [p. 453, col. 2; p. 454, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in O. S. No. 225 of 1920 as amended by the said Court by order, dated the 20th October 1924.

Mr. R. Sriramachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. S. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent brought O. S. No. 225 of 1920 under the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act to eject the appellant. Under s. 9 of the Act, the appellant applied for an order that the landlord should be directed to sell the land for a price to be fixed by the Court. The result of the suit was that the appellant got a decree on 12th May 1922 directing the respondent to convey the land to him upon his paying Rs. 615-6 10, being the value of the land at the rate of Rs. 1,100 per ground, and that the appellant should pay the respondent his costs and past and future mesne profits. On 10th July 1923, in E. P. No. 249 of 1923, the respondent applied for execution by attachment and sale of the superstructure. On 18th December 1923, the appellant applied in C. M. P. No. 1814 of 1923 for a direction of the Court to the respondent to execute and register the conveyance and got an order that respondent should execute a conveyance in three weeks. On 5th December 1923, the decree was entered as satisfied and the execution petition noted as disposed of. On 24th September 1924, the respondent applied under s. 152 of the C. P. C., for an amendment of the decree by altering the amount to be paid as the price of conveyance from Rs. 615-6-10 into Rs. 756-4-0. The appellant filed a counter-affidavit alleging that the respondent was vexatiously attempting to get more money out of him by this means and delaying to attend the Registrar's office for registration of the conveyance. The City Civil Court Judge observed that the amendment asked for was the rectification of a slip due to the mistake of a clerk and that the petitioner was not estopped from applying and accordingly he made the order from which this appeal has been preferred.

Now s. 152 of the C. P. C. permits clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments and decrees to be corrected at any time, but it is questionable whether a Court would be justified in making a correction which involved the payment of a larger sum of money by one party to another, long after satisfaction had been recorded, and when nothing remained to be done and the decree had become dead. Under the old C. P. C., before errors in decrees were permitted by s. 152 to be corrected "at any time", and when the making of corrections was under s. 206 made obligatory and not discretionary, the High Court of Calcutta in Fakar-ud-din Mahomed Ahsan v. Official Trustee of Bengal (1) held that matters, which might have been discussed in the course of execution proceedings could not be reopened after execution had been closed and the decree satisfied. The learned Judges observed that if a judgment-debtor desired to show that more money had been levied from him under the execution than was due from him under the decree, the only course open to him was to apply for a review of the order, which declared the decree to be satisfied and the execution proceedings struck off. Under the present Code the Allahabad High Court in Pitam Lal v. Balwant Singh (2) revised an order of a Subordinate Court amending a money-decree which had been completely satisfied. Daniel, J., observed "When a decree for money had been finally satisfied and discharged, the Court is functus officio and can no longer entertain an application for amendment under s. 152 of the C. P. C.," In Sheo Prasad Rai v. Dharam Sen Rai (3) it was held that "the dictum in Fakar-ud-din Mahomed Ahsan v. Official Trustee of Bengal (1) quoted with approval in Ram Saran Pande v. Janki Pande (4) to the effect that where a decree has been completely executed the Court executing the decree is functus officio has not found complete favour in subsequent decisions." Nevertheless, on the facts of that case, the Court dismissed the second appeal of the judgment-debtor against an order of an Executing Court confirmed by the District Court refusing to cancel the execution proceedings on the ground that lands not covered by the decree had been delivered.

(1) 10 C. 538; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 360.

I am of opinion that the ground upon which Pathambi v. Mytheen Bibi (5) was disposed of, namely, that an amendment of a decree after satisfaction has been entered up is a mere nullity unless steps are also taken at the same time to set aside the order recording satisfaction, is a sound objection to the procedure of the lower Court in this case in amending its decree at the stage when the respondent applied for amendment. I also think that this application should have been rejected on the ground that it involved a substantial alteration of the terms upon which the land was to be conveyed.

It is contended that, because the lands were found to measure 1,650 square feet, the price necessarily had to be varied after the rate had been fixed at Rs. 1,100 per ground. In answer to this contention the appellant stated in his counter-affidavit that the land measured only 1,386 square feet. The Judge has not decided in his order now appealed against which figure is correct. He only says "If the land is 1,650 square feet the plaintiff is entitled to Rs. 756-4 0". Moreover, the method by which the sum given in the decree was arrived at is not of consequence after the decree has been executed without objection. If the defendant had known, before he took a conveyance for the land, that he would have to pay Rs 150 more than the sum ordered in the decree, it would have been open to him to have given up possession of this land and taken compensation under s. 3 of the Act instead of getting a conveyance executed by Court and registered. The plaintiff, having taken all that was due to him for costs and mesne profits, and having allowed this petition to be entered as disposed of and the decree as satisfied, cannot plead mistake and demand a larger sum as consideration for doing that which has been done already. Section 9, cl. (3) declares that "upon a final order being passed directing the conveyance of the land by the landlord to the tenant, the suit shall stand dismissed". The respondent's application may thus be regarded as an attempt to re-open a closed suit, and he is estopped from putting forward a plea that the decree is wrong by his conduct in not taking the objection earlier.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs and the lower Court's order directing an amendment of the decree is quashed.

First appeal from an order of the Second Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 13th May 1925.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that this appeal fails. The point is a simple one. One Maheshi Lal left a widow surviving him, who executed two mortgages under circumstances which are not known, and which have never been investigated upon the question whether the loan made by the widow was either for legal necessity, or for some other purpose which by Hindu Law binds the estate. The mortgagee shortly before the death of the widow sued her and obtained a decree for sale On the death of the widow, or some little time afterwards, he applied for execution, and sought to join, or bring on the record, two daughters of the deceased widow and of their father, the deceased Maheshi Lal, on the ground that they were the legal representatives of the deceased widow. They objected Their objection took the obvious form that they were not the legal representatives of their deceased mother because there was nothing to represent. They were the legal representatives, or reversioners, of their deceased father, and the decree against the widow could have no more binding effect than the mortgage contract which she had entered into in her capacity as a Hindu widow with a Hindu widow's estate. The Munsif rejected this objection taking the view that they were the legal representatives of the widow and that in questioning whether the decree was binding upon the estate in the hands of the reversioners they were seeking to go behind the decree in the Execution Court. On an appeal brought to the Subordinate Judge this view was overruled, and the Subordinate Judge has explained the law in a very clear and able judgment, holding that in substance the decision of the First Court really begged the whole question, and that the daughters were entitled to contest the view in the Execution Court that they were legal representatives of their deceased mother, inasmuch as it had never been decided whether the mortgage, or the decree based thereon, bound the whole estate, or anything more than the interest of the Hindu widow, and he remitted the case to enable that question to be decided.

With regard to the contention that the daughters are seeking to go behind the decree it should be observed, that this is not the case. What they are seeking to do is to interpret the decree, or in other words to ascertain whether the decree is such as to bind the whole estate, or whether it only bound the interest of the widow. That question has never been determined. For one reason, the reversioners were not made parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and, therefore, unless the widow herself chose to raise the question which she was not very likely to do, it would not arise at all, and, therefore, the fundamental question, namely, whether the contract was such as to bind the whole estate or not when it was originally made by the widow, has never been determined, and it would be contrary to all principles of law and justice if the Courts were to give a wider interpretation and operation to a decree than the contract upon which it was based.

The appellant before us relied upon the decision in Liladhar v. Chaturbhuj (1) but the decision in that case turned upon a very narrow question. The objectors in that case disputed their liability as judgment-debtors, not having resisted an order bringing them upon the record as legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, and the case decides nothing more than the well-known principle that a judgment-debtor, or his legal representative, cannot go behind the decree, or dispute the validity of a contract upon which a decree has been passed. That authority was clearly explained in Khuman Singh v. Makhan Singh (2) a case which certainly should have been, but which appears not to have been published in the authorised Law Reports but it should be observed with regard both to this case, and to the preceding one to which we have already referred, that these decisions were under the old law as provided by s. 244 of the Code of 1882 and, therefore, have little or no application to the legal position to day. The opinion was expressed in those cases, and it was definitely held in Jagar Nath Singh v. Sheo Ghulam Singh (3) that a suit might be brought by a reversioner disputing the operation of the decree where it was contended that it bound the whole estate, and that the old s. 244 constituted no bar. But the old s. 244 has been altered and the provisions of s. 47 of the present Code make it quite clear that the question whether or not an alleged legal representative does or does not occupy that capacity so as to be bound by the decree, is one which is to be decided in the Execution Court. That is precisely the question raised by this appeal. We repeat that it does not offend against the principle that an Execution Court cannot go behind the decree. The question raised in this and cognate cases is, what is the true interpretation of the decree, and what is its operative effect and in order to decide that question it is necessary to investigate in the case of a Hindu widow the circumstances under which the contract was entered into upon which the decree is based.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—The preliminary point is taken in this case that no appeal lies because the pronouncement appealed against was not a judgment but an order. The words have been the subject of great controversy in these Courts and I certainly do not propose to attempt to go through the welter of conflicting decisions with many of which I may say I do not in the least agree. It seems to me that the matter is left in a state in which all that this Court can do is to take the principle underlying the Full Bench case in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1) and apply it as best as it can to the actual matter before it. In this case the learned Judge directed that certain persons who appeared in the first instance on the record as defendants should be added as plaintiffs, the second plaintiff having given up his cause of action and thereby adversely no doubt affected the position of the defendants who were transposed, because, if he obtained a decree, in the working out of that decree they might have their rights affected. However, that is a question on the merits which really does not arise. The learned Chief Justice, Sir Arnold White laid down the following test in the case cited above Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1) and if I may respectfully say so, I think he very wisely guarded himself from setting up a too procrustean bed in the language that he adopted. In laying down the principle for Courts to work out on the facts of each case he says "The test seems to me to be not what is the form of the adjudication but what is its effect in the suit or proceeding in which it is made. If its effect, whatever its form may be, and whatever may be the nature of the application in which it is made is, to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, I think the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause. An adjudication on an application which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication in the suit is not, in my opinion, a judgment within the meaning of the Letters Patent."

Then later on he says this and I respectfully agree with it:

"I think the decision may be a judgment for the purposes of the section though it does not affect the merits of the suit or proceeding and does not determine any question of right raised in the suit or proceeding."

Applying that and endeavouring as best as I can to see what is its true application, I think it is this, that a determination, call it what you will, which has the effect, whether on a technical ground or on the merits of putting an end to the proceedings as regards the particular people or in toto is a judgment and is appealable, but, if the pronouncement leaves the suit free to go on, then it is not a judgment within the meaning of the clause. In my opinion, a distinction may be drawn which unfortunately has not been, between the grant and the refusal of leave to sue. It seems to me that it may well be said that refusing leave to sue is a final determination of the matter against the proposed plaintiff. Similarly in a case where a Court held that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, I make no doubt that these Courts would accept that in accordance with the decision in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1) as being a final determination. But it seems to me that, if the effect of the order is to allow the proceedings to go on, it is impossible to say that it satisfies the test laid down by Sir Arnold White in the Full Bench case. I do not desire to multiply illustrations, because it is much better to leave these things to be dealt with as they arise. I have, therefore, contented myself with what appears to me to be reasonably clear illustration one way or the other. Looking at this order, its effect was to allow the suit to go on for determination on the merits and I am utterly unable to see that the order of transference of these persons from the position of defendants to that of plaintiffs was in any way a decision the effect of which was to put to an end to the suit or proceeding. In my opinion, therefore, without attempting to lay down any different test to that laid down by my learned predecessor in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1), I think it is not a case which is on the line. It is a case where any person applying ordinary language would without hesitation say that this was an order and not a judgment. I am, therefore, of opinion that no appeal lies and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Ramesam, J.—I agree. The state of the case-law has been aptly described by my Lord and having regard to it, I will not attempt any definition of the word "judgment." I will only say this, that I am not prepared to say that every order on a contested petition is a judgment. The line dividing judgments from orders must be drawn somewhere short of this. Having regard to the fact that in the case before us no substantial right of the defendants has been adversely affected by the order under appeal, I would say that it does not fall on the judgment side of the line. Beyond this I make no further attempt.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 3—Limitation urged for first time in appeal.

Question of limitation should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal where its determination requires an investigation into facts to see whether a particular payment was made in such a way as to extend time.

Petition for revision of a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Hoshiarpore, dated the 14th July 1925, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Dasuya, District Hoshiarpore, dated the 11th February 1925.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Petitioner,

JUDGMENT.—In this case the decree of the Trial Court against the surety Ralla was practically a consent decree. Ralla admitted his liability as surety but pleaded an additional payment of Rs. 50 in addition to the payment of Rs. 10 admitted in the plaint. The plaintiff accepted the statement that Rs. 50 had been paid and a decree was passed accordingly. Ralla then appealed and set up for the first time the question of limitation.

The lower Appellate Court allowed him to do so and decided in his favour. The question, however, required for its determination an investigation into the facts to see whether either the payment of Rs. 10 which was said to have been made in December 1923 or that of Rs. 50 of which the date is not stated, were made in such a manner as to extend time under s. 19 or s. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. The plea should not have been enteretained.

I accept the petition, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decree of the first Court. The petitioner will have his costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

To determine whether a grant of a service inam land is resumable or not, regard must be had to the nature of the tenure, whether the grant was made in lieu of wages for service or whether it was an absolute grant subject to the condition of the performance of the service. In grants of the former description, the relation between the grantor and the grantee is that of master and servant, and the grant may be resumed on the services being dispensed with. In a grant of the latter description, i.e., one burdened with service, it is an absolute grant with a condition annexed to it, namely, the rendering of service. In the absence of provision to the contrary it is only on breach of that condition and on the grantee committing default in the performance of that service that the grantor becomes entitled to resume the grant. [p. 459, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where there is a grant in writing and it is produced, on a construction of it will depend the nature of the tenure, whether the grant was made in lieu of wages or was burdened with service. But where, either the original grant is not in writing or in any event is not before the Court, the nature of the tenure can be determined only on the evidence given and the facts and circumstances of each case. [p. 459, col. 2; p. 460, col. 1.]

When the question arises as to the class to which a specified grant belongs, there is no presumption that the grant was one made in lieu of wages for services. Nor can such a presumption arise even where it is proved that the services are personal. [p. 460, col 1.]

The burden of proving the right of resumption lies on a plaintiff who seeks to resume. [p. 461, col. 2.]

Presumptions are not made at random. In order to raise a presumption some connection must be shown to exist between the fact proving and the fact to be proved, which warrants an inference from the one to the other when the two are brought into proximity. [p. 460, col. 1.]

The duties of mudam service consist in looking after the harvest of the crops, watching the heaps of harvested produce, placing seals upon them, preventing removal of cow-dung from waste lands and general supervision of harvest operations. [p. 459, col. 1.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chittor, in A. S. No. 160 of 1921 (A. S. No. 5 of 1921, District Court, Chittor), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupati, in O. S. No. 402 of 1919.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and N. S. Rangaswami Iyengar, for the Appellants.

Mr B. C. Sankara Narayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs who are the inamdars of Lupuchendrapet seek to resume the plaint land which was granted for mudum service and to recover possession of it with mesne profits. The defendants contend that the land has been in the possession of their family for about 150 years and that they are entitled to enjoy it so long as they are able and willing to perform the duties of mudum, that there has been no default and that the land cannot, therefore, be resumed.

The District Munsif has found that the land is not resumable and the Subordinate Judge has confirmed this finding.

The plaintiff has filed the present appeal. The lower Appellate Court on a review of the whole evidence has come to the conclusion that the grant cannot be resumed, This is what the learned Judge says:—"I am not satisfied on the evidence that the iman is resumable."

The appellant asks me to reverse this finding.

The learned Judge has also found that there has been no default on the part of the defendants and the correctness of this part of his judgment has not been questioned.

In arriving at his conclusion that the grant is not resumable, the Subordinate Judge has relied to some extent upon the conduct of the plaintiffs as disclosed in various proceedings and upon the incongruous statement which they made from time to time. He has also relied upon the fact that the defendants have expended money and dug a well. Further, the defendants and their ancestors have been long in possession and the second witness for the plaintiff who is 70 years old has admitted that the grant was made before his time.

Mudam's duties are said to consist in looking after the harvest of the crops, watching the heaps of harvested produce, placing seals upon them, preventing removal of cow-dung from waste lands and general supervision of harvest operations. The first witness for the plaintiff admits that the inamdars as well as the ryots are interested in the performance of these duties. I need not go more minutely into the evidence. Although the Subordinate Judge refers to certain authorities which contain observations regarding onus of proof, he has not himself decided the case with reference to any presumptions. His finding is the result of his appreciation of the evidence independent of the rule of onus of proof. It has not been shown that his finding is wrong or vitiated by any mistake and I must, therefore, accept it in second appeal.

Regarding the nature and incidents of service tenure and the presumptions that may be drawn in dealing with such tenures, there has been a fairly long argument before me. I shall, therefore, proceed to discuss these points. The finding that the land is not resumable implies that the grant was burdened with service.

To determine whether the grant is resumable or not regard must be had to the nature of the tenure. Was the grant made in lieu of wages for service or was it an absolute grant subject to the condition of the performance of the service. First, dealing with grants of the former description, the relation between the grantor and the grantee is that of master and servant. Instead of remunerating the servant by wages the master grants land to him and treating the rent payable as equivalent to wages, the grantor makes a remission of the rent. The contract, however, is, in essence, one of service and as the master can on terminating the employment cease to pay wages, in like manner he may resume the grant on dispensing with services. The servant cannot compel his master to continue to employ him on the score that he is willing and able to serve.

Now let me turn to the second description of grants, those burdened with service. The position here is that there is an absolute grant but a condition is annexed to it. On the breach of the condition, the grant may be resumed. The condition being the rendering of the service, if the grantee commits default in its performance, the grantor becomes entitled to resume the grant. The mere fact that the grantor no longer requires service does not give him the right to resume the grant. Whether he requires the service or not is immaterial, the only question being whether there has been default on the part of the grantee.

It is also recognised that in the case of a grant burdened with service, it may be made a condition of the grant that it should cease when the services are no longer required, But in the absence of a provision to that effect, land held under that grant is not resumable unless the grantee commits default. This does not affect the main division of the grants under two headings, namely, those burdened with service and those made in lieu of wages: see Forbes v. Meer Mohomed Tuquee(1), Lakhamgavda v. Keshav Annaji (2) and Yellava Sakreppa v. Bhimappa Gireppa (3).

Where there is a grant in writing and it is produced, on a construction of it will depend the nature of the tenure, whether the grant was made in lieu of wages or was burdened with service. But, where, as in the present case, either the original grant was not in writing or in any event is not before the Court, the nature of the tenure can be determined only on the evidence given. The Subordinate Judge agreeing with the Trial Court has found on the evidence that the grant is not resumable. Where an inference is drawn from certain facts or circumstances, it must be shown that the lower Appellate Court has made some mistake before its finding can be set aside in second appeal. I am not satisfied that the appellant has succeeded in showing that the finding is liable to be reversed.

The appellant's learned Vakil has contended that this appeal ought to be decided with reference to two presumptions, one of them broad, the other more limited. When the question arises as to the class to which a specified grant belongs he contends that it should be presumed that the grant was one made in lieu of wages for services. Putting it in other words, the grantor has only to come to Court and show that it is a service grant. Nothing further need be done by him and the Court is bound to presume that the grant was in lieu of wages. The next presumption which he asks should be drawn is, that when the grantor proves that the services are personal, the Court should infer that the grant was made in lieu of wages. The range of this presumption is somewhat more limited for, this assumes that the grantor has at least to prove one fact, do nothing more and the Court will at once presume that the grant is resumable.

For making either of these presumptions, I do not believe there is the slightest ground. Presumptions are not made at random. Some connection must be shown to exist between the fact proving and the fact to be proved, which warrants an inference from the one to the other when the two are brought into proximity. On many and varied circumstances may depend what kind of grant a man may choose to make. To presume at the very outset of a case that the grant is one in lieu of wages, does not seem to be in conformity with reason.

The second presumption referred to is, in my opinion, also opposed to reason. Having regard to the springs of human action, can it be said that a man is less likely to make an absolute grant burdened with personal service, or again can it be said that when services are of a public nature there is any strong impelling motive for not making the grant in lieu of remuneration for those services? There exists thus on principle no ground for making either of the two presumptions. I am also satisfied that this is the position established by authority.

Before discussing the cases on the point, I should like, in order to remove a confusion that prevails, to refer to a presumption that is permissible and has often to be drawn. When a zemindar seeks to resume a grant, the question arises, is the land included in the zemindari? This will depend upon whether the revenue from the land was or was not included in the assets of the zemindari at the time of the settlement. If it was included, the right of resumption would be with the zemindar, if not, he would not have the right. If there is no direct evidence to show whether the revenue was or was not included, you may turn to the nature of the services as they may furnish a clue. If the services were personal to the zemindar, it may reasonably be assumed that the Government would not have exempted the land from the revenue but would have treated it for the purpose of the settlement as revenue paying land. The reason is obvious. It was the zemindar that had the benefit of the services and there would be no reason why the Government should not assess the land to the revenue for the services were after all an equivalent of the rent. A presumption is, therefore, made that when the services are proved to be personal, the right of resumption, if it exists vests in the zemindar. This is the presumption that decided cases very often refer to and this presumption and its implication are misunderstood and some loose thinking has, I am afraid, given rise to some laxity of expression.

I shall now examine the cases on the point. Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (1) is one of the earliest and most authoritative of the decisions. The zemindar sued for the resumption of a jagir. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee dealt with two questions (1) regarding the nature of the tenure on which the lands were held; (2) whether the jagir lands were made the subject of assessment at the settlement. Having held on the second point that the jaghir was included in the zemindari their Lordships proceed to ask the qusstion: "But is it a necessary consequence of this finding that the appellant is entitled to resume these jagir lands?" They then observe that his right to do so must depend upon the nature of the tenure. They distinguish between the two categories of grant and conclude that the grant before them is one burdened with service. In the course of the discussion they observe that the grantees they were dealing with, were not the private servants of the zemindar. But they do not anywhere say that if the services were private or personal, there would arise a presumption that the grant was made in lieu of wages. On the contrary, in the concluding paragraphs of their judgment, they remark that, it being emphatically upon the zemindar who is seeking to dispossess or to rack rent the grantees to make out a clear title to resumption, he, in their opinion, failed to discharge the onus and his suit was, therefore, dismissed. This case, therefore, far from recognising the rule of presumption contended for by the appellant, clearly lays down that the rule is the other way, namely, that the onus of proof is upon the grantors claiming resumption.

Lakham Gavda v. Keshavannaji (2) is a suit by an inamdar to resume lands alleged to be held on service tenure. Jenkins, C. J., and Chandavarkar, J., assume for the purpose of their judgment that the tenure was connected with services and proceed to examine if the plaintiff was entitled to resume. They refer to Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (1) and the classification of grants adopted in that case, and in the end dismiss the plaintiff's suit observing that it lay upon him to make out that the combination of the grantee's interest and his obligation to serve was such, as to permit of resumption. This case follows the Privy Council decision and holds that the onus is upon the party claiming the right to resume.

A contention similar to the one advanced by the appellant was raised in Yellava Sakreppa v. Bhimappa Gireppa (3). The learned Judges rejected it saying that there is no presumption that where the services are personal, the grantor has a right to resume the land. They say that this is the Bombay Law, though they add very guardedly, that the law is possibly different in Calcutta and Madras. This does not show that the law is in fact different in these Provinces but it clearly shows that in Bombay such a presumption is not drawn.

The question again arose in Chandrappa v. Bhima Dassappa (4). Beaman, J., refuses to recognise any such distinction between public and private services remarking that the distinction attempted is vicious.

In Baslingappa v. Chandrappa (5) it was again held that the onus is upon the plaintiff seeking to resume.

With reference to the observation in Yellava Sakreppa v. Bhimappagireppa (3) that possibly the law in Madras is different, I must point out that Lakham Gavda v. Keshavannaji (2) has been followed in the Province in Ramasami Pattar v. Lakshmi Kuarassiar (6), and that Yellava Sakreppa v. Bhimappa Gireppa (3) has been referred to and followed by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Kamaravutu Mrutyunjayadu v. Rajah of Pittapuram (7). It cannot, therefore, be said that the Madras Law is different from the Bombay Law on this point.

Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Dashad (8) relied on by the appellant proceeds, with all respect, on a misconception. In it, a two-fold classification of grants is made. First, it is said there is a distinction between a grant for services of a public nature and a grant for services of a private nature. In the former, the zemindar cannot resume while in the latter he may. Secondly, it is said, that there is a distinction between grants of an estate burdened with some service and grants in lieu of wages. This twofold classification is, in my opinion, unnecessary and loses sight of the real principle involved. The main division as pointed out by Beaman, J., in Chandrappa v. Bhima Dassappa (4) is that of grants burdened with service and that of grants by way of wages for service. Each of these two main categories may again be sub-divided according to the nature of the services, personal or public. The judgment in Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Dashad (8) loses its value by reason of this mistake and I am not prepared to agree with the view that when services to be rendered are personal, the grantor has a prima facie right to resume the grant. It further seems to me that Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Dashad (8) is opposed to the authority of the Privy Council in Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (1).

(8) 22 C. 938; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 622.

If the Madras cases are examined, they do not support the appellant's contention.

The sentence in Sanniyasi Razu v. Salur Zemindar (9) that is relied on reads thus:—"It is ordinarily competent to a zemindar to dispense with such services and to resume the tenure". This may only mean that if the grant is in lieu of wages it may ordinarily be resumed. There is nothing to show that the learned Judges meant to say that if the services are personal, they would presume that the grant was one made in lieu of wages. I cannot regard this as an authority for the proposition contended for.

In Mahadevi v. Vikrama (10) the following passage is relied on:

"Now it is admitted, on behalf of the appellants, that, if the land was held on service tenure, it is resumable at the will of the zeminder for the time being in possession." What is the tenure that is referred to in the above passage? All lands held on service-tenure are not resumed.

There are two lands of service-tenures. The learned Judges were presumably referring to grants made in lieu of wages. The words literally taken mean that both kinds of grants are resumable which, of course, is not the case. I am unable to see how this supports the appellant's contention.

In Sri Rajah Sobhnadri Appa Rao Bahadur v. Sri Rajah Venkatanarasimha Appa Rao Bahadur (11) there is an observation at page 408 that it is for the grantee to make out that the land is not resumable. This case went up to the Privy Council and the decision of the Madras High Court was confirmed. But their Lordships of the Judicial Committee while agreeing with the conclusion of the learned Judges, observe that their judgment does not imply that they adopt in entirety their reasoning. This is an important reservation and must not be lost sight of.

In Vadisapu Appandora v. Vyricherla Veerabhadra Raju Bahadur (12) there is a passage at page 408 to the effect that in this Presidency there is a series of decisions and that where a land granted on service tenure was included in the assets of the zemindari at the time of the settlement there is a presumption that the zemindar can resume. This only means that if the question is between the zemindar and the Government as to who has the right to resume, the fact that the land is included in the zemindari, indicates that the right vests in the zemindar. This passage does not help the appellant. There is another passage page 409* where the learned Judges say that in the case of a grant subsequent to Permanent Settlement to which personal services are attached, the burden of proving that it is not resumable is on the grantee. In the first place, with all respect, I cannot accede to this proposition. Secondly what difference does it make in regard to the present question, whether the grant was prior to or subsequent to the Permanent Settlement.

There is one other case cited by the appellant to which I must refer. In Gajapathi Maharaju Garu v. Sondi Prahaladha Bissoyi Ratno (13) Ayling, J., observes at page 180† that the services are of a personal character and for that reason the inams are resumable by the zemindar. This observation if I may say so with respect, is not quite accurate and I may point out that in a later case the same learned Judge expresses his view somewhat very differently. In Mrutyunnjayadu v. Raja of Pittapuram (7) Ayling, J., differing from Sadasiva Aiyar, J., observes: "I can find no authority for holding that the nature of the services makes any difference in the case of such a grant, though in the case of a service grant, where lands are held and enjoyed in lieu of wages, the power of arbitrary resumption would largely turn on whether the services were private or public."

By reason of the difference of opinion there was a Letters Patent Appeal and Seshagiri Iyer and Phillips, JJ., held, Sir John Wallis, C. J., dissenting, that the grant was a grant burdened with service and was not resumable. The judgment of Ayling, J., was upheld. Sashagiri Iyer, J. at page 144‡ observes:—

"The next contention is that as the service was personal it was open to the zemindar to dispense with it and to resume the land. Here again, it is not in every case of personal service that the grant can be resumed.

It is thus clear that both on principle and on authority, neither of the presumptions contended for by the appellant can be accepted. The plaintiff who seeks to resume must make out his title.

As the appeal has been argued at some length, I have reviewed the law and shown what, in my opinion, the right principle is. But as I have said, the lower Appellate Court has not considered the case with reference to any rule of onus of proof, but has, on the other hand, arrived at a finding on a consideration of the entire evidence. Whether my view is correct or not, it follows that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge must stand. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Custom of pre-emption, finding as to, inter partes in previous suit, effect of—One of parties minor in previous litigation—Variation in custom, right to prove.

A finding in a previous suit inter partes as to the existence or non-existence of a custom of pre-emption is binding on the parties in a subsequent suit subject only to the condition that it is open to the either party to show in the subsequent suit that the custom has ceased to exist or has in any other way been abandoned. [p. 463, col. 2.]

The mere fact that one of the parties to the subsequent suit was a minor in the previous litigation does not take away from the binding force of the finding in the previous suit. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 31st of May 1924.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. On a previous occasion Deoraj Singh for himself and acting as guardian for his nephew Udai Narain Singh transferred a share in this same village to the present vendees Tilakdhari Singh and Amrat Singh. The plaintiff No. 1, and the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, brought a suit for pre-emption and obtained a decree. In that suit it was found against the vendees that there was a custom of pre-emption in this village under which the vendors were bound to make the offer to the co-sharers in the first instance. About the same time the minor Udai Narain Singh through another next friend brought a suit for cancellation of the sale-deed on the ground of want of legal necessity. The decree in the suit was a conditional decree and the document was to be set aside on payment of a part of the sale consideration. The property having gone back to the family the same has now been sold by Deoraj Singh and Udai Narain Singh who is now a major, in favour of the same vendees. The Courts below have held that the finding in the previous suit between the parties does not operate as res judicata. They have held that in view of the interpretation now put on wajib-ul-arzs of a similar nature by a recent Full Bench of this Court the evidence is not sufficient to establish the custom.

In our opinion the finding in the previous suit being inter partes must bind the present defendants. The question of the existence or non-existence of a custom of pre-emption is not a pure question of law but is a mixed question of law and fact which depends on evidence which may be oral or documentary. If a finding is once arrived at that ought to bind the parties to that litigation, of course it would be open to either party at a subsequent stage to show that the custom has ceased to exist or has in any other way been abandoned.

The learned Advocate for the respondents has argued before us that inasmuch as Udai Narain Singh was a minor on the previous occasion the vendors are not the same. With this contention I do not agree. In the pre-emption suit Udai Narain Singh was impleaded under the guardianship of a person who was appointed by the Court, and he was bound by the finding arrived at in that litigation. Next the defendants vendees claimed to derive title through Udai Narain Singh on the previous occasion and they claimed to do the same on this occasion. It is, therefore, difficult to hold that they are defending this case on a title derived from a different person. I am, therefore, of opinion that the finding in the previous suit as between plaintiff No. 1 Deonath Singh and the two vendees is res judicata. There is no evidence to show that this custom has fallen into disuse. The learned Advocate for the respondents has drawn our attention to the fact that after the institution of the suit the recent pronouncement of a Full Bench in Randhir Singh v Rajpal Miser (1) has thrown a doubt on the previous view. That case, however, did not come from this particular village and there is nothing to show that the decision of the Full Bench became known to the co-sharers and they put an end to the custom in this village before the decree was passed by the first Court.

The learned Advocate for the appellants concedes that it is difficult to hold the other plaintiffs can take advantage of this finding on the ground that their father was a party to the previous litigation inasmuch these plaintiffs cannot be said to claim title through their father. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

Mukerji, J.—I entirely agree. I wish to say one word on the question whether Udai Narain Singh is bound by the previous judgment in the pre-emption case.

Udai Narain Singh was made a party although he was a minor. Prima facie the judgment would bind him and for the binding character of the judgment it is not necessary that Udai Narain Singh should have been an adult at the date of the suit. Udai Narain Singh could have escaped the binding effect of the judgment by showing that he was not represented by a proper guardian and that, therefore, he was not at all represented in the suit. He has not taken any such plea and such a plea would be one of fact. I should, therefore, have no hesitation in holding that the pre-emption suit is as much binding on Udai Narain Singh as on Deoraj Singh.

By the Court.—We allow the appeal of Deonath Singh alone and setting aside the decrees of the Courts below remand the case to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court for disposal of the remaining issues according to law. The suit of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 will stand dismissed. The plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 will bear their own costs and will pay to the contesting defendants half of their costs incurred so far. The costs in this Court will include Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

Leave to appeal to Privy Council cannot be granted where the appeal in the High Court has been dismissed for want of prosecution.

Buddhist Law regarding the rights of a lesser or inferior wife when living apart from her husband having been established by a series of decisions is not a substantial question of law within the meaning of s. 110, C. P. C.

Mr. Burjorjee, for the Applicants.
Mr. Kyaw Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are two applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decisions of the Appellate Side of this Court passed in Civil First Appeals Nos. 183 and 187 of 1923.

The learned Advocate for the applicants admits that in the second of these applications Ma Pwa Yin's appeal was dismissed on the 7th of January 1924 for want of prosecution. In these circumstances it is obvious that leave to appeal cannot be granted to her in that case. She is, however, a respondent in Ma Than's appeal, and as such her claim was considered in the judgment from which an appeal to the Privy Council is sought. Consequently, if we grant the leave to appeal in the first of these applications, Ma Pwa Yin's status and claim would necessarily come up for consideration before their Lordships.

Admittedly, the decree sought to be appealed from affirmed the decree of the District Court. Consequently, under s. 110 of the C. P. C., the appeal must involve some substantial questions of law. It is admitted that the judgment in appeal followed the decisions of this Court reported as Maung

Tha Tun v. Ma Thein Yin (1) and Ma Thein Yin v. Maung Tha Dun (2).

For the applicants it is urged that these decisions revolutionized Burmese Buddhist Law in respect of the rights of a lesser or inferior wife when living apart from her husband and occasionally visited by him, and that in such circumstances it is only right and proper that a ruling should be obtained from the highest tribunal. We cannot agree that the rulings in question revolutionize Burmese Buddhist Law at all.

It is true that no lower Burma Ruling has been cited before us. But successive Upper Burma Rulings for about 30 years have been cited, and they are in general agreement with the principles enunciated by a Bench of this Court in Maung Tha Dun v. Ma Thein Yin (1) and Ma Thein Yin v. Maung Tha Dun (2). We need only refer to the Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Hodgkinson's judgment in Ma Gywe v. Ma Thi Da (3), the Judicial Commissioner, Sir H. Thirkell White's judgment in Ma U Byu v. Ma Hnyin (4) and the Judicial Commissioner, Sir George Shaw's judgment in Shwe Ma v. Mi Me (5). Some remarks by the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Mr. McColl, in Mi Kin Gale v. Mi Kin Gyi (6) would seem to indicate a different opinion, i.e., "A wife who lives in a separate house from her husband is entitled or is not entitled to inherit according as she is a wife or a concubine." But a perusal of the facts of that case shows clearly that this is but an obiter dictum and not necessary for the decision arrived at. The decisions of this Court following, as they do, successive decisions of the higest Court in Upper Burma are, in our opinion, consistent with the law as stated in the Manukye Dhammathat, Vol. X, s. 42, and should be regarded as settled law. In these circumstances, we do not consider that we would be justified in certifying that the case involves a substantial question of law.

It is to be observed that though the application is made in the name of Ma Than, a lesser wife of the deceased Shwe Yin, she seems to have parted with all interest in the subject-matter of the suit by selling her rights to one Khorasany who similarly purchased the rights of Ma Pwa Yin. In these circumstances unless we were satisfied, as we are not, that a substantial point of law was involved, we would not be disposed to assist a gambler in litigation at the expenses of the legal heirs to the estate.

The applications are accordingly dismissed with costs five gold mohurs in each case.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 15th September 1925.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This second civil appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent on the basis of two hundis, both executed on the 6th July 1920, one for Rs. 400 and one for Rs 200. The defendant-appellant pleaded in defence that the hundis were without consideration and were executed in order to induce the plaintiff to stifle a prosecution pending against him for embezzlement. This defence was accepted by the Court of first instance. On appeal the District Judge of Muttra, remanded the case to determine whether at the date of the execution of the hundis there was any liability on the part of the defendant to pay the sum secured by the hundis to the plaintiff, and secondly whether the hundis were executed to induce the plaintiff to abstain from prosecution of the embezzlement case. The first Court found both these issues in favour of the defendant but the Additional Subordinate Judge has decided that there was existing a liability on the part of the defendant which served as consideration for the hundis, and that this being the case the fact, that the execution of the hundis operated to induce the plaintiff to stop the prosecution for embezzlement, was immaterial.

(6) 8 Ind. Cas. 1169; U. B. R. (1910-13) 42 at p. 49.

The facts of the case appear to be as follows. The defendant was occupying a building belonging to the plaintiff as a press and type-foundry. He became indebted to the plaintiff to the amount of Rs. 1,164 and in order to liquidate this debt he agreed to make over the machinery and fittings to the plaintiff for the nominal sum of Rs. 1,164.

He was, however, to continue to occupy the building and in addition to the rent due for such occupation, he was to pay a further sum for use of the machinery.

That this was the case is proved by two documents executed by the plaintiff and defendant respectively on the 4th of May 1919.

On the 30th of June 1920, the plaintiff lodged a criminal complaint against the defendant that he had wrongly sold and disposed of some of the machinery to a third party, some one living at Hathras. The 22nd July 1920 was fixed for trying the case. Before this date, namely, on the 6th July 1920, Rs. 480 appears to have been the amount calculated as depreciation of the total machinery by reason of the alienation to the man at Hathras.

Subsequently on the 12th October 1920, the remainder of machinery was sold to one Parsi Mal for Rs. 700, which was paid over to the plaintiff.

On these facts, it is contended by the appellants' Counsel that the Rs. 480, secured by their hundi, were merely money paid for the stifling of the criminal prosecution. With this suggestion we do not agree. The defendant was liable to make good to the plaintiff the value of any machinery wrongfully alienated by him when using that machinery as lessee of it from the plaintiff. It makes no difference that the plaintiff also was entitled to prosecute the defendant for embezzlement. The decision of the Allahabad High Court relied upon by the lower Court, i. e., Jai Kumar v. Gauri Nath (1), appears to us to be applicable. "Where a bona fide debt exists, and where the transactions between the parties involve a civil liability as well as possibly a criminal act, a promissory note given by the debtor executed for the debt constitutes a valid agreement." We have been referred to a decision of the Calcutta High Court by the appellants' Counsel, but that decision does not appear to have been based on facts in the slightest degree similar to the present one. It may be that the lower Appellate Court misconstrued the evidence, in its decision as to the existence of the liability, but the liability existed, we hold, for the reasons stated above. We, therefore, see no reason to interfere in second appeal with the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal under O. XLI, r. 11, C. P. C.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BURMA—

MESSRS. STEEL BROTHERS & CO.—LTD.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 2 (4), 4 (1), 6, 42 (1)—Non-resident assessee, liability of, to income tax—Non-resident limited company in India engaged in manufacture and export of worked up goods and raw materials—Principles of assessment.

Under s. 42 (1), Income Tax Act, all profits or gains accruing or arising to a non-resident, whether directly, or indirectly, through or from any business connection or property in British India are deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India. [p. 481, col. 1.]

Rogers Pratt Shellac Co. v. Secretary of State for India, 83 Ind. Cas. 273; 52 C. 1; 40 C. L. J. 110; 28 C. W. N. 1074; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 34, followed.

A limited Company was registered in London under the English Companies Act with its headquarters in London and was admittedly a non-resident of British India. It carried on large business operations in Burma in connection with rice, timber and cotton. It also had various rice mills, saw mills, cotton ginning mills and vegetable oil mills in Burma whereby commodities or raw material was worked up into forms suitable for use. The Company exported the material thus worked up as well as raw commodities without working them up in any way :

Held, (1) that in determining whether any income, profits or gains arise or accrue, it is not only the last stage of the accrual that has to be looked to but the previous stages also have to be taken into consideration and that, therefore, the mere fact that produce of the Company was sold in London and the money was received there did not prevent profits or gains accruing or arising or being deemed to accrue or arise in British India from being taxable under the Income Tax Act; [p. 481, col. 2]

(2) that no distinction, so far as liability to income tax was concerned, could be drawn between profits on produce which had undergone some process of conversion or working up by the assessee in Burma, and profits on produce purchased by the assessee in Burma and exported in the same form as when purchased; [p. 481, col. 1.]

(3) that in arriving at the amount of profits liable to income-tax, a reasonable commission, agents' commission, should be allowed on goods exported and sold in London. [p. 482, col. 1.]

Rogers Pratt Shellac Co. v. Secretary of State for India, 83 Ind. Cas. 273; 52 C. 1; 40 C. L. J. 110; 28 C. W. N. 1074; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 34 and Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk, (1900) A. C. 588; 69 L. J. P. C. 87; 83 L. T. 4, referred to.

(4) that profits arising from contracts of insurance entered into by the Head Office in rice cargoes consigned to it by the Rangoon branch were not taxable in India; [ibid.]

(5) that commission earned by the Company through its export department on stores, etc., purchased and shipped from the United Kingdom to Burma could not be assessed to income-tax. [ibid.]

Reference made by the Commissioner of Income Tax, Burma, under the provisions of s. 66 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922.

REFERENCE.—This is a Reference made on my own motion under s. 66 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1922. The questions of law on which it is desired that the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court should give a decision have arisen in the course of an appeal preferred before me by Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company, Limited, against an assessment order of the Assistant Commissioner of Income Tax, Rangoon. The said assessment order was passed by the Assistant Commissioner in exercise of the powers of an Income Tax Officer with which he had been invested by an order passed under s. 5 (4) of the Income Tax Act, 1922. Against such an order appeal lies in accordance with s. 30 of the Act to the Commissioner of Income Tax.

2. The facts regarding the assessee and the assessment are set forth in the following paragraphs. Messrs. Steel Brothers and Company, Limited, are a limited Company registered in London under the English Companies Acts. The head-quarters of the business is in London. The Company claims to be, and it is admitted that it is, a non-resident of British India.

3. In addition to their business activities in the United Kingdom and in British India, Messrs. Steels carry on business in Siam. Part of their income is also derived from investments in the United Kingdom. Income from both these sources, viz., business carried on outside of British India and investments in the United Kingdom, do not come under the scope of the Indian Income Tax Act and are not concerned in the present reference. Part of Messrs. Steels' income also is derived from business wholly carried on within British India. As a type of this class of business we may take, for instance, the purchase of paddy in Burma, the milling of it in Burma and the sale of the resulting rice in Bombay. Income from this class of business is admittedly liable to Indian income tax and it also is not concerned in the present reference.

The third class of business carried on by Messrs. Steels involves transactions both in British India and outside of British India. As a type of such transactions we may take business consisting in the purchase of paddy in Burma, the milling of it in Burma, and the sale of the resulting rice in London. It is with the profits from this third class of business that the present reference in part is concerned. The profits arising to Messrs. Steels from business done on account of subsidiary or connected companies is also concerned.

4. Messrs. Steels' business activities in Burma are numerous and there are different departments of their business dealing with imports, insurance, shipping, rice, timber, cotton and produce and oil.

Part of Messrs. Steels' business is carried on direct and part is carried on by means of subsidiary Companies. Thus dealing with imports and insurance there is a subsidiary Company George Gordon & Company (Burma) Limited, the whole of the shares in which are held by Messrs. Steels with the exception of a few held by Messrs. Steels' nominees. Another subsidiary Company is the Burma Company, Limited, which carries on part of Messrs. Steels' business in rice.

As regards oil Messrs. Steels carry on the managing agency of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, in which Company they have large share-holding interests. The relations of Messrs. Steels with this Company will be noticed in detail below.

Of the branches of their business which Messrs. Steels themselves carry on direct, the only department concerned in the present reference are those dealing with (a) Rice, (b) Timber, and (c) Cotton and Produce. For the purposes of the present reference it is necessary to indicate the extent of Messrs. Steels' activities in Burma in connection with each of the three departments enumerated.

5. The head-quarters of Messrs. Steels' business in India is in Rangoon where there is a large staff. In connection with their business in rice Messrs. Steels have mills in Rangoon and also in the principal exporting towns in Burma. Upcountry they also own mills where cotton is ginned and oil-seed pressed. In connection with their timber department Messrs. Steels own saw-mills and also hold leases of Government forests at various places throughout the Province. The same mills and the same staff deal with the goods and merchandise which are the subject both of Messrs. Steels' trade within India and also of their export trade. As regards rice Messrs. Steels purchase paddy in Burma which is milled in their mills in Burma. Of the three resulting products, white rice, broken rice, and bran, all three may be exported. But it does not follow that if one of the products resulting from the milling of a particular parcel of paddy is exported that the other products will also be exported. They may be sold locally. The three products, white rice, broken rice, and bran from a particular parcel of paddy may all be sold in India or they may all be exported; or any of the intermediate permutations and combinations between export and local sale may take place.

6. In the department of Cotton and Produce the principal commodities dealt in are cotton and ground-nuts. As regards cotton, raw cotton (kappas) is purchased and ginned in Messrs. Steels' mills, the resulting product being cleaned cotton and cotton-seed. The cleaned cotton is baled. Some of it is exported to Europe, some to Japan, and some of it is sold in India. Part of the cotton seed is pressed, the resulting products being cotton-seed oil and cotton seed oil-cake. The cotton-seed oil is sold locally. The cotton seed oil-cake is exported to Europe. As regards ground-nut Messrs. Steels purchase ground-nuts and press them in their mills. Of the two resulting products ground-nut oil and oil-cake all the oil-cake is exported to Europe. The ground-nut oil is all sold locally.

As regards the timber business I cannot give a more succinct account than has been supplied by Messrs. Steels themselves. The following is an extract from their letter:—" All timber extracted from our leased forests or purchased at auction is not converted for shipment to Europe. The logs are converted into the most valuable form of cut timber that their size, shape and quality permit and the squares, planks, scantlings, etc., so produced are exported to the various markets in which they can be most suitably sold or are disposed of locally. In some cases when logs are so inferior as to make it unprofitable to cut up for export or sale locally, they are auctioned by us in the form of round logs."

7. In addition to the commodities purchased in a raw form and exported by them after they had been converted in Messrs. Steels' mill into a form suitable for export Messrs. Steels also in each of the three departments of their business concerned purchase in India produce which they export out of British India in the same form as when purchased. Thus they ship quantities of rice, rice bran, cut timber, ground-nut oil-cake, beans, etc., which they purchase in a form ready for export and which are submitted to no process before shipment.

None of the commodities exported by Messrs. Steels, however, was after being exported from Burma subjected to any other process before being sold by them.

8. The different items constituting the profits, the liability or non-liability of which to Indian income-tax is at issue in the present reference, are shown in Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company's Profit and Loss account and also in the "Statement of Profits" for the year ending 31st December 1922 which accompanied Messrs. Steels' return. These items are :—

(a) Profit on Burma Rice in London	68,218	14	11
(b) Profit on Timber in London ...	14,163	0	0
(c) Profit on Cotton and Produce in London	6,816	18	8
(d) Profit on Insurance in London	2,507	16	9
(e) London Commission a/c I.B.P.	3,667	8	11
(f) Sales Commission, etc., a/c Attock Oil Company Limited	8,354	13	2
(g) London Commission on Stores shipped	7,199	0	0

9. It is necessary to examine these items seriatim. It will also be necessary to subdivide some of the items into different categories from the point of view of liability to income-tax.

10. As regards the two items :

Profit on Burma Rice in London ...	68,218	14	11
Profit on Timber in London ...	14,163	0	0

the following draft of the present paragraph was made by me after interviews with Messrs. Steels' representative and was submitted by me to Messrs. Steel Brothers for their remarks :—

The first two items :—

Profit on Burma Rice in London ...	68,218	14	11

appear to be entirely homogenous for the purposes of the present reference. The two sums in question represent the profits accruing to Messrs. Steels, respectively out of their transactions in Burma rice and in Burma timber sold outside of British India. Messrs. Steel Brothers' method of accounting for this class of business is such that all the profits are shown as accruing in London or at any rate in the London books. For such business Messrs. Steels, Rangoon, run accounts with Messrs. Steels, London. In the Rangoon accounts the produce, etc., is shown as made over to Steels, London, at the actual cost. Steels, London, are debited with the actual cost incurred in Burma including the price of purchase, the cost of converting or working up and of putting the produce on board aship as nearly as can practically be ascertained. The figures concerned, therefore, represent the difference between the final price realized in London and the actual cost in Burma plus any further expenses incurred outside of India.

In reply to my letter forwarding the draft Messrs. Steels made the following observation :—

In this paragraph the description of the method of arriving at invoice cost of rice shipped to Europe obscures a most important fact, viz., that included in " the cost of converting or working up and of putting the produce on board aship," there is an item of milling hire charged to London for cost of converting paddy into rice, which leaves a margin of profit in the Burma Accounts. It will be readily understood that when mills are employed in milling both for shipment to Europe and for local sales, it is not possible to determine the exact cost of conversion of each lot of rice milled for Europe and a fixed charge is, therefore, adopted. In our experience of the rice milling industry, the milling hire thus charged is greater than can generally be obtained by selling rice in the local market. Conversely, it is our experience that we can generally buy rice in the local market as cheaply as or at a lower price than the cost to produce the same quality in our own mills inclusive of the abovementioned milling hire. On these grounds we claim that the price at which we transfer rice to our London accounts is at least as high as could be obtained by selling in Rangoon. Any profit secured over and above this price is, therefore, in our opinion, due to the operations of our London house who finance shipments and sell the rice in the various markets to which they have access by virtue of their establishment in London. Such profit we hold does not accrue or arise in India

We consider it necessary that the above facts should be brought out in the Statement of Reference.

11 The next item in question, viz., £6,816 10-8 "Profit on Cotton and Produce in London" is arrived at differently. Steels' method of accounting for this department of their business is different to that followed in the case of rice and timber Formerly up till 1920 the Cotton and Produce department of Messrs. Steels' business was carried on through the medium of a limited Company, the Jamal's Cotton & Produce Company, Limited, in which Messrs. Steels held half the shares and of which Messrs. Steels were Managing Agents. This Company is now defunct and its business has been taken over by Messrs. Steels and is run by one of their departments. But the former method of accounting as between Steels, London, and this department of the business in Burma has persisted. This is that Messrs. Steels, London, in consideration for the work done at the London end, charge Messrs. Steels, Rangoon, a commission of 2½ per cent. of the sale proceeds received for cotton and produce sold by the London Managers out of British India. In the case of this item the actual profit accruing is shown as accruing in the Rangoon books, and is shown as a Rangoon profit. (It is assumed for the purposes of the present reference that the whole of this sum of £ 6,816-18-8 is of the nature indicated.

Strictly it is not so. A sum of £ 17-15-9 represents the commission on stores shipped by the Export Department of Messrs. Steels, London. If after the decision of the Court has been obtained, it should be necessary to differentiate between this latter sum and the main sum this can be done. But in the meantime, in order to avoid further complicating a reference that is already complicated enough, the whole of the sum of £ 6,816-18-8 is assumed to be as stated above).

12. The item "Profit on Insurance in London, £ 2,507-16-9" is described by Messrs. Steel Brothers as being made up as follows :—

(a) Brokerage and discount allowed on marine insurance taken out in London covering rice shipments from Burma	2,149	19	10
(b) Agency commission on Fire, Riot and Civil Commotion covers taken out in London on rice stored in Europe	357	16	11
Total ...	2,507	16	9

13. The item "London Commission Account Indo-Burma Petroleum Co., Ltd., £ 3,667-8-11" is made up as follows :—

(a) Commissions earned by Oil Department, London, on sales of Wax, etc., in the United Kingdom for account of Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited ...	1,058	16	6
(b) Commission earned by Steels' Export Department in London on Stores, etc., purchased and shipped from the United Kingdom to Burma for account of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited	2,608	12	5
Total ...	3,667	8	11

14. The item "Sales Commission, etc.,—Attock Oil Company, Limited, £ 8,354-13-2" is made up as follows :—

(a) Allowance from Attock Oil Company, Limited, to cover administration expenses as managing agents as per agreement dated 14th November 1921 ..	6,374	13	7
(b) Agency commissions received by Steels on Insurance effected by them in London on Attock Oil Company's account	740	0	5
(c) Commissions earned by Steels' Export Department in London on Stores, etc., purchased and shipped from the United Kingdom to India	1,239	19	2
Total ...	8,354	13	2

15. The item "London Commission on stores shipped £ 7,199-0-0" is described by the Company as arising from "Commissions charged by the Export Department, London, on General Goods, Stores, etc., purchased by London Office and shipped to Steels, Rangoon."

16. As has been stated above the main part of the produce exported by Messrs. Steels in all the three departments of their business concerned consists of produce converted or worked up by them in Burma. But, again in all the three branches of their business, part of the produce exported was purchased by Messrs. Steels in Burma in the same form in which it was exported. It is possible that it will be necessary to differentiate for the purposes of the present reference between each of the two classes of business. In their books Messrs. Steels do not maintain separate accounts for the two classes of business. The extraction of figures showing separately the profit from the two classes of business would involve considerable labour. In the present case the contention of Government is that the whole of the profits concerned from both classes of business are liable to Indian income-tax. Messrs. Steels' contention is that no portion of the profits concerned is liable to income-tax. It is possible that ultimately it will not be necessary to extract the figures in question. Accordingly in order to save trouble I have decided with the consent of Messrs. Steels to adopt for the purposes of the present reference an arbitrarily fixed figure. For all the three departments of Messrs. Steels' business that are concerned it is assumed that of the total profits 80 per cent. arises from transactions in produce which was submitted to some process of conversion or working up in British India and that 20 per cent. arises from transactions in produce which was exported from British India by Messrs. Steels in the same form as when purchased by them in British India. This 80: 20 proportion is purely arbitrary. If as a result of the decision of the Honourable Judges in the present reference it is necessary to differentiate between the profits of the two classes of business, the exact figures will have to be worked out later on.

According to this arrangement we have the following sub-division of some of the items enumerated in para. 8 above :—

I. The item (a) rice profits in London £ 68,218 14s. 11*d*. is divided as follows:—

(ii) Profits in London on rice purchased in India and exported in the same form ...	13,643	14	11

II. The item "Profits on Timber in London" must be similarly sub-divided as follows:—

(b) (i) Profits in London on timber which has been converted or worked up in India ...	11,330	8	0
(ii) Profits in London on timber which has been exported from India in the same form as it was purchased ...	2,832	12	0

17. As regards the item shown as "London Profits on Cotton and Produce £ 6,816-18 8," as has been stated above this sum is really wrongly described in the accounts. The particular method of accounting which Messrs. Steels have adopted as regards this part of their business cannot in any way affect the liability or otherwise to income-tax of the profits concerned. There is nothing in this department of Messrs. Steels' business that is fundamentally different to the business done by the Rice Department and Timber Department. The decision of the Court on the liability to Indian income-tax of the profits of the Rice Department and of the Timber Department will be applicable to the profits of the Cotton and Produce Department.

18. The remaining items appear to involve s. 42 (I) of the Act. As regards the items "Profit on Insurance in London" and "London Commission on Stores shipped," Messrs. Steels, London, and their branch, Messrs. Steels, Rangoon, are the two parties concerned. In connection with the other items, it is necessary to examine the relations between Messrs. Steels and (a) the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, (b) the Attock Oil Company, Limited, and (c) the Burma Company, Limited. The Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, was originally founded by Messrs. Steel Brothers and Messrs. A. S. Jamal Brothers, each of whom held half of the issued shares. The original authorized capital of the Company was Rs. 1,00,00,000 of which Rs. 93,38,000 was issued almost immediately. The issued shares were held equally between Messrs. Steels and Messrs. Jamals up till the end of 1921 when Messrs. Jamals fell behind. In the last annual statement filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies of a total of 1,55,950 shares issued, 92,975 shares were held by Messrs. Steel Brothers direct. The original articles of association contain provisions ensuring that in the event of new shares being issued half of every such issue should be offered to Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company, Limited, and half to Messrs. A. S. Jamal Brothers & Company and in the event of either of these two parties not exercising its option of taking up its full quota of shares that the other party should have the right of pre-emption before any shares were offered to the public. The Articles of Association also contain provisions that, while certain conditions should continue, Messrs. Steels had the right to nominate, out of a directorate of three, one Director and Messrs. Jamals had the right of nominating another Director. Messrs. Steels and Messrs. Jamals had the right of jointly nominating the third Director. By the Articles of Association it was also laid down that Messrs. Steels should be the Managing Agents of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, for so long as they were willing to act in that capacity. Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company, Limited, were precluded from engaging in any other oil business in India and without the consent of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, even from holding shares in another Oil Company in India. The Articles of Association of the Attock Oil Company, Limited, of 1919 reserve to Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company, Limited, certain rights as regards the taking up of new shares issued by the Attock Oil Company, Limited. These rights were exercised through the medium of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, which holds a large part of shares in the Attock Oil Company, Limited. By the Articles of Association of the Attock Oil Company, Limited, the Managing Agency of the Attock Oil Company, Limited, was reserved to Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company, Limited. As regards the third subsidiary Company, the Burma Company, Limited the whole of the shares in this Company are held by Messrs. Steel Brothers and Company, Limited, and by Assistants in Messrs. Steel Brothers and Company, Limited.

19 I think it best to refer to each item separately and accordingly submit the appended statement of the question referred:—

I. Is the whole or part of the sum of £68,218-14-11 described as London Profits on Rice and consisting of £54,575-0 0 profits on produce which has undergone some process of conversion or working up in Messrs. Steels' hands in Burma and £ 13,643-14-11 profits on produce purchased in Burma and exported in the same form as when purchased., liable to Indian income tax?

II. Is the whole or part of the sum of £14,163-0 0 shown as London profits on timber and consisting of £11,330-8-0 being profits on timber which has undergone some process of conversion or working up in Messrs. Steels' hands in Burma and of £2,832-12-0 being profits on timber purchased in Burma and exported in the same form as when purchased liable to Indian income-tax?

III. Is the whole or part of the sum of £6,816-18-8 (approximately) described as London profits on cotton and produce and consisting of £5,453-10-11 (approximately) being profits on cotton and produce which has undergone some process of conversion or working up in Messrs. Steels' hands in Burma and £1,363-7-9 (approximately) being profits on cotton and produce purchased in Burma and exported in the same form as when purchased liable to Indian income-tax?

IV, Is the whole or part of the sum of £2,507-16-9 described as profits on insurance in London and consisting of £2,149-19-10 being brokerage and discount allowed on marine insurance taken out in London covering rice shipments from Burma and £357-16-11 being Agency Commission on Fire, Riot and Civil Commotion covers taken out in London on rice stored in Europe liable to Indian income-tax?

V. Is the whole or part of the sum of £3,667-8-11 described as "London Commission Account, Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited," and consisting of £1,058-16-6 being commission earned by the Oil Department, London, on sales of wax, etc., in the United Kingdom for account of the Indo Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, and £2,608-12-5 being commission earned by Steels' Export Department in London on stores, etc., purchased and shipped from the United Kingdom to Burma for account of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, liabe to Indian Income-tax?

VI. Is the whole or part of the sum, of £8,354-13-2 described as "Sales Commission, etc.,—Attock Oil Company, Limited," and consisting of £6,374-13-7 being allowance from Attock Oil Company, Limited, to cover administration expenses as Managing Agents as per agreement dated 14th November 1921, £40-0 5 being Agency Commission received by Steels' London, on insurances effected by them in London, on Attock Oil Company's account and £1,239-19-2 being commissions earned by Steels' Export Department in London on stores, etc., purchased and shipped from the United Kingdom to India liable to Indian income-tax?

VII. Is the whole or part of the sum of £7,199-0-0 described as "London Commission on stores shipped" liable to Indian income tax?

In this case the plan which I think it will be best to follow is first to discuss the general principles of law involved and then to apply these to each of the six questions stated.

2. At one of the hearings it was put forward by the Barrister who appeared for Messrs. Steels that the principal decided cases on which they rely in their contention that the items of income at present under reference are not liable to Indian income-tax are the cases Secretary to the Board of Revenue, (Income tax) Madras v. Madras Export Co (1) and the English case Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (2). The claim of Messrs. Steels, however, is very much wider than the claims put forward against the Revenue Authorities either in the Madras Export Company's case (1) or in Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (2) or in any of the other leading English cases. For convenience these English cases may be quoted here: Sulley v. Attorney-General (3), Erichsen v. Last (4), Tischler v. Apthorpe (5), Pommery v. Apthorpe (6) Colquboun v. Brooks (7), Werle v. Colquhoun (8), Sanpaule (Brazilian Ry. v.

Carter(9) Crookston v. Inland Revenue (10) and Weiss Biheller & Brooks, Ld., v. Farmer (11) In all of these cases which concern dealing in commodities, the trading the profits of which it was proposed to tax was the purchase or sale of a finished article or of an article which was not transformed by manufacture within the taxing realm while in the hands of the person whom it was proposed to tax. Messrs. Steels however go much further. As stated in para. 7 of the statement of Facts the vast bulk of the rice, timber, cotton, oil-cake, etc., which Messrs. Steels exported during the accounting period now in question was produce which had been submitted to some process of manufacture in British India by Messrs. Steels before export. The claim of Messrs. Steels is that none of the profits which arise, for instance, from the export and sale out of British India of teak extracted from Burma forests and converted in Burma to a form marketable in Europe is liable to Indian income-tax.

3. I think that there are two general questions of law which it is necessary to decide before each of the questions referred can be properly decided. These two principal questions of law are.

(a) whether a person who makes profits by buying or extracting produce in British India transforming or working it up by mechanical process in British India and exporting and selling it outside of British India is liable to pay Indian income-tax on such profits and

(b) whether certain classes of income derived by a non-resident from a business connection in British India are made liable to Indian income-tax by the provisions of s. 42 sub-s. 1, of the Indian Incom-Tax Act, XI of 1922.

4. In connection with both these general questions it is pertinent to observe that the definition of "trade" in s. 237 of the United Kingdom Income Tax Act of 1918 is practically the same as the definition of "business in s. 2, sub-s. (4) of the Indian Income Tax Act, XI of 1922.

5. In Murray's "New English Dictionary" to "manufacture" is defined as "to work up (material) into forms suitable for use." In Annandale's "Concise English Dictionary" "manufacture" is defined as "the operation of reducing raw materials into a form suitable for use by more or less complicated processes". In Chambers "Twentieth Century Dictionary" to "manufacture" is defined as "to make from raw materials by any means into a form suitable for use." According to these definitions it appears to me to be self-evident that Messrs. Steels' operations in the milling of rice, in the extraction and conversion of timber, in the ginning of raw cotton and the pressing of oil-seeds all amount to "manufacture."

6. As regards the former of the two principal questions to be decided, namely, whether profits derived from the sale outside of British India of commodities converted or worked up in British India are liabe to Indian income-tax, I can find no legal authority whatever to support the view that the profits in question are not taxable. The profits concerned arise from activities which include manufacture in British India. Accordingly under the definition in s. 2 sub-s. (4) of the Indian Income Tax Act, Messrs. Steels' activities in British India in connection with the produce from which the profits in question arise amount to carrying on business. All the profits arising therefrom appear to be liable to Indian income-tax under the provisions of s. 4 sub-s. (1) and ss. 6 and 10.

7. The law on the subject is clearly set forth in the Calcutta Ruling Rogers Pratt Shellac Co. v. Secretary of State for India (12) by Mr. Justice Chatterjea at the end of his judgment.

"So far as the factory at Wyndhamgunj is concerned, it clearly comes within the Act. Admittedly there is a manufacturing branch of the Company at that place, and under s. 2 cl. (3) of Act VII of 1918 'business' includes among other things any 'manufacture' The income, therefore, from such manufacture would be income from 'business' and as such taxable under ss. 3 and 5 of the Act."

In this respect there is no difference between Act VII of 1918 to which Mr. Justice Chatterjee refers and the present Act XI of 1922. The case quoted Rogers Pratt Shellac Co. v. Secretary of State for India (12) is the only Indian case I can find dealing directly with the question under examination. The same question arose in a Madras case, Chief Commissioner of Income-Tax Madras v. North Anantapur Gold Mines Ld. (13). In this case a Gold Mining Company which had its registered office in London earned profits from the sale in Great Britain of gold mined in the Ananthpur District in the Madras Presidency. The Company contended that as the sale of the gold took place entirely in Great Britain its profits did not arise and accrue in India. The Madras High Court in refusing to issue a mandamus requiring the Commissioner of Income tax to state a case incidentally expressed the opinion that having regard to the language of the Act the assessment was validly imposed. The relevant passage is at page 728 of I. L. R. 44 Madras, 1921, where Wallace, C. J., is reported as stating "As regards this particular case, I will only say that while the Commissioner has rightly based his decision on the language of the Indian section, which differs materially from the corresponding section of the English Act, etc."

It is to be noted that this question, i. e., the first of the two general questions set out in para. 3 above, did not arise at all in the Madras Export Company's case (1).

8. I can find no relevant English ruling. So far as I can ascertain it has never been contended that a Company carrying on manufacture in the United Kingdom is not liable to English income-tax on its profits. No process of manufacture was concerned in any of the relevant English cases. In Sulley v. Attorney-General (3) the firm which it was sought to tax purchased piecegoods in England and sold them in America. In Werle v. Colquhoun (8) and Tischler v. Apthorpe (5) and also in Grainger v. Gough (14) the business concerned was the sale of French champagne in England. In Crookston v. Inland Revenue (10) the business was the importation of phosphates from Algeria. In Erichsen v. Last (4) the business concerned was the despatch of foreign cablegrams from the United Kingdom. In Weiss, Biheller & Brooks, Ld. v. Farmer (11) the business consisted in the sale in the United Kingdom of gas mantles imported from Holland.

9. There is however a Colonial case decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which appears to apply directly to the question at present under examination. The case is Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (15). In this case the assessee was a Company registered in the Colony of Victoria and managed by a Board of Directors with head-quarters at Melbourne in Victoria. The Company carried on the business of mining in the Colony of New South Wales. The ore obtained in New South Wales was treated in that Colony but the merchantable product was sold outside the Colony of New South Wales. The Income-Tax authorities in New South Wales sought to tax the Company on the whole of its profits. In the judgment the operations of the Company are divided into four parts:—

(1) the getting of the ore;
(2) the refining of the ore;
(3) the sale;
(4) the receipt of the money.

Of these four processes only the first two took place in New South Wales. In the judgment it is laid down as follows with regard to the four processes mentioned:—

All these processes are necessary stages which terminate in money and the income is the money resulting less the expenses attendant on all the stages.

The Judicial Committee held that as the profits of the first two stages arose or accrued in New South Wales it necessarily followed that the Company was liable on the whole of their profits.

10. The whole judgment of the Judicial Committee in this case supports the finding in the Rogers Pyatt Shellac Company's case (12). This ruling also points to the conclusion that the profits we are considering, namely, profits derived from the sale outside of British India of produce extracted and worked up in British India, are liable to Indian income-tax.

11. In applying the finding in the case of Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (15) to an Indian case it is necessary to consider whether there is any difference between the relevant sections in the Indian Income Tax Act and the sections in the New South Wales taxing Statute. The relevant sections of the latter Act are quoted in the judgment cited. It is clear from the judgment that the words "earned", "derived" and "arising and accruing" are used interchangeably throughout. Under the New South Wales Law tax was payable on the annual amount of all incomes—

(2) arising or accruing to any person wheresoever residing in New South Wales from any profession or business carried on in New South Wales.........

There is a provision in s. 27, however, to the effect that—

(3) No tax shall be payable in respect of income earned outside the Colony of New South Wales.

The net effect of these provisions appears to me to be exactly the same as the net effect of the relevant section of the Indian Income Tax Act. The Indian Act makes taxable profits arising or accruing in British India or deemed to arise or accrue in British India. The New South Wales Act makes taxable profits arising and accruing from business carried on in New South Wales. There is so far no local limitation as regards arising or accruing. But the clause which exempts income earned outside New South Wales has, in view of the fact that "earned" and "derived" and "arising and accruing" are treated as being interchangeable, the effect of making the law the same as the Indian law.

12. On the above view both on the authority of the Calcutta High Court in the Rogers Pratt Shellac Company's case(12) and on that of the Judicial Committee in the case of Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (15) there is ground for holding that if any part of the process of arising or accruing takes place in British India the whole of the profits are liable to Indian income-tax. An alternative view, for which I can find no legal authority whatever, is that the total profits in question can be divided up into two portions:—

(a) a portion arising and accruing in British India;

(b) a portion arising and accruing outside of British India.

There is no means of making such a division. The only actual profits are constituted by the money received by Messrs. Steels in London less the expenses incurred at all stages of the transactions involved. But if it were theoretically possible to divide the profits into two parts as above, the part (a) would on the authority of the Rogers Pratt Shellac Copany's case (12) and the Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (15) be liable to Indian income-tax. The second portion would, it is submitted, be income derived by a non-resident from a business connection in British India, and would, as is claimed below, also be liable to Indian income-tax.

13. I turn now to examine the second principal question of law, namely, whether profits derived directly or indirectly from a business connection in British India are made liable to Indian income-tax by the provisions of s. 42 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922.

On this point there are two conflicting Indian rulings. In 1922 in the Madras Export Company's case (1) the Madras High Court held that s. 42 (1) is a machinery section and that it does not make liable to Indian income-tax any income which would not be otherwise chargeable. In March 1924 the Calcutta High Court in the case of Rogers Pratt Shellac Co. v. Secretary of State for India (12) dissented from the view taken by the Madras High Court and held that s. 42 (1) is a charging section. There are the two principal rulings. But there are references in other Indian cases which throw light on the questions at issue.

14. The questions at issue have been so thoroughly examined and the findings so clearly set forth by the Honourable Judges of the Calcutta High Court that it is unnecessary for me to do more than shortly to recapitulate the main points decided. As pointed out by Mr. Justice Mukerjee with reference to the Madras Export Company's case (1) "the learned Judges in that case proceeded upon the supposition that the Legislature intended no change from the earlier Statutes which to a large extent were modelled on the English Statutes. That there is now a substantial difference is clear, and has been recognised in the cases, amongst others, of Secretary to the Commissioner, Salt, Abkari and Separate Revenue, Madras v. Ramanathan Chetty (16), In re Aurangabad Mills, Ltd. (17) and In the matter of A. John & Co. (18)."

Under the United Kingdom law a person is liable to United Kingdom income-tax who exercises a trade in the United Kingdom. In the English cases concerned which have been enumerated in s. 2 above the Judges have divided up the kind of trading concerned which, as has been pointed out, above, practically invariably consists in the purchase or sale of a completely finished article, into three constituent parts;—

(a) the making of the contract;
(b) the delivery of the goods;
(c) the payment for these goods.

The Judges have decided the English cases according to the locality in which one or other of the three constituent parts of trading has taken place. The provisions of the Indian Income Tax Act as has been pointed out are entirely different. Section 4 (1) of Act XI of 1922 expressly lays down that the Act applies not only to (a) income accruing or arising or received in British India, but also to (b) income deemed under the provisions of this Act to accrue or arise or to be received in British India. Section 42 (1) enacts that in the case of any person residing out of British India all profits or gains accruing or arising to such person whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection or property in British India shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India. The sorts of income described in s. 42 (1) are deemed to accrue or arise or be received in British India and, therefore, as laid down in s. 4 (1) the provisions of the Act apply to them and they are liable to Indian income-tax.

15. The scheme of the Indian Act appears to me to be as follows. The principal charging section is s. 4 (1). This, I think, is made more clear from the fact that the principal exempting section is s. 4 (3). Section 4 (1) and also s. 4 (2) create a liability to income-tax. In s. 6 income, profit, or gains which, under the provisions of s. 4 (1) or 4 (2), are liable to tax, are divided into heads. Sections 7 to 12 lay down the method in which the chargeability to tax is to be applied to the heads into which income liable to tax is divided by s. 6. Sections 6 to 12 may be described as secondarily or derivatively charging sections. They prescribe the manner in which the chargeability to tax which is created by s. 4 (1) or 4 (2) is to be applied to the several heads into which income liable to tax has been divided for the purposes of assessment.

It appears to me that the fundamental fallacy underlying the decision of the Honourable Judges of the Madras High Court is that they have treated s. 5 of Act VII of 1918 (which corresponds with s. 6 of Act XI of 1922) as being the principal charging section. It is clear from various passages in the printed judgments that the Honourable Judges regarded s. 5 as being the principal charging section. Thus in the head note it is stated: "It (s. 31 of the Income Tax Act, 1918) is not a section designed to declare some other gains taxable beyond what has been declared by s. 5 of the Act to be taxable." Lower down in the headnote we find "s. 33 (1) of the Income Tax Act was not intended in any way to enlarge the scope of s. 5." Sir Walter Schwabe, C. J., states (I. L. R. Madras 46, page 363, line 1), "by s. 5 which is the charging section." Lower down, (page 364, line 8), he says, "the words are in my view most unsuitable if intended to have a wider meaning than the well-known meaning of the words in the charging s. 5 (iv)........ ..." Mr. Justice Wallace (page 368, line 7) states, "The charging section of the Act is s. 5," and lower down (at page 368, line 28) he states, "s. 33 (1) is not designed or situated in the Act as a charging section in addition to s, 5." On page 369, line 7, it is stated that "It is not a charging section designed to declare some other gains taxable beyond what has been declared by s. 5 to be taxable".

16. This view that s. 5 of Act VII of 1918 (corresponding to s. 6 of Act XI of 1922) is the principal charging section is quite at variance with previous opinions given by the Honourable Judges of the Madras High Court and also with the stated opinions of other High Courts in India. Thus the whole scheme of Act VII of 1918, which is the same as the scheme of Act XI of 1922, is properly set forth by Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar in his judgment at page 89 of I.L.R. Mad. 43. Again in the case Deputy Commissioner & Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras v. Bhanjee Ramjee & Co., (19), the Honourable Judges correctly treat s. 3 of Act VII of 1918 (corresponding to s. 4 of Act XI of 1922) as being the principal charging section. I quote the beginning of the opinion of the Madras High Court Bench in that case:—

"Now the income which is taxable under the Act is, as provided in s. 3, 'All income from whatsoever source it is derived if it accrues or arises or is received in British India or is under the provisions of this Act, deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India.'

(19) 64 Ind. Cas. 239; 44 M. 773; 14 L. W. 75; 41 M. L. J. 191; (1921) M. W. N. 531.

And under s. 33 (i), in the case of any person residing out of British India.

'All profits or gains accruing or arising to such person whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connexion in British India shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising in British India.'

And is consequently taxable under the express provisions of s. 3."

Again in the case In re Aurangabad Mills, Ltd. (17) Mr. Justice Macleod states (p. 1289*), "The important section is s. 3, sub-s. (1) of the Act (VII of 1918). Save as hereinafter provided, this Act shall apply to all income from whatever source it is derived, if it accrues or arises or is received in British India, or is, under the provisions of this Act, deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India."

17. There are other fallacies involved in the Madras Export Company's case (1). The Madras High Court held that s. 42 (1) only applied to profits received in British India by the agent of a non-resident. But if this were so why does s. 42 (1) say that "profits... from a business connection in British India" shall be "deemed to accrue or arise in British India." It is impossible to make sense of s. 42 (1) on the view that it is a machinery section.

18. For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraphs it appears to me that s. 42 (1) of Act XI of 1922 coupled with s. 4 (1) has the effect of making liable to Indian income-tax profits or gains accruing or arising to a non-resident whether directly or indirectly through or from a business connection in British India.

19. In para. 8 above I set forth the conclusion arrived at as regards the first general question of law stated in para. 3 above, namely, that a person who makes profits from exporting produce manufactured in British India is liable to pay income-tax thereon. In the immediately preceding paragraph I have come to the conclusion that income derived by a non-resident from a business connection in British India is also liable to Indian income-tax. I now proceed to examine the six referred questions by the light of the above conclusion.

20. With regard to the question as to whether the whole or part of the sum of £68,218-14-11 described as "London profits on Rice" is liable to Indian taxation it appears to me that (a) one constituent portion £54,575 being profits arising from transactions in produce which has undergone some process of manufacture in Messrs. Steels' hands in Burma is liable to Indian income-tax under the provisions of s. 4 (1) and ss. 6 and 10 of the Indian Income Tax Act XI of 1922. Messrs. Steels carry on manufacture in Burma in respect of this produce and accordingly under the definition in s. 2. sub s. 4, they are carrying on business and liable to income-tax in respect of these profits under s. 10.

(b). With regard to the other constituent portion of the total sum concerned in the first question referred, namely, £ 16,345-14-11 being profits on produce purchased in Burma and exported in the same form, in my opinion these profits are liable to Indian income-tax under the provisions of ss. 4 (1) and 42 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act. For Messrs. Steels are by admission non-resident in British India. Their position with regard to the transactions concerned is exactly the same as that of the Rogers Pratt Shellac Co. v. Secretary of State for India (12) in the corresponding transactions in the Calcutta case. Accordingly following that decision the profits in question are profits derived from a business connection in British India and are liable to Indian income-tax.

21. With regard to the second question the two constituent items into which the profits have been divided appear to me to be exactly on all fours with the corresponding portions of the profits dealt with in question (1) and call for no further remark. The whole of these profits also is liable to Indian income-tax for the reasons given in the preceding paragraph.

22. It may be possible to differentiate Messrs. Steels' profits from the rice, timber and cotton and produce purchased by them in India and exported in the same form from the profits that were at issue in the English decided cases which have been quoted. So far as I can ascertain in all the English cases in which the profits concerned were derived from transactions in merchandise, these transactions were the only business done in the United Kingdom by the firm which it was sought to assess to income-tax. As has been shown this is not the case with Messrs. Steels. They carry on, in addition to the class of business now under examination, business to a very large extent both entirely within British India and also in exporting produce manufactured by them in British India. The same staff deals with all these classes of business. The "purchase-export" business is merely part of a larger business the profits and gains of the other parts of which are liable to income-tax. The whole of Messrs. Steels' business in Burma is a venture in the nature of commerce. It may be questioned if it is legitimate to isolate one particular type of business and hold that they are not "carrying on business" in respect of that type of business. Furthermore, Messrs. Steels themselves lease forests and own rice mills, cotton mills, saw mills and maintain a large staff to operate these. It is a legitimate presumption that they want to make all the profits possible. On this view their purchases of manufactured commodities would be made merely to supplement the available stocks of their own manufacture. On this view the "purchase-export" business would be merely ancillary to their other business. I suggest that the profits at present under reference can be differentiated for the above reasons from the profits in the English cases quoted.

23. With regard to the item £ 6,616-18-8 approximately, described as "London Profits on Cotton and Produce" it has been stated above that this sum really represents a commission of two and-a-half per cent. on the value of the Cotton and Produce sold in London. I cannot see that there is any case for exempting from Indian income-tax this sum as it stands at present. The sum in question is part of Messrs. Steels' profits. There is, in my opinion, no provision of law enabling Messrs. Steels to charge themselves a commission for doing their own business and then to claim that such commission should be allowed as a deduction from their profits for purposes of income-tax. The sum in question is, in my opinion, clearly liable to Indian income-tax. Messrs. Steels claim that the profits in question are not liable to income-tax on the ground that the profits are shown as accruing in London. The method of book-keeping adopted by Messrs. Steels, however, has nothing to do with the question of liability to income-tax. In my opinion the whole of the profits of the Cotton and Produce Department whether shown in Messrs. Steels' books as accruing in London or in Rangoon should be treated as a whole and divided into two portions in the same manner as the profits of the Rice Department and of the Timber Department, one portion representing profits on produce manufactured in India and the other portion profits on merchandise exported from India in the same form as when purchased by Messrs. Steels. The liability or otherwise to Indian income-tax of the profits of this Department would then have to be decided on the same lines as laid down in para. 20 above.

24. With regard to the fourth question referred, regarding the sums described as "Profits on Insurance in London" in my opinion the whole of these profits are liable to Indian income-tax either on the ground that the insurances in question are part of Messrs. Steels' business in rice and that as the expenses of insurance are included as a charge against the profits, so any incidental profits made by Messrs. Steels out of the same transactions in insurance should be added back to the profits. Alternatively the profits in question are profits derived from a business connection in British India and are taxable under s. 42 (1).

25. As regards the fifth question referred the relations subsisting between Messrs Steels and the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, and the Attock Oil Company, Limited, have been fully set forth in the Statement of Facts. Messrs. Steels' connection with the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, is not that of ordinary share-holders Rather it is the case that Messrs. Steels carry on an oil business and that their method of doing so is through the medium of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited. The relations between Messrs. Steels and the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, as set out in para. 18 of the Statement of Facts, and in particular the fact that the Managing Agency of this Company is reserved to Messrs. Steels by the Articles of Association appear to me to be sufficient proof of this. The profits now under question whether "Commission on Sales in the United Kingdom" or "Commission on stores exported from London" are, in my opinion, profits arising from a business connection in British India. In his judgment in the Rogers Pratt Shellac Company's case (12) Mr. Justice Mukerjee interpreted the words "Profits...... arising from a business connection in British India" as including income "which is attributable to the connection (a person) has with a business in British India." On this view the profits in question are liable to Indian income-tax.

26. The profits concerned in the sixth question referred are, in my opinion, exactly on all fours with those in the fifth question referred and are liable to Indian income-tax for precisely the same reasons.

27. The profits concerned in the last question referred, namely, "London Commission on Stores shipped £7.199" appear to me to be part of Messrs. Steels' general profits from business. This profit has been separated off only because of the particular method of book-keeping followed by Messrs. Steels. But the fact that Messrs. Steels follow a particular method of book-keeping does not affect the liability of the profits in question to income-tax. I cannot see that there is any sanction for Messrs. Steels charging themselves a commission for work done for themselves and then claiming to deduct the amount of this commission from their profits. In my opinion the profits in question should be added to Messrs. Steels' general profits which are taxable as income derived from business.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.—This is a Reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax onhis motion under s. 66 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1922.

The facts and the questions referred are clearly stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax in his reference.

The assessee is a limited Company registered in London under the English Companies' Act. Its headquarters are in London and, admittedly, it is a non-resident of British India. For many years the firm has carried on large business operations in Burma, especially in connection with rice, timber and cotton.

It was stated in Court that for some time the firm was assessed on a certain percentage of its net profits by consent and without prejudice to the strict legal liability, but the Income-tax authorities considered that this percentage was not high enough. The Company contends that none of its profits which form the subject of reference are assessable to income-tax in British India. The Commissioner of Income-tax, on the other hand, considers that all the heads of profits mentioned in his reference are assessable.

The question raised is one of very great legal and practical importance, and it has been very fully and ably argued before us for three days.

A great many cases have been cited before us, both English and Indian, but it will be only necessary, for the reasons hereinafter given, to refer to a few of these.

The assessment was made under the provisions of s. 4 (1), read with s. 42 (1) of the Indian Income-Tax Act, 1922. The provisions of s. 4 (1) run as follows:—

"Save as hereinafter provided, this Act shall apply to all income, profits or gains, as described or comprised in s. 6, from whatever source derived, accruing, or arising, or received in British India, or deemed under the provisions of this Act to accrue, or arise, or to be received in British India."

On reference to s. 6, the only head therein applicable seems to be the 4th—"Business" —In the definition section—s. 2 (4)—"'Business' includes any trade, commerce, or manufacture or any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture."

The firm admittedly has various rice mills, saw mills, cotton ginning mills and vegetable oil mills in the Province, whereby commodities or raw material are "worked up into forms suitable for use." (New Oxford Dictionary). It consequently manufactures and, so, carries on business within the Province. Any income, profits, or gains arising from such business seems to be chargeable under ss. 4 (1) and 6 of the Act of 1922.

For the assessee it is contended that no income, profit or gain accrues or arises in respect of the bulk of its rice, timber and cotton business, because these goods are shipped to the head office in London, where they are sold on the English market and the payment is received in London and not remitted to India, and that a profit or gain cannot be said to accrue or arise until the goods are sold and the money is received.

This contention was put forward in the case of Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (15) but was overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the judgment of Lord Davey.

Under the New South Wales Land and Income-Tax Assessment Act of 1895, s. 15, income-tax was payable in respect of th annual amount of all income:—

(i) "Arising or accruing to any person wheresoever residing from any .... trade,...............carried on in New South Wales,..............;

(ii) Derived from lands of the Crown held under lease..............;

(iii) Arising or accruing to any person wheresoever residing from any other source whatsoever in New South Wales not included in the preceding sub-sections."

The Company was registered in Victoria and had its head office and Board of Directors at Melbourne. It had mines in New South Wales, where the crude ore was smelted. None of the ore was sold in New South Wales, sales being made for the most part in Melbourne, and the money received for the ore either in London or Melbourne.

Their Lordships held that, whether or not the Company traded in New South Wales, so as to come within sub-s. (1), if there was income, it was clearly income from lands of the Crown held on lease and so came under sub-s. (3), and also was income from some other source in New South Wales, and so came under sub-s. (4).

As to whether there was income: "It appears to their Lordships that there are four processes in the earning or production of this income—

(i) the extraction of the ore from the soil;

(ii) the conversion of the crude ore into a merchantable product, which is a manufacturing process;

(iii) the sale of the merchantable product;

(iv) the receipt of the moneys arising from the sale.

All these processes are necessary stages which terminate in money, and the income is the money resulting less the expenses attendant on all the stages. The first process seems to their Lordships clearly within sub-s. (3) and the second or manufacturing process, if not within the meaning of 'trade' in sub-s. (1), is certainly included in the words 'any other source whatever' in sub-s. (4).

So far as relates to these two processes, therefore, their Lordships think that the income was earned and arising and accruing in New South Wales."

As the Commissioner of Income-tax, in his opinion attached to the reference, seems to have fallen into an error on this point, it is well to remember that their Lordships did not decide that the whole of the profits to the Company were chargeable. They merely answered the first question stated in the special case in the affirmative, and that question was whether the Companies had any income in 1897 within the meaning of the Act.

Applying that case to the present, it seems clear that, in determining whether any income, profits or gains arise or accrue, we must not be content to look only at the last stage of the accrual, but must take into consideration the previous stages as well.

The main battle-ground, however, in this case has been over the provisions of s. 42 (1).

For the assessee it is contended that the section is not a charging section at all, but merely a machinery section, that is, in the words of Lord Sterndale, a section which provides a method of carrying out the charge imposed by some other section; that it is embedded amongst a number of other provisions clearly of that character; that, if it is taken as a charging section, it is so wide and far reaching in its terms and so manifestly unjust in its application to non-residents, that it could not have been so intended by the Legislature; and that a fiscal burden can only be imposed upon the subject by clear and unmistakeable language.

Reliance is placed on the case of [Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (20), Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (2), Greenwood v. Smidth & Co. (21)] in its various stages in the English Courts, which has been followed by a Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of the Secretary to the Board of Revenue, (Income-tax), Madras v. Madras Export Co. (1). The English Courts were construing s. 31 of the Finance Act No. 2 of 1915, and, if the Act which we are construing was, in its provisions, identical with, or similar to, the English Finance Act, No. 2 of 1915, the decisions of the several eminent Judges, though not binding on us would naturally carry the greatest weight and authority. But a comparison of the two Acts shows that not merely in arrangement, but also in substantive provisions, the Acts are, in many respects, dissimilar.

To take one point of difference indicated by Chatterjea, J., in Rogers Pratt Shellac Co., v. Secretary of State for India (12): "It will be seen that under the English Acts, it is essential that the profits should arise from the exercise of the trade within the United Kingdom. In the Indian Acts, (VII of 1918 and XI of 1922), however, in the case of any person residing out of British India all profits or gains accruing or arising to such person whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection in British India shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India. There is no such provision in the English Acts, and that distinguishes the English Acts and the cases decided thereunder from the Indian Acts."

With regard to non-residents, the only question in the English Acts is whether there is a trade exercised in the United Kingdom. This, as we have seen, is not the case under the Indian Acts.

We may here state that, though the Madras decision, already quoted, [Secretary to the Board of Revenue (Income-tax) Madras v. Madras Export Co. (1)], was under the India Income Tax Act of 1918, for the purposes of the question before us that Act does not differ from the Act of 1922, with which we are dealing.

A significant point is that the words "or deemed under the provisions of this Act to accrue, or arise, or to be received in British India" in s. 4 (1), and the analogous words in s. 4 (2), do not appear anywhere else in the Act except in s. 42 (1).

That being so, it is, in our opinion, necessary to read both sections together to arrive at the meaning of the Legislature. In other words, it is necessary to look to s. 42 (1) to find out, in the case of a non-resident, what income, profits or gains are "deemed to accrue, or arise, or to be received in British India" under the provisions of the Act; and from s. 42 (1), we find that all profits or gains accruing or arising to a non-resident, whether directly or indirectly, through or from any business connection or property in British India is deemed to be such income, and is, therefore, chargeable under ss. 4 (1) and 6.

This is the view taken by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Rogers Rratt Shellac Co. v. Secretary of State for India (12), and we find ourselves in general agreement with the judgment of Mr. Justice Chatterjee, with which Mr Justice Chotzner agreed, and with conclusions of which Mr. Justice Mukerji was in complete agreement.

We admit the difficulty arising from the vague expression "from any business connection." Taken in its wide sense, it would render liable to Indian income-tax any profits made by a manufacturer in England on a single consignment of goods to an importer in India. This is the meaning which the Commissioner of Income Tax seems to have attached to the phrase, and is the meaning which, the learned Government Advocate contends, is the correct one. It is one, however, which we cannot adopt, as such a meaning would be repugnant to the word "business" in s. 6 as defined by s. 2 (4), and we can assign no wider meaning to it than the latter words of the definition as "any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture." It was probably used, as Mr. Justice Chatterji conjectures, as a compendious expression to cover such concerns in the nature of trade, commerce, or manufacture as arise through a branch, factorship, agency, receivership or management. But be this as it may, its meaning, in our opinion, must be strictly confined to the meaning of the word "business" in s. 6.

Applying the foregoing conclusions to the questions of reference, we would answer the first and second questions referred as follows:—

Under the authority of Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (15), we hold that the fact of the produce being sold in London and the money being received there does not prevent profits or gains accruing, or arising, or being deemed to accrue or arise in British India from being taxable under the Indian Income Tax Act.

We are also of opinion that no distinction, so far as liability to income tax is concerned, can be drawn between profits on produce, which has undergone some process of conversion or "working up" by the assessee in Burma and profits on produce purchased by the assessee in Burma and exported in the same form as when purchased.

But a serious practical question arises as to whether all the net profits are liable to Indian income-tax. As we have already seen, their Lordships of the Privy Council did not so decide in the case of Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (15). At page 42*, Mr. Justice Mukerji, in the Full Bench Case of Rogers Pratt Shellac Co. v. Secretary of State for India (12), seems to indicate that the calculation of what part of the net profits are to be deemed to arise and accrue in India and what part at the place of disposal and realization may have to be made.

No doubt, in calculating the net profits, due deductions have already been made in respect of the Home establishment; but this, in our opinion, is not sufficient.

If the assessee had not had a Head Office in London and wished to ship and dispose of its produce in the English market, it could only do so, for ordinary practical purposes, by means of commission agents there, and a reasonable remuneration to such commission agents would have to be deducted before arriving at the net profits earned. But, if the Head Office in London and the various branches controlled by the Head Office in Rangoon happen to be one and the same firm, it does not, in our opinion, affect the question. And in arriving at the amount of profits liable to Indian Income-tax, the Commissioner of Income Tax, in our opinion, should allow a reasonable commission agents' commission on the sale and realization of the produce. So much of the profits as can reasonably be attributed to commission agents' commission should not be assessable to Income-tax in Burma.

With regard to question No. 3 in para. 19 of the Reference, the Commissioner refers to the same as being claimed as a commission of 2½ per cent. of the sale proceeds received for cotton and produce sold by the London Managers out of British India in consideration for the work done at the London end. It is not clear to us whether the claim is considered as a reasonable commission agent's commission. If it is, in accordance with our answer to the previous questions, this sum should not be assessed. If it is not a reasonable commission, so much of it as would represent a reasonable commission ought to be deducted and the balance assessed to Income-tax.

With regard to question No. 4: These profits seem to have arisen on contracts of insurance entered into by the Head Office on rice cargoes consigned to it by its Rangoon branch. Admittedly, the Burma branch or agency had nothing to do with them. The profits were not merely earned in England, but the contract was entered into in England.

That the policies were effected on produce coming from Burma is much too remote a connection to justify us in holding that the profits could be deemed to arise or accrue in British India, bearing in mind the circumscribed meaning to be attached to the expression "business connection."

With regard to question No. 5: The items there referred to belong to two quite distinct categories. The sum of £2,608-12-5 is described as commission earned by Steel Brother's Export Department in London on stores, etc., purchased and shipped from the United Kingdom to Burma for account of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company. As regards this item, our answer is the same as our answer to question No. 4.

As regards the item of £1,058-16-6 which is described as commission earned by the Oil Department, London, on sale of wax, etc., in the United Kingdom for account of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, our answer is the same as our answer to question No. 3.

With regard to question No. 6: The last two items of £740-0-5 and £1,239-19-2 are, in our opinion, not liable to Income-tax in Burma. The first item of £6,374-13-7 is described as an allowance from the Attock Oil Company, Limited, to cover administration expenses as Managing Agents as per agreement dated the 14th November 1921. So much of this sum as represents profits on management in British India is assessable to India Income-tax. There are not sufficient data before us to answer this question with regard to this item more specifically.

With regard to question No. 7 the reference does not specify what part of the item arises from commission on stores not for sale, such as mill plant and accessories, and what, if any, arises from goods for sale, such as piecegoods. As we have already indicated, the Head Offie in London are entitled to charge a reasonable commission on all goods shipped to their branch in Burma. Unless the commission charged is unreasonable, it is not assessable to Income-tax in Burma.

On our finding, as neither party has wholly succeeded in its contention, we make no order as to costs.

R. L. Order accordingly.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15, Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182

– Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 39, O. XXI, r. 10—Transfer of execution, application for—Step-in-aid of execution—Limitation—Stay of execution—Deduction of period of stay in computing limitation.

An application under s. 39, C. P C., for transfer of the execution of the decree is not an application for execution within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 10, C. P. C., but an application to take a step-in-aid of execution governed by Art. 181, Sch I, Limitation Act.

Where on the request of the parties execution of a decree is stayed and the judgment-debtor is allowed a certain period to pay the decretal amount, a subsequent application for transfer of execution made within three years from the date of the expiry of the period allowed to the judgment-debtor is within time.

The period allowed to the judgment-debtor for payment of money, during which period execution remains stayed, is deducible under s. 15, Limitation Act, in computing period of limitation for an application for transfer of execution.

Silta Das v. Sheo Prasad, 4 A. 60; A. W. N. (1881) 113; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 619 and Balchand v. Raghunath Das, 4 A. 155; A. W. N. (1881) 168; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 766, distinguished.

Execution second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 19th February 1925.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this case is whether an application for the transfer of execution of a decree to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, made by a decree-holder on the 2nd of January 1924, was barred by limitation. The decree in question was passed on the 16th December 1919 and was transferred for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, where some property was attached, but on an application made by the decree-holder and Musammat Ramjanki, the principal judgment debtor, representing the estate of the original debtor, the execution was stayed but the attachment was maintained, and the judgment-debtor was granted a year's time to pay the decretal money. The present application is within time from the expiry of the said year and if the period for which the execution was stayed be excluded under s 15 of the Indian Limitation Act, also from the date on which the above compromise was filed.

The Courts below held that the application for execution was not barred by time, because the judgment-debtor was granted a year's time for the payment of the decretal money. The present application was made under s. 39 of the C. P. C., for the transfer of the execution of the decree and as such it was not an application for execution within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 10 of the C. P. C., but an application to take a step-in-aid of execution, governed by the residuary Art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act, which allows a period of three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. The right to apply accrued in this case when the period of a year for which the stay was granted expired. But whether we apply Art. 181, or Art. 182 read with s. 15 of the Indian Limitation Act, the application is within time.

The learned Counsel for the judgment-debtors-applicants has referred to the decision in Sitla Das v. Sheo Prasad (1) and Balchand v. Raghunath Das (2). But both these cases were decided when Act XV of 1877 was in force, s. 15 of which was confined to suits, the institution of which might be stayed by an injunction or order. Section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act now in force, however, applies to suits and execution proceedings alike.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss 104, 115, Sch. II, para. 5—Arbitrator, order of Court as to appointment of—Agreement to refer to arbitration, order as to—Revision.

An order directing a party to nominate a substitute for an arbitrator or else the Court would nominate one itself can only be passed as ancillary to an order directing the agreement to refer to be filed. Non-compliance with this provision is both an exercise of jurisdiction not vested as well as a failure to exercise a jurisdiction vested by law in Court and furnishes a good ground for revision.

Petition for revision of an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 20th July 1925, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 2nd April 1925.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Petitioner.

Malak Barkat Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision from an order of the District Judge of Lahore in which he quashed an order passed by the Trial Court. The order quashed ran as follows:—

"I order the defendant to nominate a substitute for Balkishen Das within seven days under para. 5 of Sch. II, otherwise I will proceed to appoint another arbitrator."

The District Judge refers to both portions of this order and goes on to say that he leaves the parties to bear their own costs.

The defendant has presented this application for revision and a preliminary objection is taken that no revision lies from an order passed on appeal in virtue of s. 104 (1) of the C. P. C. Counsel relies on s. 104 (2) read with the enabling s. 115 of the Code and on the authorities Chandu Lal v. Kokamal (1), Gurcharan Singh v. Shibdev Singh (2), Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (3) and Har Kaur v. Munni Lal (4). So far as it goes the objection is sound enough, but it ignores the fact which appears to me to be all important that such an order could only be passed as ancillary to an order directing the agreement to refer to be filed, and there is no such order. In ground No. 5 of the appeal to the District Judge it is clearly stated that no such order has been passed. Ground No. 6 is "That inasmuch as the order of the lower Court under appeal may be construed as one under para. 17, cl. (4), Sch. II, C P. C., inferentially directing the agrreement to refer to arbitration to be filed, therefore, the present appeal is preferred under s. 104 (1) (d), C. P C., to avoid all further complications" This, I understand, is in the alternative, if ground No. 5 does not prove acceptable. In his judgment the District Judge (the word plaintiff being read as defendant) has held that the defendant was estopped from raising this technical objection because he had taken part in the proceedings which followed the passing of the order by the Subordinate Judge. I do not think that this omission can be cured in this way, nor that because an order under the second portion of 17 (4) follows upon an order under the earlier portion of the same sub-rule, the existence of the latter somehow creates the former. There has, therefore, been a failure to exercise jurisdiction vested in the Subordinate Judge by law and there has also been an exercise of jurisdiction not vested in him in the sense that he has passed an order which could only be passed under certain conditions which have not been fulfilled.

I, therefore, set aside the whole order and in so far I agree with the District Judge, though not with the reasoning adopted by him. I order the Trial Court to suppliment the defect and to pass such order either directing the filing of the agreement or declining to do so as he may think right after hearing Counsel.

Messrs. Shiva Prasad Sinha and Janki Prasad, for the Applicant.

Messrs. R. K. Malaviya, S. D. Sinha, K. N. Malaviya and Debi Prasad Malaviya, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the applicant in revision has been refused leave to sue as a pauper, and he aplies to this Court to review that order in revision. In our opinion we have no power to do so. The refusal to sue as a pauper does not determine anything in the suit. It is merely the decision of a preliminary issue arising in or anterior to the suit. It determines nothing except that the plaintiff cannot sue as a pauper. He can sue in the ordinary way like anybody else, and to my mind the case is indistinguishable from the case of Buddhoo Lal v. Mewa Ram (1) in which a Full Bench of this Court finally endeavoured to set at rest a point upon which there had been considerable controversy. The question there was whether a preliminary issue on a question of jurisdiction was a case decided within the meaning of s. 115. That issue if decided in the negative determined the proceedings in that Court. But it is after all only a preliminary issue arising in a suit. Although the plaintiff cannot after the determination of that issue sue in that Court, he can still sue in the proper Court which has jurisdiction. If the decision of an issue that the Court has no jurisdictian is not a case decided, I am unable for my part to see how it is possible to hold that the decision of a preliminary issue that the plaintiff is, or is not a pauper, is a case decided. The only authority of any weight, in which this matter is reported, is the case of Secretary of State for India v. Jillo (2) decided by three Judges, the then Acting Chief Justice, and Banerji, J., and Burkitt, J. Nothing is said in the head-note about revision, but the Court held that no appeal lay from an order rejecting an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, and they dismissed the appeal. They then entertained the matter of their own motion in revision saying:—"The order passed by the Subordinate Judge is so extraordinary that we direct this case to be treated as a case in revision," and they appointed a further date for argument, after allowing the other party to be heard, and they quashed the order in revision. The report and the head-note are alike somewhat difficult to follow probably due to the confusion arising from the procedure of the Subordinate Judge. What does appear to be clear is that, although the pauper's application was rejected, the Secretary of State, who had resisted it, was refused his costs. In revision the High Court passed an order directing the application to sue in forma pauperis to be dismissed with costs giving the Secretary of State his costs against the applicant. The point about a "case" was not argued, it was assumed to be a case. On the other hand in the case of Muhammad Ayub v. Muhammad Mahmood (3) a Divisional Bench held that revision did not lie from an order granting leave to sue as a pauper. The subtle distinction relied upon is clearly set out in the judgment of the two Judges. Mr. Justice Chamier in particular says:—"It seems to be quite clear that the 'case' must have been decided before the High Court can interfere in revision....But giving the word 'case' the widest meaning...I am unable to hold that the order against which this application for revision is presented decided any 'case.' It appears to me that there is a clear distinction between the case of an application for permission to sue or appeal in forma pauperis being dismissed or rejected and case in which a similar application is allowed. In the former, it may be said that the case had been decided while in the latter the order appears to be merely interlocutory" I am unable to accept this subtle distinction, and it seems to me that on principle the whole controversy is wiped out and set at rest by the decision of the Full Bench. I adhere to what I said in the case of Mahadeo Sahai v. Secretary of State for India (4) though it was only a dictum, and as this application definitely raises the principle, I feel compelled to hold that no revision lies, and that this application must be dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Lala Jamna Dass, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The proprietary holding in which the plaintiffs claim a share appears to have descended from Jamiat Singh the common ancestor of the parties. Jamiat Singh had three sons, Jagat Singh, Jhanda Singh and Hira Singh. The defendant Bishan Singh is the grandson of Jhanda Singh and the plaintiffs are grandsons and representatives of Hira Singh. In the jamabandi of 1890 Jhanda Singh, the sons of Hira Singh and Jagat Singh were entered to be co owners of the holding but Jhanda Singh alone was in possession of the entire holding, and the other co-sharers were entered as absentees. In 1896 the sons of Hira Singh sold off their share in the holding to a stranger and thus ceased to be co-sharers therein. Jhanda Singh seems to have died before that and Gattu his son, pre-empted the share sold successfully and thus became owner of 2/3rds share in the holding and he was like his father in possession of the entire holding. Jagat Singh died in 1907 and his share was then mutated in the name of Gattu alone who was actually in possession. In the mutation proceedings no mention was made of the plaintiffs who were undoubtedly entitled to succeed to a moiety of Jagat Singh's share as his heirs, but they were absent in another village and did not come forward to claim it. They brought the present suit in 1923 for possession of half of Jagat Singh's share and the defendants pleaded, inter alia that the suit was time barred. This plea has been overruled by the Trial Court as well as the learned District Judge who has disposed of it thus:—

"Jagat Singh had been recorded as an absentee ever since 1890. In 1907 Gattu (appellant's father) made a report to the patwari setting forth Jagat Singh's absence and his own possession and requesting that Jagat Singh's name might be removed and his own substituted. Before the mutation came before the Revenue Officer Jagat Singh died or Gattu became aware of his death and he claimed the land as Jagat Singh's heir. Mutation was sanctioned in his favour as Jagat Singh's heir.

"Appellant's Counsel relies on this long absence and especially on the statement to the patwari in 1907 as proving the appellant's adverse possession. In my opinion this case is governed by the general principles of joint possession of property as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Appeal Case No. 230 of 1912 and Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1). No doubt Gattu manifested to the patwari his intention to hold adversely in future, but how was that communicated to the other heirs of Jagtu. If he had succeeded as the sole heir of Jagtu, the result might have been different, but he succeeded simply as heir."

This reasoning of the learned District Judge is obviously erroneous and the rulings cited by him are not in point. The plaintiffs and the defendant were neither co parceners nor members of a joint family and the former were not co-sharers in the holding with the latter. The possession of Gattu was not as one of the co-owners but in his own right exclusively which he asserted in 1907. The plaintiffs' right to sue for possession accrued in that very year on the death of Jagat Singh and as they brought the present suit in 1923 the suit is clearly time-barred because defendant has been in possession adversely to them in his own right and not as a co-owner on behalf of himself and other co-owners.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 74 OF 1924.

THE MADURA HINDU PERMANENT FUND, LTD., THROUGH ITS SECRETARY—APPELLANT
KAMAKSHI AMMAL AND ANOTHER—
RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Disposition to named person and 'his male heirs'—Estate-in-tail.

When a Hindu bequeaths property to some one and his male heirs, he means that the property should devolve upon the legatee and the male heirs in succession and thereby creates an estate-in-tail in favour of male heirs. Such a Will fails in its entirety, the estate created being unknown to Hindu Law. [p. 487, col. 2; p. 488, col. 1.]

When a person devises property to a person and "his male heirs" and then lower down, instead of repeating the expression uses the expression "aforesaid person and his heirs" it cannot be said that he intended to change the course of devolution of the property already provided for in the preceding clause of the Will. [p. 488, col. 1.]

Doe v Fyldes, (1778) 2 Cowp. 833; 98 E. R. 1387, referred to.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Phillips, passed in Second Appeal No. 1450 of 1921, preferred against a decree of the District Court, Madura, in A. S. Nos. 260 and 263 of 1920, preferred against that of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in O. S. No. 130 of 1918.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against the judgment of our learned brother Phillips, J., and relates to the construction of a Will. The clause of the Will to be construed reads as follows:—

"The under mentioned house................ and all the rights accruing thereunder, shall after me, devolve absolutely on my natural father Pichuvayyar and his male heirs. My aforesaid natural father and heirs shall maintain my adoptive mother Kamakshi Ammal during her life and shall perform the obsequies to be done to her and to me; and the aforesaid Pichuvayyar and his heirs shall get the under-mentioned house belonging to me, absolutely with right to alienate the same by gift, exchange sale, etc." It was held by Mr. Justice Phillips that the Will created an estate unknown to Hindu Law and, therefore, the disposition was invalid.

The first contention of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the appellant is, that there are two dispositions in the Will and as they are inconsistent dispositions they must be construed in such a way as not to give rise to an intestacy. The Will does not contain two distinct dispositions but only one disposition in favour of the father and his male heirs in the first clause and in the second clause a condition is attached as to what should be done for the maintenance of the adoptive mother and for the performance of the funerals. The second clause is only explanatory of the first and does not contain a disposition different from that contained in the first. In this view it is unnecessary to consider whether the principle of s. 75 of the Indian Succession Act should be applied to the case of a Hindu Will. Section 75 has not been enacted in the Hindu Wills Act and even if the principle of s. 75 is to be applied to Hindu Wills, it cannot be applied to a Will executed in the Mofussil to which the Hindu Wills Act does not apply. It is unnecessary to consider this question further.

The real question is whether the words "My natural father Pichuvayyar and his male heirs" means Pichuvayyar and the male heirs in succession. The contention of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar is, that the tamil words "Yen Janakapitah Pichuvieravergalum Avarudya Anuvarsuka um" should not be translated as "my father Pichuvayyar and his heirs male." But the correct translation of Anvarsugal is only "male heirs" and when a person bequeaths property to some one and his male heirs, he means that the property should devolve upon the legatee and the male heirs in succession The words, therefore, create an estate-in-tail in favour of male heirs and according to the principle laid down in the well-known Tagore case, such an estate is unknown to Hindu Law, and such bequests cannot, therefore, be valid.

The next contention of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar is that the first clause of the Will should be interpreted in the light of the second clause. In the first clause the words are "My natural father and his male heirs" and in the second, the words are, "My aforesaid natural father and heirs" and lower down "aforesaid Pichuvayyar and his heirs." Strong reliance is placed on the expression "Pichuvayyar and his heirs" and it is said that the testator meant to dispose the property to 'Pichuvayyar and his heirs.' This argument overlooks the use of the expression 'aforesaid.' When a person devises property to a certain person and certain heirs and when he lower down, instead of repeating the expression uses the expression 'aforesaid person and his heirs' it cannot be said that he intended to change the course of the devolution of the property already provided for in the preceding clause of the Will. The observations of Lord Mansfield in Doe v. Fyldes (1) apply to this case. The learned Lord observes "If the word 'heirs' is so used in the first place, it must be so used in the several other places that follow. Nothing is to be implied from the additional words 'for ever' because that expression is repeated by the testatrix in the devise of each of the estates tail. The nature of the provision affords a strong argument that she did not mean to change the sense of the word 'heirs' in this part of the Will, and to give a fee simple." In that case the testatrix bequeathed her property to her elder daughter Alice Scolefield and the heirs of her body lawfully to be begotten for ever and in the latter portion of the Will repeated the expression "the heirs of Alice Scolefield" three times in the Will. The question was whether the words 'the heirs of Alice Scolefiield' thrice repeated relative to the redemption of the term vested in the executors shall be construed to refer to the special designation of the heirs, to whom the estate is devised in the beginning of the Will, or to introduce a new and more general denomination of heirs and to amount to a revocation of the expression "estate tail" given in the beginning of the Will. Lord Mansfield held that the expression "heirs of Alice Scolefield" though thrice repeated, did not create a fresh bequest in favour of the heirs of Alice Scolefield but left the bequest in favour of Alice Scolefield and the heirs of her body to be lawfully begotten unaffected. In this case the testator devises the property to his father and his male heirs and in a later clause uses the expression "father and his heirs." It cannot be said that the later clause has in any way changed the nature of the disposition or the nature of the estate created in the previous clause. Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar tried to get over the aforesaid decision of Lord Mansfield in Doe v. Fyldes (1) by contending that none of the text books except Jarman on Wills, gives any reference to this case. But we find that this case was referred to as an authority though on an another point by Crompton, J., in Good v. Good (2).

It is next contended by Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar that if the bequest in favour of heirs even if held to be bad, the bequest in favour of the father should be held to be good. This contention is against the principle of the decision in the Tagore case. When a testator devises property to his father and male heirs, the Court is not justified in creating a new Will for the testator by giving the property absolutely to the father and overlooking the intention of the testator to bequeath the property to father 'and his male heirs.' This is not a case where Pichuvayyar is given a life-estate and the remainder over to the male heirs The bequest is to the father and the male heirs. The Court would not be justified in treating the bequest as one to the father alone. The judgment appealed against is right. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

V. N. V. Appeal dismissed.

Trust—Inam—Sarva Dambala inam—Non-performance of services—De facto trustee, powers of—Transfer of trusteeship—Adverse possession.

A trust shall not fail for want of a lawful trustee and where a person is doing something unlawful or something to the detriment of the trust, even a de facto trustee is entitled to maintain a suit against him for the benefit of the trust or institution. [p. 492, col. 1]

But where certain lands were granted as Sarva Dambala inam to certain dancing girls long before the Permanent Settlement for the purpose of rendering service, it is not competent to a de facto trustee to call upon the service-holders to perform the services, and in default of performance to dismiss them and appoint other persons in their places. The phrase "Sarva Dambala inam" only means that no money payment is insisted on the holding of the inam and it does not necessarily show that it is not a service inam. [p. 490, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this second appeal arises may be stated as follows:—

In the zemindari of Telaprolu there is a village called Pamulapadu. In that village there is a temple dedicated to Sri Chidanandeswara Swami and it is said that the suit inam was granted to certain dancing girls long before the Permanent Settlement for the purpose of rendering services in the temple. In the year 1904, the Tahsildar of Nuzvid started an inquiry on the question whether the services were being properly performed by the dancing girls in the temple and whether, therefore, the Government ought not to resume the inam. The correspondence dealing with this matter consists of Exs. C to G during the years 1904 and 1905. Finally the Government placed the inam under attachment and began to collect assessment on the inam. Exhibit G is the final order of the Collector. It appears from it that at that time, the services were not being rendered for the preceding 15 years. The manager of the Telaprolu estate says in Ex. F: "There is little or no probability of the Kalyanothsavam in the Pamulapadu temple being performed in the near future." Exhibit G shows that the service was not rendered by the dancing girls for some time because the Utsavam at which such services had to be rendered was not performed. They were willing to render service if the Utsavam is resumed. In 1911 the zemindar of Telaprolu executed a deed of gift (Ex. G) giving the suit village of Pamulapadu in favour of his brother-in-law Gangadhara Ram Rao and his sons. The gift was followed by a Sub-Division and now the donee is regarded as the proprietor of the village paying a separate peishkush. He then began to take steps to get the services in the temple properly rendered and to revive the Kalyanothsavam issued two notices on 23rd August 1912 and 21st October 1912 to the representatives of the service-holders, namely, the present defendants Nos. 2 and 3. To these they replied by Exs. H and J denying that the land was a service inam and that they were liable to render service in Kalyanothsavam, etc., festivals. After this denial the proprietor appointed the plaintiff for the purpose of rendering service in the temple. This was in June 1913. Meanwhile in 1913 by Ex. K the Government released the inam from attachment and informed the trustee that he could take such action as he thought fit to secure the revival of the services. In 1915 by Ex. (F) the proprietor called upon the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to render services in the temple. In this notice he says that as he entertained some doubt as to the legality of the prior notices, a fresh notice was issued. He also calls upon them to appear before the Tanadar of Pamulapadu on 8th May 1915 to show cause why they should not be dismissed from service. He entertained doubts as to the legality of the earlier notices, apparently because they were issued at a time when the inam was under the attachment of the Government and when the Government was collecting assessment on the inam. Soon after the notice, Ex. P, the proprietor seems to have filed a suit to recover possession of the suit inam. That suit was dismissed on the ground that the right of resumption was not in the zemindar but in the Government and that the proper person to recover the inam from the defendants would be the new appointed to the office. Thereupon the present plaintiff who was appointed in June 1913 filed this suit in August 1919. Both the lower Courts decreed the suit and the defendants have filed this second appeal.

Mr. Varadachari who appears for the appellants raises four points:—

1. Whether the inam was a service inam held on condition of rendering service in the temple?
2. Whether the donee under Ex. Q was the lawful Dharmakartha of the temple and was entitled to call upon the defendants to perform service and dismiss them on disobedience and appoint the plaintiff or other person to the office?
3. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits?
4. Whether the inam consisted of Melwaram only or both Melwaram and Kudivaram?

On the first question as to the nature of the inam I will refer to the documents not with a view to give any finding but merely to show that probably there was a genuine doubt in the minds of the defendants as to the nature of the inam. The earliest document Ex. XIV which is an extract from Oake's Register of inams for Fasli 1177 shows that the suit inam was described as Mokhasa It was granted to one Balaguruvai in Fasli 1172 by Narasimha Appa Rao, the zemindar of Nuzvid. The other documents, Exs. XIV series, also extracts from Oake's Register of inams, show that in the case of other service inams, they were not shown as Mokhasa but as inam expressly describing the service. For instance in Exs. XIV (b), XIV (e) and XIV (h), the inam is described as inam to carpenters and blacksmiths for repairing the Vahanams of Swamivaru. In Exs XIV (c), XIV (d) and XIV (f), the services are described as Bajanathri, etc., for the performance of Ootasavaram in Ayilur Swami temple. Then another set of documents Exs. II, III and IV were also relied on. In Ex. II the suit inam appears under the head "Sarva Dambala inams" so also in Exs III and IV. The phrase "Sarva Dambala inam" was also relied on in the lower Courts and before me to show that it was an absolute inam and not subject to any service and I am merely expressing an opinion and not giving a finding on the issue. I rather think that the phrase "Sarva Dambala inam" was only meant to show that no money payment was insisted on the holding of the inam and it does not necessarily show that it was not a service inam and this opinion is supported by the contents of Ex. XII. The inam came up before the Inam Commissioner in 1860 for consideration and it was held that the land was inam Devadayam service and it was confirmed to the then holders under r. III, cl. I., to be held so long as the service was rendered. Of course no quit rent was imposed. In col. 8, it is stated that the inam is held for service as dancing girls. Govindamma the grandmother of the present defendants, was then mentioned as the present owner. It is said that she was aged 70 and the present 2nd and 3rd defendant's names do not appear as members of the family. Exhibits. V, VI, VII and VIII are Cowles relating to inam in the suit village after the inam Settlement and here again the inam is described under the heading "Sarva Dambala." I need not make any further comment on this phrase "Sarva Dambala" as I have expressed my opinion in the matter.

In the year 1905, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 seem to have expressed their willingness to render service when the Kalyanothsavam was performed (Ex. G). Somehow they did not then raise the question as to the nature of the tenure. But when they thought that they may well raise the question as to the nature of the tenure on which the inam was held, they sent Exs. H and J in reply to the notices of the proprietor, denying that it was a service inam. In Ex. L, however, they seem to be more guarded in their tone than in Ex. H and J their previous replies. In Ex. L they say :—

"We shall act in whatever manner the Court may decide. As it is a dispute relating to liability to do service, we will not get any justice by an enquiry by our officials I, therefore, pray that justice may be got rendered through Court. We have, therefore, submitted this." It seems that they would not be satisfied with the result of an enquiry by the Tanadar before whom they were asked to appear by Ex. L. They wanted the decision of a Court. If the Court was of opinion that it was a service tenure, they were willing to render service. Though this intention was not expressed in so many words, it is clear from their attitude in their written statement in the suit that such was their intention.

In para. 5 they say:—

"While the defendants are raising bona fide contentions to the effect that it is not service inam, he (the Dharmakartha) should get it established, through Court, that the suit inam is a service inam and then he should give the defendants an opportunity to serve and if they (defendants) fail to do so, he should get them (defendants removed from service through Court and should appoint another. The appointment of plaintiff made without having recourse to the above procedure is not proper. If in this suit, the Court is of opinion that it is a service inam, the defendants are ready to do service or get service done." Therefore, their willingness to render service after decision by the Court is expressly stated.

I now pass on to the second point raised by Mr. Varadachari, namely, whether the proprietor is the lawful Dharmakartha of the suit temple. The deed of gift Ex. Q does not expressly purport to transfer the legal rights of trusteeship in respect of the suit temple in the village to the donee. It is unnecessary to observe that even if it purports so to transfer, it is invalid: see Rajah Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (1). It may be that there was an impression in the minds of the donor and of the donee that the trusteeship has passed to the donee along with the gift.

The Courts below in dealing with this point find that the Archakas in performing the Svasthivachakam are now mentioning the name of Gangadhara Rama Rao. This is, of course, a finding of fact. But if there is no valid transfer of the trusteeship, the fact that the Archakas thought that the present proprietor of the village was the Dharmakartha and mentioned his name at the time of Svasthivachakam does not make him a Dharmakartha. It is said that the Government recognised the present proprietor as the Dharmakartha, but this is not very clear. The District Munsif erred in saying that in Exs. C to K the Government recognised the donee as the Dharmakartha, for Exs. C and G were addressed to the zemindar of Telaprolu. Exhibits H and J had nothing to do with the Government. Only Ex. K was addressed to the present proprietor by Government. But it can scarcely be relied on as the considered opinion of the Government on a question of this kind which was never raised before them and was neither discussed nor adverted to in the letter, the only object of which was to release the inam from attachment. It is also said that the defendants themselves recognised the present proprietor as Dharmakartha in Exs. H and J. But Exs. H and J are mere replies to notices in which the proprietor described himself as Dharmakartha. The same remark applies to Ex. L. All those documents show that the defendants merely repeated the description which the proprietor applied to himself. But even assuming that they intended anything more, their admission that he was Dharmakartha cannot make him Dharmakartha, if otherwise he was not the Dharmakartha. These transactions would not estop them from raising that point, for it cannot be said that these letters induced him to change his position for the worse. It follows that the proprietor was not the de jure Dharmakartha of the temple. Mr. Ramadas says that even if he was not the de jure Dharmakartha, he was certainly the de facto Dharmakartha and, therefore, he was entitled to appoint. He relies on the decisions in Benarsi v. Altaf Husain (2), Muiz ud-din v. Muhammad Ekhlaq (3) an unreported judgment in Second Appeal No. 107 of 1923 and the observations at page 82 in Sheo Shankar Gir v. Ram Shevak Chowdhri (4).

In Benarsi v. Altaf Hussain (2) it was held that the de facto Muthavalli of mosque can sue to remove a person who is infringing on the rights of the mosque and the defendant who is infringing on the rights of the mosque could not challenge the position of the de facto Muthavalli. In Muiz-ud-din v. Muhammad Ekhlaq (3), it was held that the son of the prior de facto Muthavalli could obtain refund of a payment made by the father, provided he credits it to the trust and uses it for the purpose of the trust. In Second Appeal No. 107 of 1923 it appears that the point taken for the defendants was that the plaintiff was not the sole trustee. It was found that the plaintiff's father and grandfather were looking after the Pallivasal from 1869 onwards and though it was not very clear, it looked as if the plaintiff was one of the persons who might have acquired the trusteeship by prescription or by exercising the right for a long time, i. e., from 1867 onwards. But the suit was only against the tenant for possession of the site leased. The principle in all these three cases seems to be that a trust shall not fail for want of a lawful trustee and that where the defendant is doing something unlawful or something to the detriment of the trust, even a de facto trustee should be allowed to maintain a suit for the benefit of the trust or institution. In the present case the suit is not on behalf of the trust or institution, nor is there any question of a de facto manager maintaining a suit on behalf of the trust. All that can be said is that the de facto Dharmakartha called upon the defendants to perform the services dismissed them and appointed the plaintiff in the interests of the institution. The question, therefore, is whether the de facto Dharmakartha can put an end to the tenure which was being held by the defendants and give it to another. I, therefore, think these decisions relied on do not apply here. In Sheo Shankar Gir v. Ram Shewak Chowdhri (4) it was held that where there was an alienation on behalf of an institution for the purpose of the institution, the alienee dealing with the de facto manager bona fide ought to be protected, and reference was made to *Hunooman Persaud case. It has only to be observed that no question of that kind arises in the present case.

I, therefore, think that the proprietor was not entitled to dismiss the defendants and appoint the plaintiff. I have no doubt that by 1923 or 1924 by adverse possession the present proprietor has completed his right as trustee by prescription and probably he would be entitled to call upon the defendants to render service hereafter. But it cannot be said that he was entitled to do this in 1912. When he issued notices to which Exs. H and J were replies or in 1915 when he issued Ex. P and I may express the hope that the defendants would not take the risk of denying their liability to service hereafter if the present proprietor calls upon them to render services again. But so far as the present suit is concerned, on this ground I think the appeal has to be allowed.

Though no doubt their attitude in Exs. H and J may be said to be the cause of the whole trouble, they assumed a much better attitude in Ex. L and also in the written statement and though it looks as if they have succeeded by a fluke which somewhat looks like a technical point, there has been no misconduct during the trial of the case. With regard to the nature of the tenure, as I have set forth in the beginning of this judgment, I think there is very good justification for their being anxious to have the decision of the Court on the nature of the inam, and it cannot be said that their conduct was contumacious whatever might be said as to the result of their denial that the suit land is service inam. I express no opinion on the point i.e., how far their attitude while denying the service tenure would have helped them, if the suit is otherwise maintainable. Seeing that they have succeeded on the other point, I do not see why they should be deprived of their costs. It is unnecessary to express any opinion on the 3rd and 4th points raised by Mr. Varadhachari.

The result is this appeal is allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Zafar Ali, J.—The suit which gives rise to this first appeal is based on a Will under which Wazir Singh, the plaintiff-appellant, is the principal legatee, the other legatees and beneficiaries being defendants Nos. 4 to 9.

The properties willed away are of four kinds described in the petition of plaint under heads A, B, C and D and Wazir Singh sues for possession of properties A and B and for a declaration that he is entitled to realise the talukdari dues, etc., set forth under the heads C and D.

The testator Narindar Singh was a Sodhi Khatri by caste and was one of the family of Sodhi Khatris of Anandpore in the Hoshiarpore District. These Sodhis of Anandpore are treated as Gurus or spiritual guides and are held in great esteem by Sikhs because they (the Sodhis) are lineal descendants of Ram Dass, the fourth Sikh Guru and the common ancestor of the remaining Sikh Gurus who succeeded him one after the other (see the pedigree table Ex. A-8).

Narindar Singh had an only son Moti Singh but the father and son fell out in about 1897 and ever since remained at daggers drawn. Wazir Singh was an old servant of Narindar Singh but could have no family relationship with him because he is a jat by caste. He had ostensibly no claim on Narindar Singh but his long and faithful services. As stated in the Will, Narindar Singh had a two-fold object in making it (1) to disinherit Moti Singh whom he characterised as disobedient, undutiful and worthless and (2) to reward Wazir Singh for his good services. He bequeathed all his self-acquired estate to Wazir Singh and left his ancestral property to his two grandsons the sons of Moti Singh to the exclusion of the latter. But on the death of Narindar Singh which occurred on the 15th December 1912 Moti Singh quietly succeeded to his entire property both ancestral and self-acquired.

The Will is dated the 15th April 1908 and it was duly proved by the evidence of the Scribe (P. W. No. 3) and an attesting witness (P. W. No. 4). It was further proved that it was deposited by Narindar Singh with the Registrar in a sealed cover and that after his death the cover was opened and the Will was duly registered.

The only contesting defendant in the case is Moti Singh who impugned the Will on various grounds, but his plea that the Will was made under undue influence was overruled by the learned Senior Sub-Judge who tried the case and it is not pressed before us. It is, therefore, not necessary to detail here all the facts and evidence on which this plea was based but a few facts which throw a side light on the other aspects of the case may be stated here very briefly. Moti Singh stated that after the death of his mother an illicit intimacy sprang up between his father and Musammat Raj Mani, the married daughter of Wazir Singh and that the boy named Hari borne by her was the issue of this illicit connection, Moti Singh further asserted that he alienated from himself the affection of his father by objecting to his liaison with Musammat Raj Mani which was creating a scandal and that Narindar Singh made the bequest to Wazir Singh not in recognition of his services as a menial servant for which he had already been sufficiently remunerated but to make a provision for the boy Hari Singh. Musammat Raj Mani had, however, died on the 13th April 1906 full two years before the date of the Will and her son Hari did not survive her long, the date of his death being 28th September, 1908. But the deaths of these persons led to no reconciliation between Narindar Singh and Moti Singh and there was nothing in evidence to indicate that Wazir Singh exercised an undue influence over his master and induced him by the use of it to make the Will.

The main pleas of Moti Singh, however, were (1) that the Will had been revoked by Narindar Singh and (2) that the Will was invalid and not binding on them.

The findings of the Court below on both these points are in favour of Moti Singh but after a careful consideration of the evidence on the record we came to contrary conclusions.

As regards the alleged revocation of the Will the defendant relied in the first place as a codicil or supplementary Will made by Narindar Singh only about three weeks after the Will in question i. e., on the 5th May 1908. There is, however, nothing in this codicil to indicate that Narindar Singh intended thereby to revoke the Will previously made. He described it as a supplementary Will, repeated therein that his object was to disinherit Moti Singh and nominated three persons as managers of his property, i e., presumably the property bequeathed to his grandsons that might in the event of his early death devolve on them during their minority. According to the learned Senior Sub-Judge also this document does not expressly revoke the first Will. But he was of opinion that it nullified the Will by implication. It is difficult to see how nullification by implication could be inferred from the context of the Will. In his letters of the 10th May and 20th July 1912 Narindar Singh mentions having appointed managers to administer his property after his death and the learned Senior Sub-Judge rightly observes that this lends support to the evidence relating to the codicil but there is nothing to show that the property for which managers were appointed included the property that had already been bequeathed to Wazir Singh.

Narindar Singh has been described by some of defendant's witnesses also as an intelligent man who could not be duped. He was moreover a Rais (a man of position). A person of his standing in society could not be oblivious of the consequences of making a Will and depositing it with the Registrar (who was also the Deputy Commissioner of the District). If he had made the supplementary Will with the intention of revoking the previous Will he would have withdrawn the latter from the Registrar's office at the earliest opportunity. But this he never did though the alleged object of his affection, namely, Hari, who was to be ultimately benefited had also passed away not long after the making of the Will, i. e., in September 1908. That Narindar Singh did not withdraw the Will is a circumstance which strongly militates against the theory of annulment of the Will.

Secondly it was pleaded that Narindar Singh had executed a new Will a few days before his death revoking the old one and acknowledging Moti Singh as his heir. This Will was said to be in the possession of Rala Singh defendant No. 5 but Ralla Singh was not only not called upon to produce it but was not even questioned about it when examined as a witness by the defendant. The secondary evidence produced about this alleged Will consists of the testimony of only one witness, namely, Daulat Ram (D. W. No. 17) who passed as one of the two attesting witnesses. The other though named was not produced. The scribe was not even named. The question is, was the testimony of this witness worthy of credit He is no doubt a respectable man, inasmuch as he is a banker and a Municipal Commissioner and pays Rs. 850 as income-tax but he is very much interested in the result of this litigation. Among the properties bequeathed to the plaintiff are certain taluqdari rights of the value of Rs. 36,000. This witness had obtained a money decree against Moti Singh defendant and the estate of his father and in execution of that decree these taluqdari rights were attached and sold for Rs. 30,000 Wazir Singh (plaintiff) having objected to the attachment and sale the decree-holder was ordered to furnish security for the amount so that if the plaintiff should succeed in his suit this witness may have to discharge Rs. 30 000. The evidence of this witness is to the following effect:—

Rala Singh (defendant No. 5) took him one night at 2 or 3 A. M to Narindar Singh who was lying on his death bed in a Seari. There Rala Singh produced a Will and read it out and said that it was made by Narindar Singh and asked him (Daulat Ram) to attest it. He (witness) asked Narindar Singh, whether he should do so. Narindar Singh replied that he should. He then attested it and came away. Narindar Singh died two or three hours after he had left. The Will was in favour of Moti Singh and revoked a previous Will. The other attesting witness was probably Naubat Rai and he was perhaps present there but he did not attest the Will in his presence. The Will was in Gurmukhi perhaps. Narindar Singh did not write or read the Will in his presence. The scribe was not mentioned. He (witness) found the signature of Narindar Singh on the Will. He knew his signature and thought that the signature on the. Will was his. The ink of the signature was blue black, or red. The Will was in red or blue black ink.

It was not explained why the witness was called at that hour of the night to attest the alleged Will, and interested as he is, his vague description of the document, etc., renders his testimony of little value. He could not positively say in what characters the document was. According to the testimony of Thakar Dass (P. W. No. 4) who is the owner of the Seari, Narindar Singh died in his baithak in the Seari at 1 or 2 A. M. If he died at about that hour, he was hardly likely to have been in a fit condition to make any statement to Daulat Ram when he came to him. Further it is clear that Thakar Dass was present when he died and even during his illness. It is, therefore, very strange that instead of having the Will attested by him Daulat Ram was called at the eleventh hour to attest it. Thakar Dass did not depose to the making of a Will in his presence.

The defendant Moti Singh sought to corroborate the testimony of Daulat Ram by the evidence of a Naib Tahsildar (D. W. No. 19) which was to the effect that on the 11th April 1913 Ralla Singh and Moti Singh produced before him respectively a Will and a power-of attorney for registration, that he registered the power-of-attorney but returned the Will because its attesting witnesses were not present. It is difficult to believe that this Naib Tahsildar could re-collect after the lapse of six years and eight months the purport of a document that was presented to him for registration but was returned by him without making an endorsement on it or making any entry about it anywhere. It may be noted here that this witness could not identify Narindar Singh's signature on the said document and that according to him the Will was in Persian characters while Daulat Ram stated that it was in Gurmukhi perhaps. This Naib Tahsildar and Moti Singh had been school-fellows and were consequently friends, and it can be argued with some show of reason that he is not an impartial witness. Further his story appears to be an improbable one if looked at from another point of view. Ralla Singh was not interested at all in having the Will registered. If he did produce the Will for registration he must have done so for the benefit of Moti Singh Why then did he not make it over to Moti Singh himself to produce it for registration with the attesting witnesses? Moti Singh failed to explain why he did not receive the Will at that time from Ralla Singh.

In view of all that has been said above, the evidence of these two witnesses fails to satisfy me that any subsequent Will was made by Sodhi Narindar Singh.

Thirdly, it was urged that the first Will was a sham and was made only to coerce Moti Singh into submission to his father There is some evidence in support of this though there is nothing to show that the Will was a sham The scribe Tulsi Ram, who is related to Moti Singh through his (Moti Singh's) mother deposed that he enquired from Narindar Singh why he was disinheriting his son and received the reply that he would revoke the Will if Moti Singh would "re-gain himself" that is, would mend his ways. The marginal witness Thakar Dass also deposed to the same effect. Further in the letter Ex. D-30 of the 20th July 1912 already referred to Narindar Singh said that the writing (Will ?) made by him was made by way of a warning so that Moti Singh for fear (of it) might become submissive to him and that his object was that his son might come to the right path. All this indicates that Narindar Singh had the intention of revoking the Will on Moti Singh's submission to him. But the disputes between the father and son were not of an ordinary type and were pursued with bitterness until the end. Moti Singh proclaimed to the local authorities that his father was a man of a highly depraved character and a debauchee. In his application to the Deputy Commissioner dated the 1st January 1906 (Ex. P-48 Moti Singh wrote in clear terms that his father was a sodomite and passed days and nights in committing the unnatural offence with Pars Ram and Wazir Singh. Narindar Singh was the recipient of a jagir from the Patiala State and Moti Singh made similar complaints against him to the Patiala Durbar and also filed suits against him both at Patiala and at Hoshiarpore to recover maintenance from him. Further it was apprehended that the father and son would commit a breach of the peace and proceedings under s. 107 of the Cr. P. C. appear to have been taken against them. There is nothing to indicate that Moti Singh ever sought reconciliation with his father. The latter had, therefore, no cause to relent.

Fourthly, it was urged that the evidence as to revocation of the Will received support from the circumstance that Narindar Singh had subscribed to a statement of customs obtaining in the family of Sodhis of Anandpore, one of the custom stated therein being that no member of the family could alienate to an outsider any property ancestral or self-acquired. This statement of customs is appended to a genealogical tree of the Sodhis and according to the testimony of Tika Ram-Narayan Singh D. W. No. 7 who is a first cousin of Moti Singh and has been siding with him throughout this and other litigations, it was prepared under the following circumstances: "This genealogical table was prepared for supplying information about the family at the time of the Coronation Durbar of 1912 to people writing histories and 'who's who' and main customs applicable to the family were entered therein and are correct. Sodhi Narindar Singh also agreed to their correctness. But on cross-examination he stated that the customs of the family were not specially asked for on the occasion of the Durbar, and that they happened to be written out with the pedigree by the scribe of the pedigree-table. As they were not asked for and as the necessary document was the pedigree-table only, it cannot be said that Narindar Singh signed it in token of the correctness of the statement of customs but even if he did, the circumstance has no bearing on the question of revocation of his Will. If the alleged revocation were not proved, the defendant could fall back on the custom stated above, but he failed to prove it. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that Narindar Singh never revoked the Will or the codicil."

Turning now to the plea of invalidity of the Will, the defendant's contention is that Narindar Singh and his son, grand sons, etc. constituted a joint Hindu family and were co-parceners in all family funds and ancestral property, and that Narindar Singh was, therefore, not competent to will away the property which had been acquired by him with the income derived from the ancestral property. The, plaintiff's reply is (1) that Narindar Singh was not a Hindu but a Sikh; (2) that even if he was within the pale of Hinduism, he did not follow the Hindu Law and he and his son and grand sons did not constitute a family of co-parceners as contemplated by that law and (3) that in any case he had acquired the properties with the money earned by himself over which he possessed and enjoyed unrestricted power of disposal.

As regards (1) and (2) it is not denied that the Sodhis of Anandpore are followers of Guru Gobind Singh and are "Kesadhari Sikhs" or "Singhs." They are not only Singhs of Guru Gobind Singh but claim to be Gurus themselves and constitute the only priestly class among Sikhs whose function is to convert non-Sikhs to Sikhism by administering Pahul, i e., baptism by the dagger and sweetened water. The rite called Pahul was initiated by Guru Gobind Singh when a person who receives the Pahul is made to declare that his birth place is Patna Sahib etc. (where Guru Gobind Singh was born), that his father is Guru Gobind Singh and that his mother is Mata Sahib Devi (wife of Guru Gobind Singh). In this way he renounces all connection with Hindusim and becomes a true Sikh or Singh. Guru Gobind Singh abolished caste and rejected the authority of Vedas and other Hindu sacred books and laid the foundation of a religion quite distinct from Hinduism Kesadhari. Sikhs of the present day generally say that they are not Hindus. In Civil Appeal No. 559 of 1923 it was asserted that Sikhs are not Hindus and the finding was that in view of the teachings of Guru Gobind Singh his followers may well say that they are not Hindus. But in the present case the Sodhis of Anandpore claim to be Hindus and this claim rests mainly on the circumstance that they intermarry with Hindu Khatris. That is the link which connects them with Hindus otherwise they are Sikhs as distinguished from Hindus and admittedly they do not follow the Hindu Law in many respects. For instance, they do not wear the sacred thread, do not follow the Hindu rules of adoption do not perform the tonsure ceremony, etc. Further, according to Tikka Ram-Narayan Singh (D W. No. 7) Anandpore Sodhis do not recognise a widow's right to a life-estate, nor do they allow a daughter or daughter's son to succeed even if the property were self-acquired. All this is contrary to Hindu Law. The defendant's principal witness Tika Ram-Narayan Singh (D. W. No. 7) stated that in his family a son has no share in the property of his father during his lifetime even if the property were ancestral, but has added that his heirs could restrain him from alienating his self-acquired property to non-Sodhis. No instance, however, could be cited in support of the latter proposition. Succession among the Sikh Gurus from Nank downwards was in several cases not from father to son or to the eldest. Further, there is nothing in evidence to show that the position of an Anandpore Sodhi father is the same as that of a father in a joint Hindu family. Narindar Singh was not subject to any restriction in disposing of his property. He gifted a shop to Ralla Singh as wlll appear from the judgment printed at pages 48-50 of the paper-book and he gifted to Wazir Singh plaintiff, by a registered deed dated the 19th April 1905, certain lands which he held in mortgage for Rs. 1358 vide Ex. P-111 at page 65 of the paper-book. According to the Mitakshara Law a son even if adult is entitled to maintenance out of the ancestral property but Moti Singh defendant did not succeed in getting maintenance from his father.

From all that has been stated above it follows that Hindu Law is not the personal law of the Sodhis of Anandpore and that they do not follow it in matters of inheritance, etc. This being so, there can be no presumption that an Anandpore Sodhi family constituted a co-parcenary body in accordance with the Hindu Law of Mitakshara. It, therefore, lay upon the defendant to establish that the constitution of his family was in accordance with that law, but he has failed to discharge it.

The learned Counsel for Moti Singh argued that though in the written statement filed by Moti Singh he had expressly stated that he and his father constituted a joint Hindu family this was nowhere denied by the plaintiff. But the replication if filed by the plaintiff has not been printed and it is clear that the point was raised by him as it was put in issue and both parties produced evidence thereon (vide Issue No. 3).

Now we will consider the nature of the property that was in the hands of Narindar Singh and his sources of income. He had a share in Chak Guru a village founded by Guru Tej Bahadur. From him it descended through several generations to Tilok Singh a brother of Narindar Singh's father Diwan Singh. On the death of Tilok Singh his widow succeeded to it and it was after her death that Diwan Singh's branch inherited it (see the pedigree table Ex. P-8). The Chak thus came to Diwan Singh's branch by collateral succession, that is to say it was according to Hindu Law obstructed heritage and was separate and self-acquired and not joint family property of the person on whom it devolved. His immoveable ancestral property as stated in the Will consisted of (1) a one-third share in a haveli situate at Hardwar; (2) certain residential houses situated at Anandpore (3) one-third share in a shop at Anandpore and (4) certain shares in certain Gurdwaras and the property attached thereto. It is not known what his income from these properties was, but there is nothing to show that it was considerable. Besides the income from the above properties, his other sources of income were three-fold :—

(1) A pension of Rs. 860 per annum from Government.

(2) A jagir of Rs. 2,878 per annum from the Patiala State (see Ex. D. W. No. 6 at page 223 of the printed paper-book and small jagirs from Bilaspore Tirathpore, Nalagarh and Kalsia States.

(3) Offierings from Sikhs generally.

These jagirs are no doubt described in the Will as ancestral property but the word "ancestral" is apparently used here as indicating that the jagirs had descended to the testator from his fore-fathers. It does not follow from this that the jagir moneys that he realised from time to time constituted ancestral property and the moneys received from any of the above sources can by no stretch of language be called ancestral property. A pension is always allowed on condition of good conduct and loyalty to Government as stated by Moti Singh in his application to the Deputy Commissioner, vide Ex. P-48 para. 5 and though it may be continued from father to son each recipient possesses unrestricted power of expending his pension. The same may be said of jagir moneys which were paid by way of charity or dharamath, see the evidence of Lala Bansi Lal of the Revenue Department of the Patiala State at page 231 and also Exs. D. W. No. 6 and D. W. No. 7 at pages 223 and 224 in which Narindar Singh himself described the jagir money as dharamarth muafi. In Ex. D-10 also at page 88 the jagir is stated to be dharamarth. The jagir was evidently liable to forfeiture at the will of the State and payment of the jagir from Patiala was once stopped as would appear from the order of the Patiala State (Ex. D-24 at pages 133-134) as regards the offerings even the ladies of the family receive the same and no recipient, therefore, is liable to account for them to any body. The income derived by Narindar Singh from all these sources was his own personal income and did not form part of his family funds, if any, and consequently the property acquired by him with that money was his own self-acquired property and he had full power of disposition over it even if it were assumed that his family was a joint Hindu family. In Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishori (1) Lordships of the Privy Council held that the father of an undivided family subject to the Mitakshara Law had full power of disposition over his self-acquired immoveable property. In Jagmohondas Mangaldas v. Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy (2) it was held that a man is at perfect liberty to dispose of property which he has inherited collaterally.

It has been stated that Narindar Singh had an ancestral money-lending business, but the evidence as to his money-lending was that he lent money at a rate lower than that on which he borrowed it. It is, therefore, clear that he could have made no profit by money lending. Further it appears that the offerings that Narindar Singh received constituted the bulk of his income because he says in his letter (Ex. D-30) that he had acquired his property with the money earned by turning in pursuit of his ancestral (priestly) occupation (apne abai peshe or phir kar paida ke hai).

From all the evidence reviewed above the conclusions that follow are :—(1) That there could be no presumption that the testator and his son were co-parceners and that the defendant on whom the onus was shifted had failed to establish that they were, and (2) that as the testator's ancestral immoveable property was much as could build but little income and was not sufficient even for his household expenses as indicated by the fact that he had to take large advances of money from the Patiala State for celebrating the marriages of his children and as his income from other sources was large, the presumption is that the property willed away had been acquired by the testator with the income from those sources and that there was no evidence to rebut that presumption.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and reversing the judgment and decree of the Court below we decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Campbell, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother. It seemed to me at the argument that the learned Counsel for the respondents in supporting the Trial Court's dismissal of the suit relied mainly upon the finding that the property bequeathed to the plaintiff was ancestral property of the joint Hindu family and upon the reasons for that finding the decision that the Will of the 15th April 1908 was subsequently revoked before the testator's death was not defended with any great vigour and in my judgment that decision was incorrect.

The so-called supplementary Will of the 13th May 1908 is an obscure document and I venture to think that the learned Subordinate Judge has travelled some considerable distance out of the record and into the realms of conjecture in relating what he conceives to be the true history of its execution. If the document is genuine Sodhi Narindar Singh the executant definitely calls it a supplementary Will and definitely declares in it that the previous Will of the 15th April shall be acted upon after his death. It appears to me not unlikely that the document was written at the persuasion of Naurang Singh, the son-in law, who was not mentioned in the first Will and who may have complained of receiving no recognition in it. This man was nominated one of the managers of the property and he was given custody of the documents, which was not produced until after the suit was started. The scheme of management set forth was probably meant for the ancestral property in order to prevent control being taken by Moti Singh during his son's minority. In any case an implied revocation of the bequest to the plaintiff cannot be read into the document taking it as a whole.

As for the alleged third and death-bed Will it has not been proved. Lala Daulat Ram's evidence amounts merely to this. Ralla Singh purported to read out a paper which he said was Narindar Singh's Will. What he read was to the effect that the previous Will had been revoked and that a new Will had been made in favour of Moti Singh. Rala Singh asked the witness to attest the paper. The witness asked Narindar Singh if he should do so and Narindar Singh said yes. The witness thought the writing was in Gurmukhi characters. He did not read it, there was no other talk about the Will, and so Narindar Singh never said either that the document contained or that what Rala Singh recited was his Will and made no statement in the presence of witness of any testamentary disposition.

Lala Gulzari Ram the Naib Tehsildar says that the document presented to him later by Rala Singh for registration was in Persian writing. Plainly then, it was not the Gurmukhi document signed by Daulat Ram for there is not the slightest resemblance between the two scripts and it is impossible to mistake one for the other. It is not easy to understand why the learned Sub-Judge assumed that the two papers were the same.

The person who could have cleared up the matter, Rala Singh was examined twice as a witness and was questioned on at most every other conceivable topic except this one. Why he was not given an opportunity by the defendant of confirming or denying what the other two witnesses said is incomprehensible. He was not even asked to produce the alleged Will and secondary evidence of its contents ought not to have been allowed without this having been done. The secondary evidence was apparently admitted without objection and hence it cannot be excluded on appeal. But, in my opinion, it is of value. The learned Sub-Judge has observed that Rala Singh has been won over by the highest bidder. This may be so but it was never suggested to the man in his two protracted appearances in the witness-box.

The following are the learned Subordinate Judge's grounds for deciding that the property bequeathed to the plaintiff was in reality ancestral property belonging to the joint Hindu family consisting of Narindar Singh and his son and grandsons. He has held first that Sikhs are Hindus secondly, that being Hindus and Khatris, there is a presumption that they follow the Hindu Law of the Mitakshara, thirdly, that where there is a joint ancestral nucleus the presumption is that subsequent acquisitions are acquired from the proceeds of the nucleus, fourthly, that Narindar Singh's jagir income was ancestral property and fifthly, that there was no proof of the amount of Narindar Singh's income from offerings or of how much was utilized in acquiring the property styled self-acquired in the Will.

The answer to the question whether a Sikh is a Hindu depends very much upon the sense in which the word Hindu is used. It is probably correct to say generally that Khatri Sikhs, who are not agriculturists and who do not follow agricultural custom observe the same principles of law as are observed by Hindu Khatris of the Punjab regarding rights in inheritance to property. It was observed obiter by Sir Meredyth Plowden in Jowahir v. Chandi (3) that in the Punjab at least generally the Mitakshara doctrine of a son being born with a share is not known, nor has a son a right to compel partition. This remark has been cited with approval in more than one later judgment but the first proposition as far as I am aware has never been laid down authoritatively and specifically. The second has and in Hari Kishen v. Chandu Lal(4) a Full Bench decided that in the Punjab the Mitakshara rule that a son can enforce partition during his partner's lifetime is not in force. It follows necessarily that in the Punjab a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and son or sons is something different from such a family under the Mitakshra Law.

In the present case we are dealing not merely with a Khatri Sikh family, but with members of the family of the tenth Sikh Guru whose mission in life is to preach and practise Guru Gobind Singh's doctrine of revolt from many essential beliefs and observances of the Hindu religion. A great deal of the evidence given about the rules and customs observed by this family is vague but it appears that many of their rules and ceremonies differ from those of orthodox Hindus. The witness who ought to have the best knowledge of the family rules of inheritance is Tikka Ram-Narayan Singh, Honorary Magistrate and Civil Judge Viceregal Durbari and head of the family. He was cited for his kinsman the defendant with whom inevitably all his sympathies must be and this is what he says:

"I have not studied the Hindu Law and, therefore, cannot say on what points our law resembles the law of other Khatris. I do not know what is the custom of the Khatris in our ilaqa. It two brothers are joint and third is separate and one of the joint brothers dies I cannot say if the separate brother will get a share or not.' No such instance has occurred in our family. No instance has occurred in our family in which the nephew and a brother have been left by a third brother who died leaving property. I cannot say whether the nephew will succeed with the uncle or not. I cannot say if any difference would be made if all the brothers were joint."

(3) 90 P. R. 1892.

(4) 43 Ind. Cas. 667; 105 P. R. 1917.

"The son has no share in the property of the father during his lifetime even though the property is ancestral. Adoption is admissible only of agnatic by male, the female cannot adopt even with the permission of the husband. Two adoptions took place before me. No ceremonies were performed. In one case a deed also was written and in both declarations were made before baradri and the adopted son was taken by the adoptive father. I cannot say if any limit is fixed as to the age of the adopted boy or whether there is any restriction as to the adoption of the only, or eldest son. I do not know any instance in which a daughter's son was adopted or a suit brought for the cancellation. I cannot tell any instance in which the self-acquired property of a person was not inherited by a daughter or daughter's son nor is there any instance on the other side. My heirs whoever they may be can restrain me from alienating any self acquired property in favour of non-Sodhis. No instance of this sort can be cited."

It seems to me impossible that this important witness contemplated the existence in the Anandpore Sodhi family of the strict Mitakshara co-parcenary system with all its technical incidents and presumptions.

In the written statement the defendants pleaded that Narindar Singh, his son and his grandsons constituted a joint Hindu family, that the entire property was joint acquired with ancestral funds, that all the members were owners of it, and that it belonged only in name to Narindar Singh because he was the manager of the family. The plaintiff's reply given orally and briefly was that Narindar Singh was joint with his grandsons but not with his son and that the property willed to the plaintiff was self-acquired by Narindar Singh. This was no admission of the existence of the Mitakshara co-parcenary and the pleadings do not take us any further.

I cannot agree with the Trial Court that the deceased Narindar Singh's jagir has been shown to be ancestral family property. The fact that he calls it ancestral in the Will does not make it ancestral in the technical sense and means nothing. The so-called Patiala jagir is stated by the defendant's witness Lala Bensi Lal Assistant Superintendent Revenue Department to have been a charitable allowance and there is evidence that at one time payment of it was stopped. There is no evidence about the character of the allowances received from other States or of the pension stated to have been given by Government and although all the allowances may have been granted because Narindar Singh was a member of the Anandpore Sodhi family; they were his separate property in default of proof that the grants were for the benefit of his own joint family. These jagir allowances amounted annually to a substantial sum and were enjoyed by Narindar Singh for many years.

The offering by disciples were no doubt made because the recipient was a member of this priestly family but they were manifestly personal gains acquired without the aid of joint family property. There is evidence that the deceased's income from this source was considerable. The witness speaks of thousands of rupees. The deceased Narindar Singh and his son are on the worst of terms. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that since 1897 until his father's death the son was refused maintenance and the fact is clear indication that there was no blending of self-acquired property with ancestral property of Narindar Singh.

The issues drawn by the Trial Court were as follows:—

The first was on a preliminary point and is omitted.

(2) Did Sodhi Narindar Singh make a Will in favour of plaintiff on 15th April 1919? On plaintiff.

(3) Is the Will valid in law and custom and was deceased Sodhi Narindar Singh competent to make it in the presence of his son and grandson? On plaintiff.

(4) Is the bequeathed property ancestral and was Sodhi Narindar Singh not competent to bequeath the same in favour of plaintiff? On defendant.

(5) If the existence of the Will is established was the Will made under undue influence and did he make the Will on account of immoral connection with the daughter of the plaintiff and the Will was, therefore, invalid and inoperative? On defendants.

(6) Did Narindar Singh make any partner (?) and subsequent Will cancelling the previous one, one if he did when did he do it? On defendants.

(7) Did plaintiff so conduct himself as to show that he treated the Will as fictitious and practically cancelled and is, therefore, estopped from bringing this suit? On defendants.

(8) Is there any custom of riwaj amongst Sodhis which disabled Sodhi Narindar Singh to make a Will in favour of a stranger and a man of low position? On defendants.

The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff-appellant on Nos. 2 and 7 and the findings are not disputed on No. 3. I hold that the Will was valid since the property bequeathed to the plaintiff was not that of a co-parcener under the Mitakshara Law but was self-acquired separate property which belonged exclusively to Sodhi Narindar Singh and which under Hindu Law and general custom he could gift or bequeath to any person he chose, No. 4 is covered by the same decision. The property was not ancestral. It was not interested from an ancestor and the means of acquisition were Sodhi Narindar Singh's separate property. On No. 5 I hold that the Will was not invalid for any of the reasons suggested and on Nos. 6 and 8 in the negative. There was no clear finding by the Trial Court on No. 8 but no claim that such a custom has been proved was made in the lengthy argument addressed to us in support of the lower Court's decree. The signature by several members of the family of a statement of custom appended to the genealogical tree, to which Mr. Justice Zafar Ali has referred could have been at the very most an attempt to create customs and in the circumstances in which the signatures were obtained, was not even this. There is no evidence whatsoever of the existence of the particular custom propounded in the 8th issue.

As a result I concur in the order accepting the appeal and decreeing the suit with costs throughout.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Litigant changing position—Estoppel—Madras Land Encroachment Act (III of 1905), ss. 2, 16—Submission—Rights of tenure-holders, effect on—Government's right to deal with property.

A litigant who has all along maintained a position in support of one branch of his suit cannot be permitted, when he fails upon that branch, to withdraw from the position and assert the contrary, more especially when he thereby places his opponent at a great disadvantage. [p. 503, col. 2.]

Mere submergence of land held under ryotwari tenure does not infer a relinquishment by the holder. On the other hand, if he wishes to retain his right to the submerged lands on the off-chance of their being re-formed in situ at some future date, he must continue to pay year by year the assessment or rent which is due to Government. The Government may from humanitarian motives remit the rent and such remissions are provided for by the standing orders. But such remissions can only be made by the authority of the Board of Revenue and the inferior officials including the Collector have no power at their own instance to make them. [p. 504, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where rights in a Government land on its submersion are relinquished by the tenure-holders, the Government are free to deal with it as they please and s. 16 of the Madras Land Encroachment Act has no application. [p. 505, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Lord Salvesen.—This is an appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 18th March, 1920, which substantially affirmed a decree in judgment dated 31st December, 1915, of the Subordinate Judge at Cocanada in a suit at the instance of the appellant against the respondent. This suit arose out of a dispute as to the ownership of a Lanka in the river Godavari in the Province of Madras, the extent of which was estimated, at the commencement of the suit, at 247 acres. The appellant is the owner of large estates, including the village of Kotipalli, situated on the banks of that river. The respondent is the Secretary of State for India, represented by the Collector of Godavari. It is common ground that in 1862 there existed a Lanka which was Government property, and for the cultivation of which pattas were issued by the Government of the day to ryots connected with the village of Sanapalli, which lies in the neighbourhood of Kotipalli. This Lanka was cultivated under these pattas for a number of years thereafter, and the Government assessment was duly paid by the cultivators. An example of such a patta has been produced in the present suit. It is dated in 1869, and indicates that erosion on a somewhat minute scale had already commenced to affect the area of the lands in question. Gradually the river encroached more and more upon these lands until, some time between 1880 and 1885, the whole of the lands had been totally submerged. After some years of total submergence a new Lanka appeared in the river which, by 1894, was of an area substantially the same as the lands in suit. At that time one, Mudragada Nagayya, was a lessee of the Kotipalli Lanka, under a lease granted by the owner of the estate, now represented by the appellant, the duration of which was 10 years from 1892. Nagayya took possession of the re-formed lands as forming an accretion to the Kotipalli Lankas and paid rent to the appellant for these lands as well as for those originally embraced in his lease and cultivated, through sub-lessees of his own. He did not, however, do so without objection and, from 1897 onwards, petitions were presented by the ryots of the Government village of Sanapalli complaining to the Government that the suit lands formed part of the old Sanapalli village, and requesting the Government to recover them from the appellant and grant them back to the ryots. The Government directed a survey of the lands and, after a lengthy correspondence between the appellant and the Government, the latter claimed the suit lands as Government property. In 1911 the Government sent notices to the appellant under s. 7 of the Madras Act III of 1905. These were followed by a notice dated 3rd February, 1912, demanding payment of Rs. 74,971.86, representing the penalty and block rates for the years 1900 to 1911, during which the appellant was alleged to be in unauthorised occupation of the suit lands.

On the 30th July, 1912, the appellant's predecessor-in-title instituted the present suit. In this he prayed for a judgment declaring his right to the 247 acres already referred to and to all accretions that might be made thereto, and for a permanent injunction against the Government restraining them from interfering with him in his ownership and enjoyment of the same by levying a penal assessment or by other steps. An immense amount of evidence was tendered at the trial, which it was stated occupied over 50 days of judicial time. The issue of fact which was responsible for most of the time occupied was whether the re-formed lands in question were an accretion to the appellant's lands of Kotipalli or constituted a re-formation in situ of the lands which had been formerly cultivated by the ryots of the Gevernment. This issue of fact has been decided by both Courts against the appellant and is no longer in controversy.

The issues which still fall to be dealt with concern the legality of the penal assessment imposed on the appellant in 1911, and, as the case was presented to the Board, this assessment was challenged upon three grounds :—

(1) That an assessment, whether penal or otherwise, can only be imposed under the terms of this Act on "any person who shall unauthorisedly occupy any land which is the property of the Government." The appellant conceded that it must be now taken to be a fact that the land in suit is the property of Government and that it had been unauthorisedly occupied, but he maintained that the only persons upon whom the assessment could be levied were those in physical occupation of the land and not upon the owner of the estates of Kotipalli, who had merely granted leases of these lands under a bona fide belief that they formed accretions to his property. He founded this particularly upon s. 6 (1), which makes the crops or other produce of the lands liable to forfeiture, which provision, he contended, could only be applicable to the actual cultivator and not to the landlord who, by the very fact of granting a lease of the lands, had excluded himself from occupation Whatever force there may be in this contention, their Lordships do not propose to express any opinion upon it. Their Lordships hold that this contention is not open to the appellant in view of his actings before and throughout the litigation. The plaint contains the following passages :—

"The Lanka in dispute has been in possession and enjoyment of the plaintiff's predecessors and plaintiff for several years," and in para. 8 the plaintiff also submits that:—

"Madras Act III of 1905 is not retrospective in its operation and does not entitle the Government to recover assessment from the plaintiff, as he was in possession and occupation long prior to the coming into force of Madras Act III of 1905." Not merely is there no reference to the construction which is now proposed to be put upon the Act in the plaint (which, indeed, in terms directly negatives the view now presented), but there is no trace of the contention being tabled throughout the voluminous proceedings in the Courts below. Even the appellant's case, although it is directed entirely to the legality of the penal assessment, does not contain a challenge of it upon this ground. There may have been occasions when the Board have entertained an argument on a pure question of law, although it has not been presented in the lower Court, where all the facts on which the contention depended had been definitely ascertained, but the objection to doing so in the present case goes very deep. The whole controversy between the appellant's predecessor and the Government which preceded the actual imposition of the penal assessment proceeded upon the admission or the tacit assertion, of the appellant that he was in occupation of the lands, or at all events, that he took upon himself the burden of vindicating the action of his own lessees or sub-lessees in cultivating it. Had this point been, at any time, mooted the Government would have had an opportunity of considering upon whom the notice of assessment which they ultimately sent to the appellant should have been given, and upon whom the penal assessment should have been levied. After a period of nearly 25 years has elapsed between the date when the Government first definitely intimated their claim to the lands in suit, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that it is too late for the Board to entertain this contention. A litigant who has all along maintained a position in support of one, and in this case the more important, branch of his suit cannot be permitted, when he fails upon this branch, to withdraw from the position and assert the contrary, more especially when he thereby places his opponent at the great disadvantage. There could be no clearer case for the application of the doctrine of estoppel owing to the conduct of the litigant.

(2) The second ground of attack by the appellant is based upon s. 2 of the Madras Act III of 1905. By that section all lands, wherever situated, are thereby declared to be the property of the Government, subject to the large exceptions enumerated under five heads which expressly preserve private rights. The exception founded on is contained in sub-section (c), which exempts from the operation of the clause all lands which are the property "of any person holding under ryotwari tenure...............or in any way subject to the payment of land revenue direct to Government." The respondent conceded that, before the submergence of the lands in suit, they came within this exception. He also conceded that, after a durkhast is made and a patta granted by Government, the interest of the ryot holding under this form of tenure is permanent, hereditary and transferable, that no ejectment at the instance of the Government is competent for arrears of rent, and that such arrears can only be recovered, as in the case of all Government revenue, by sale of the property held under this tenure. On the other hand, it is common ground that the holder of land under ryotwari tenure is entitled, at any time, to relinquish it, and the standing orders of the Board of Revenue applicable to Madras contain elaborate provisions dealing with this particular kind of tenure, and also with questions relating to the form of relinquishment, remission of rent and the like.

The High Court have dealt very exhaustively with the numerous points which have been argued on the question whether the relinquishment by the ryots of Sanapalli village who held the pattas before their respective lands became submerged can be inferred from the whole circumstances of the case, including a vast amount of documentary evidence. They drew the inference that it must be held as a fact that the ryots did relinquish their holding (and thereby secured immunity from further assessment in respect of them) as and when the lands became submerged and no longer capable of cultivation, and that, when the lands were re-formed in situ, they were the property of the Government and at their absolute disposal. Their Lordships agree with the reasoning of the High Court, and they will only summarise some of the considerations to which they attach most weight.

Mere submergence of land held under ryotwari tenure does not infer a relinquishment by the holder. On the other hand, if he wishes to retain his right to the submerged lands on the off-chance of their being re-formed in situ at some future date, he must continue to pay year by year the assessment or rent which is due to Government. There are instances referred to in the documentary evidence in which some of these ryots, whose lands were only partially eroded, continued to do so and so kept alive their rights, but, in the ordinary case, the poor cultivator's interest is to relinquish the lands so as to escape paying the annual rent in the hope that, at a future date, should the lands be re-formed in situ, he may obtain a new tenure from the Government. On the other hand, according to the standing orders, all land for which a stipulated rent continues to be paid must be entered in the registers which these orders prescrible. The registers contain not merely an enumeration of all the lands in the district to which they apply in individual numbers, but they specify the acreage of the individual plots and also contain a record of the amount of rent leviable from each ryot in respect of the plot or plots he holds. In the case of Sanapalli village it has been found by concurrent findings of the Courts below that, when the land in question became submerged, it was not merely omitted from the ayacut or acreage of the village, but also from the gudikat or rental roll. The submerged land was likewise struck out of the pattas which constitute the evidence of title given to the holders under ryotwari tenure. These pattas are subject to revision from time to time when changes of circumstances occur ; thus, if part of the land to which a ryot has right is eroded and relinquished by him, the rent corresponding to the part relinquished is deducted from the rent previously payable. In the case of the submerged lands the pattas appear to have been surrendered and, at all events, not one of them has been produced. It is common ground that none of the ryots who held pattas of the lands prior to submersion has paid any rent to the Government on these lands. These circumstances support the inference that the ryots concerned relinquished their holdings, which had indeed, in the then existing circumstances, become valueless. The only possible alternative is that we are to infer that the Government, from humanitarian motives, had remitted the rent due by the ryots. Such remissions are competent under the standing orders, but they can only be made by the authority of the Board of Revenue, and the inferior officials, including the Collector, have no power at their own instance to make them. No evidence is adduced of any such remission having been asked or having been granted spontaneously. Further, in the petitions presented to the Government in 1897 and onwards, although in one or two of them there are statements to the effect that the former ryots had not relinquished their holdings, there was no claim ever made by any individual ryot to the effect that an identifiable portion of the re-formed lands was his property. On the contrary, the petitions proceeded on the footing that it was the duty of the Government to recover the lands in the illegal occupation of the appellant and to re-settle them upon the ryots of the village of Sanapalli without reference to the particular ryots who held the lands before the submergence. One suggested method of the Government so settling them was that the lands should be exposed to auction so that those ryots of Sanapalli who were prepared to pay most for the lands would obtain pattas from Government at the rents which they offered. The evidence to be derived from the petitions points to the ryots of Sanapalli village accepting the position that the Government was entitled to resettle the lands, but urging that a preference should be given to the ryots of the village by whose inhabitants the lands had formerly been cultivated. A review of the whole facts disclosed by the evidence leads irresistibly to the conclusion that the lands in suit on their re-emergence from the river became once more the absolute property of the Government both under the Madras Act III of 1905, and at Common Law exactly as they had been in 1862 when the ryotwari tenures were first instituted

(3) Lastly, it was maintained by the appellant that s. 16 of the Madras Land Encroachment Act III of 1905 exempted the lands in question from its operation. The section is in these terms:—

> "Nothing in this Act shall apply to any lands claimed by right of escheat, resumption or reversion until such lands have been reduced into possession by Government."

It was argued for the appellant that, as the lands had been throughout occupied by himself or his tenants, they had never been reduced into possession by the Government, and that they were lands claimed by Government within the meaning of the clause. Their Lordships are unable to take this view. They are clearly of opinion that these lands were not claimed by Government within the meaning of the section. Before submersion these lands were the property of the Government, subject only to the rights of the ryotwari tenures which they had created. The moment these rights were relinquished by the ryots the Government were free to deal with them as they pleased. The effect of the relinquishment was to restore to the Government full freedom to dispose of what was originally their own. The appeal on this ground also fails. It is right to note that the apparent hardship of the appellant being subjected to a penal assessment in respect of the unauthorised occupation of lands of which, on plausible grounds, he believed himself to be the owner, has in this case been largely if not entirely obviated by the judgment of the High Court declaring the levy illegal for the years prior to the coming into force of the Madras Act III of 1905. This part of the judgment has not been challenged by either party.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the decision of the High Court of Judicature at Madras should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs to the respondent.

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 14th March 1925.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute has arisen in the execution of a decree for sale on foot of a mortgage. The property is situated in village Jalalabad. On 27th August 1901, two mortgage-deeds of 8 biswas property out of 20 biswas was executed by the owner in favour of Sahu Ganpat Rai and subsequently in 1909 the entire village was mortgaged to Sahu Parshadi Lal whose estate is now under the Court of Wards. Subsequently in 1912 12 biswas out of the village was again mortgaged to Ganpat Rai.

In 1913 Ganpat Rai obtained two decrees for sale on foot of the two mortgages in his favour. Parshadi Lal was made a party to the suit but on objection as to notice being raised by the Court of Wards, Parshadi Lal and the Court of Wards were exempted from the suit and the decree for sale was not passed against them. The decree resulted in a sale in favour of the objector Hidayat Ali Khan in 1916.

In 1914 the Court of Wards sued the mortgagor for sale on foot of the mortgage of 1909 in favour of Parshadi Lal. Ganpat Rai was made a party to the suit but no mention was made in the plaint of his prior mortgage of 1901. It was stated in the plaint that Ganpat Rai was a subsequent mortgagee under the mortgage of 1912 and had, therefore, a right to redeem. It is also admitted that in the plaint there was no specific prayer that the property should be sold free of encumbrances.

In the execution department Hidayat Ali Khan objected and pleaded that the village should be sold subject to the mortgage of 1901. This objection was granted by the learned Subordinate Judge and from that order the present appeal is filed by the Court of Wards.

The learned Government Advocate argued the matter with considerable ingenuity but we think that the opinion of the lower Court is correct. He relied on the Privy Council ruling reported as Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (1). That ruling, however, is distinguishable on the ground that in that case the prayer of the subsequent mortgagee was that the property should be sold free of encumbrances. The prior mortgagee, therefore, had notice that his priority was attacked and, in consequence, the prior mortgagee was bound to plead priority and having failed to do so was barred from putting it forward in a subsequent suit or subsequent proceeding in execution.

The facts of the present case are similar to those of the Privy Council case reported as Radha Kishun v. Khurshed Hossein (2). Their Lordships held that the prior mortgagee was not barred from putting forward his claim, when the prior mortgage was not impugned in the former suit and the subsequent mortgagee had not sought to displace the prior title of the prior mortgagee and postpone it to his own. To raise the plea of res judicata it would be necessary for the subsequent mortgagees as plaintiffs in the former suit to allege a distinct claim in the plaint in derogation of the priority of the prior mortgage. This was not done in the present case. In fact, the appellant omitted to make any mention of the prior mortgage in his plaint, thereby leading the subsequent mortgagee to believe that the appellant, who was well aware of the prior mortgage, accepted its priority. It was argued that the appellant having ignored the prior mortgage, it was the duty of the prior mortgagee to plead his priority. There was no such duty cast on Ganpat Rai. He was not a necessary party except as subsequent mortgagee and when the appellant failed to mention his prior mortgage, the presumption would be that its priority was not questioned by the appellant.

We dismiss the appeal with costs here on the higher scale.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 5, 56—Ad interim Receiver, appointment and powers of—Receiver in insolvency, duty of Court to appoint, before realisation of property—Removal of possession of property from person other than insolvent—Proper authority—Procedure.

The Insolvency Court before taking any action under s. 56 (3), Provincial Insolvency Act, in the way of realisation of property must appoint a Receiver and that means a Receiver in insolvency and not a Receiver ad interim. The power to remove property from the possession of any one other than the insolvent is reserved to the Court. [p. 507, col. 1.]

The Court can before adjudication depute an ad interim Receiver to collect evidence as to the assets of the insolvent but such a Receiver cannot pass a final order in a claim by a creditor to a property. [ibid.]

Section 4 read with s. 5 of the Insolvency Act requires a Court in matters of forcible realisation of property to act with the procedure and with the judicial caution of a Civil Court. [p. 507, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Foster, J.—It appears to me to be beyond question that the appellants have right on their side in the matter before us, They are the sons of one Girdhar Das, who came into Court, so far as the papers before us indicate, as early as 29th March 1924. He as a creditor lodged an objection to the application of another creditor for the adjudication of insolvency of Gobardhan Das. It was not till the 2nd August 1924 that Gobardhan Das was adjudged an insolvent. Meanwhile a local Pleader Babu Jagat Narayan had been appointed ad interim Receiver. Unfortunately the Court overlooked at the time of the adjudication the necessity of the formal appointment of a Receiver in insolvency invested with the powers and duties indicated in ss. 56 and 59 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Three days after the adjudication, the present appellants, who are sons of Girdhar Das, although they had not been substituted in place of their father, put in a petition asking that an enquiry be held as to the ownership of a house in Mohalla Ratanpura in Chupra town by the Receiver. It appears that this house had been recorded by the Receiver as the property of the insolvent and in fact as his only immoveable property. The substitution of the present appellants in the place of their father took place a few days later, and when they next appeared before the Receiver they undoubtedly appeared as party-creditors and they were claiming the house to be their own. Now, it is quite clear that the Court could before adjudication depute the Receiver ad interim to collect evidence as to the assets of the insolvent, but it is clear that the Receiver could not in a claim case of this nature pass the final order. In s. 56 (3) of the Act it is laid down that when "the Court appoints a Receiver, it may remove the person in whose possession or custody any such property as aforesaid is from the possession or custody thereof: Provided that nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom the insolvent has not a present right so to remove." Two inferences seem to be deducible from the phraseology of this enactment. The Court before it takes any action under this sub-section in the way of realisation of property must have appointed a Receiver; and that means a Receiver in insolvency and not a Receiver ad interim before the adjudication. Secondly, the power to remove property from the possession of any person is reserved to the Court. Another matter to be noticed in the new Insolvency Act is that the new s. 4 read with s. 5, which was the old s. 47, apparently intends that the Court in such matters of forcible realisation of property is to act with the procedure and no doubt with the judicial caution of a Civil Court. Under s. 4 the decision of a dispute between the debtors and the debtor's estate on the one hand, and claimants against it on the other, is to be final and binding; and under s. 5 the Court in regard to the proceedings under the Act is to have the same powers and to follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction. Now, what I deduce from this is that the claimants who are here in appeal have a right to be heard judicially and to have from the Court a final decision before the property is wrested from their possession. No doubt after the order under appeal the property has been taken possession of. But if that act has been ultra vires, it can only be ignored. The appellants did, as I have said, put in a petition before the "Receiver" in August last after they had been substituted in place of their father as creditors and as claimants. They applied for time continually, and in fact they do not appear to have taken any active step in the presence of the so-called Receiver. So in November we find that the so-called Receiver reported the fact to the Court. The Court then had the responsibility before it of carrying out the law which I have quoted from ss. 56 and 4 and 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. But instead of holding an enquiry the Court passed an order on the 15th November 1924 to the effect that the possession of the house with all other things mentioned in the insolvency petition be given to the Receiver through the Nazir. This order was passed without the slightest attempt at making an enquiry. Again on the 5th December the District Judge passed the second order which is the order under appeal. He mentioned that the present appellants had prayed that they might be allowed to adduce evidence in support of their claims, having been unable to do so previously on account of malarial fever: as he was not satisfied with this explanation of the appellants' previous conduct, he rejected the application.

Now it is perfectly obvious that the learned Judge had no power under the law to reject that application on these grounds. An enquiry by the so-called Receiver would not after adjudication be an enquiry of a person having authority under the Act. The Court had no evidence whatever before it, and had never in fact taken measures to hear the evidence in respect of this claim. The so-called Receiver had no power to make any such decision as is mentioned in s. 68 of the Act, nor, as I have said before, would a Receiver in insolvency have power under s. 56 to remove property from the possession of others than the insolvent.

It appears to me, therefore, that the order under appeal was one which was entirely without jurisdiction. It is now the Court's duty to appoint a Receiver in the regular manner; and in regard to the claim before it to pass a judicial decision as if this claim was a question agitated in an original Civil Court, following the same procedure so far as it can be followed. The decision thus arrived at after hearing the appellants' evidence and such evidence as the Receiver may adduce will obviously have the force of a decree under s. 4 and will be appealable to the High Court under s. 75. As the case stands there has as yet been no judicial treatment of this claim. I would, therefore, order accordingly allowing the appeal. The appellants will get their costs out of the estate.

Das, J.—I agree.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. S. Viswanatha Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this Letters Patent Appeal arises was instituted by some of the junior members of a Malabar tarward against the karnavan for maintenance. The 1st defendant, the karnavan, died in the course of the suit and defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the respondents before us, have been added as his legal representatives. The suit was to recover a money allowance from the 1st defendant personally and as karnavan of the tarwad. In defence it was pleaded that Ex. I was a bar to the plaintiffs' claim. Exhibit I is a karar of 1886 between the then karnavan of the tarwad, Kunhi Thoopar, and the members mentioned in it according to which properties were allotted to various tavazhis for maintenance. The present plaintiffs are the descendants of one Ummathal, No. 4 in Ex. I. It is admitted that they were not born at the time of the karar and the records do not show that their mother was a party to it. The tarwad at that time consisted of 69 members of whom 33 were adults and the rest minors. No one represented the minors in the karar. At present the tarwad consists of about 364 members living in 10 or 12 different houses. The District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge holding that the karar was only a temporary arrangement intended to have effect only during Kunhi Thoopar's lifetime, gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs at the rate of Rs. 5 per mensem per adult and Rs. 3 per mensem per minor. This decree was set aside by Phillips, J. The learned Judge held that the karar, Ex. I, was intended to enure for the benefit not only of the members then in existence but also of persons born subsequently, that the plaintiffs had been obtaining the benefit of the karar until shortly before the suit and if the plaintiffs wanted enhanced maintenance they must bring a suit in proper form impleading all the necessary parties. Inasmuch as that was not done, he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

We cannot agree with the learned Judge's view. Admittedly Ex. I is a very inartistically drawn up karar. The paragraphs in it referred to by the respondent's learned Vakil and the words "thavazhi" and "etc.," found in those paragraphs do not by any means establish beyond doubt that it evidences a permanent family arrangement; but, in our opinion, the question whether Ex. I was intended to bind future members of the tarwad is not very material in this case in view of the express provision in para. 5 thereof that "the stipulations according to this karar shall hold good until your death." The karar was clearly intended to be operative only during the lifetime of Kunhi Thoopar. The sentence immediately following this express stipulation, viz., "afterwards when affairs are managed with the co-operation of all the adult male members, relief is to be granted when demand is made for increase of maintenance" does not in any way limit the significance of the stipulation just referred to, nor does it show that the arrangement was intended to be permanent. It only means "you may continue in the very same manner as heretofore, or you may ask for an increase in maintenance," in other words, for an alteration of the karar, after the death of Kunhi Thoopar, when affairs are managed by those who succeed him. This clause as the learned Judge himself thinks, only lays down what the parties are entitled to do under the law even without a special stipulation. The next sentence in that paragraph, viz., "we and our tavazhis shall not be entitled to claim from you any maintenance until your death," also shows that the parties contemplated the karar to last only during the lifetime of the then existing karnavan. It may, however, be open to the tarwad as a whole by its conduct subsequent to Kunhi Thoopar's death to adopt the karar as binding on its members. Even so, mere maintenance arrangements are usually subject to modification if there is an appreciable or material change in the circumstances of the family [see Kelu Achen v. Lakshmi Nethyar Ammal (1).] Apparently the learned Judge seems to be of the view that the express stipulation in para. 5 is not of much importance as the karar seems to have continued in force after Kunhi Thoopar's death in the case of some of the tavazhis. That question was not raised in the Courts below and we do not express any opinion on it, though we may say in passing that some documents with reference to it were brought to our notice from the list of plaintiffs' exhibits found in the District Munsif's judgment. The real question would be whether the plaintiffs or the tavazhi along with the other branches can be understood to have tacitly adopted the karar as binding on them having regard to the general administration of the affairs of the tarwad and the tavazhies subsequent to the death of Kunhi Thoopar and have thereby lost their rights to claim maintenance. This question also was never raised in the lower Courts and has not been considered. Exhibit VIII referred to by the learned Judge admittedly does not refer to the plaintiffs or to the plaintiffs' tavazhi. In this connection the learned Judge states that "it appears from the District Munsif's finding on issue No. II that the plaintiffs have been obtaining the benefit, at any rate until shortly before suit." We find, and it is conceded that there is no such finding by the learned District Munsif, what he finds being only this, viz., "Even if the persons who are in actual enjoyment of the properties give anything gratuitously to plaintiffs, they will not be deprived of their right to get maintenance from the tarwad." The point is not even referred to in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. From these considerations the conclusion is inevitable that Ex. I does not bar the plaintiffs' right to claim maintenance from the tarwad.

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 234; (1913) M W. N. 379.

This being so, Mr. Menon argues that the appellants are entitled straightway to get a decree for maintenance and the decree of the Subordinate Judge confirming the decree of the District Munsif should be restored. In our opinion, this consequence does not necessarily follow from our conclusion. In the way we look at the case, the plaintiffs have to surmount certain obstacles before they can ask for a decree. Barring the personal relief, the relief claimed is against the tarwad property. This admittedly is in the hands of the various tavazhis managed by the tavazhi karnavans. In the absence of those persons as parties, obviously no decree can be given against the property in their hands. The decree directed against the properties in the hands of the karnavan alone as has been given by the lower Courts is unjustifiable, in view of the fact that he has not the entire tarwad property in his possession. Further as pointed out by Mr. Viswanatha Aiyar on behalf of the karnavan representing the tarwad, in order to give effect to the plaintiffs' right to maintenance, it may be necessary to subsitute a new arrangement in the place of the existing one. The law is well-settled that a karnavan cannot set aside an existing maintenance arrangement unless he makes some other suitable arrangement. The plaintiffs' right to maintenance may be given effect to possibly without altering the present arrangements or by some slight adjustment. These and other necessary relevant questions can be considered and decided only in a suit in which the entire tarwad is properly represented. Such is not the framework of the plaintiff's suit, but we think this is a proper case in which they may be given a chance to proceed with the suit after making the necessary persons parties to it. The learned Judge, Phillips, J., apparently did not allow them this indulgence because in his view the suit which the plaintiffs could bring was one for increased maintenance; while this one instituted by them was for maintenance only. As we have held that Ex. I does not bar the plaintiffs' suit for maintenance, we think they are entitled to proceed with the suit.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the learned Judge and remand the entire case to the District Munsif for fresh disposal according to law and in the light of our observations. All the new defendants will be entitled to file written statements, if they desire to do so, and the plaintiffs may amend the plaint, if necessary, to meet the new contentions which may be urged by the defendants.

If the plaintiffs had framed the suit in proper form, there would have been probably no need for this remand. The defect was pointed out to them by the defendant in the first Court though the omission does not seem to have been referred to in the Court of Appeal. In these circumstances we have decided that each party should bear its own costs up to date.

FIRM GOPAL RAI-RAM CHUNDER—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Carriage of goods—Railway Company—Risk Note—Delay in delivery—Railway, liability of.

Where a consignee of goods in consequence of obtaining the carriage of his goods at low rates signs a Risk Note thereby absolving the Railway from liability for loss under certain circumstances, he is bound by the terms of the note. [p. 511, col. 1.]

Where a suit as framed is not one brought in tort for damages due to loss occasioned to the plaintiff on account of retardation in delivery but simply for compensation for the loss of the articles which were found missing, it cannot succeed on the ground of delay in delivery of goods, where the goods were consigned to the Railway under Risk Note Form H. Application against a decision of the Small Cause Court Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 4th December 1924.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha, N. C. Ghosh and B. B. Ghose, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. B. C. Sinha and R. A. N. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in Civil Revisional Jurisdiction made under somewhat peculiar circumstances.

The matter relates to a suit brought by the opposite party here against among other defendants the Madras and Southern Marhatta Railway Company on behalf of which Company the present application has been made. The facts in the case were very simple.

The plaintiffs in the suit were con of some packages of cloth; these packages of cloth were despatched from Bangalore City in the south of India to Bhagalpur Station on the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company's system. The route by which the goods were actually to travel was not, of course, indicated in any of the papers which formed the contract between the consignors, the consignees and the Railway Companies over whose systems the goods might travel. There might have been a variety of Railways over the lines of which the packages might have gone; at any rate we know the East Indian Railway Company, the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company, and Madras and Southern Marhatta Railway Company were or might have been concerned. Now there is no doubt that when the consignees came to take delivery of the packages there was a shortage of 21 seers of cloth in one package; no one knows and no one can tell where or how this missing cloth was abstracted or why the shortage existed. The plaintiffs in due course brought a suit for compensation for the loss of these articles and it was heard before the Small Cause Court Judge at Bhagalpur. The action, of course, was for damages for breach of contract and on the face of the contract had there been no intervening circumstances the suit would, no doubt, have been impossible to defend; but as is so often the case in these cases relating to the carriage of goods by Railways in India the Company, that is to say, the applicants here, had contracted with the party for whom they were carrying these goods under special terms. These special terms are contained in what is known as Risk Note; the person on behalf of whom the goods are carried obtains there carriage at a low rate or what is frequently termed a special reduced rate; but in consequence of obtaining the carriage of his goods at this low rate he absolves specifically the Railway Company from responsibilty for loss under certain circumstances. The principal points of importance in the present Risk Note which covered the articles in question in this case are to the effect that the Railway Company is to be held not responsible for any loss, destruction, deterioration or damage to any of the goods consigned except in the event of any complete parcel being lost under circumstances which could be shown to be due to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to other circumstances, such as, theft and the like to which I need not here refer as they are not material. The defence, therefore, of the Railway Company was simply that they were protected from the claim made by the plaintiffs by virtue of the exemptions from liability contained in this Risk Note to which I have referred. It is very difficult to see how the Small Cause Court Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs could succeed. However, he seems to have arrived at this conclusion on grounds which, I must say, appear to me to be erroneous. In the first place, he seems to think that, because the goods did not travel so far as they possibly could on the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company's system, they had been despatched or carried on what he calls a wrong route. There is, however, to my mind no force in such a suggestion; there was no contract on behalf of the Railway Company that they would carry the goods by any particular route; there is nothing except the name of the place of despatch and the name of the place of consignment contained in the contract between the parties concerned; it appears to me that so long as the goods were delivered at the place of consignment and so long as they were delivered in due course, i. e., within a reasonable time, it mattered not to the plaintiffs or to any one else by what particular route the goods may have been, for the convenience of the Railway Company or for what other reason we do not know, despatched by the carriers. The Small Cause Court Judge has also based his finding in favour of the plaintiffs upon another ground and that there was delay in delivery of the goods. As a matter of fact it does not appear to me that there was any undue delay in the delivery of goods: the plaintiffs could have obtained delivery earlier than they did; but there was considerable correspondence and discussion as to whether the plaintiffs would take delivery without conditions or what is known as open delivery, that is to say, delivery under protest. There is, however, a far more important objection to the case being decided in favour of the plaintiffs on the ground of delay and this is that the suit as framed was not as one brought in tort for damages due to loss occasioned to the plaintiffs on account of the retardation in delivery but simply for compensation for the loss of the articles which were found missing. Certainly the action was founded on breach of contract and in no sence on tort based upon the delay. There were no damages proved to have been sustained by the delay in the delivery and the action was brought simply upon the question of whether or not there had been breach of the contract and whether or not the Company was liable in view of the exemptions which were contained in the Risk Note Form H. I am quite unable to see how the plaintiffs can in this case succeed. I think the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge was wrong in law. The route was immaterial and the idea that there were any damages, due to delay, appears to me to be quite untenable. The action should have been dismissed, and although one must feel some sympathy with the plaintiffs in respect of their loss it is quite clear to my mind that if they accepted the provisions of the Risk Note Form H they must put up with the loss.

Under these circumstances the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge of the 4th of December last must be set aside and the suit must be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs of this Court.

CIVIL SUIT No. 114 OF 1926.
March 3, 1926.
Present:—Sir Victor Murray Coutts Trotter, KT., Chief Justice.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 94, O. XXXVIII, r. 1—Arrest before judgment, principles of—Suit founded on proceedings of special Tribunal created by firman of Nizam—Plaint disclosing highly contentious questions—Arrest before judgment, whether can be ordered.

Before ordering arrest before judgment a Court should be satisfied (1) that the plaintiff's cause of action is prima facie an unimpeachable one subject to his proving the allegations made in the plaint and (2) that there is reason to believe on adequate materials that unless the jurisdiction is exercised there is a real danger that the defendant will remove himself from the ambit of the powers of the Court. [p. 513, col. 1.]

A suit was filed on the Original Side of the High Court of Madras for recovery of a sum of 5½ lakhs of rupees and the plaint was founded on the proceedings of a special tribunal created under a firman of the Nizam of Hyderabad and described as a decree of that commission. On an application by the plaintiff for arrest before judgment of the defendant and for an order that he should be made to show cause why he should not give security for his appearance:

Held, that it was at least highly arguable that the proceedings before the Commissioners terminated not in anything that could be called a decree or a foreign judgment within the meaning of s. 13 of the C. P. C. but a report submitted to the Nizam to guide him as to what action he should take; [p. 514, col. 1.]

(2) that it was equally arguable that the order to pay passed by the Nizam though binding on the defendant as a subject, was not a foreign judgment but an executive act; [ibid.]

(3) that the plaint, therefore, disclosed highly contentious matters, obviously doubtful and arguable and the application for arrest before judgment and for security must be rejected. [ibid.]

When the jurisdiction of a British Court is invoked against a subject of a foreign state on the ground that by coming within the physical boundaries of the jurisdiction of that Court he is liable to be sued as if he were a subject of His Majesty, a duty is cast upon the Court to be as jealous in safeguarding his liberties as if he were for all purposes a subject of His Majesty. [p. 514, cols. 1 & 2.]

Notice of motion under O. XXXVIII, r. 1, C. P. C., for arrest before judgment of the defendant.

Mr. Nugent Grant, for the Plaintiff.
Mr. S. Varadachariar, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under O. XXXVIII, r. 1, C. P. C., for arrest before judgment of the defendant and an order that he should be made to show cause in compliance with s. 94 (a), C.P. C., why he should not give security for his appearance. At the close of the argument, I intimated what I proposed to do in the matter but as it is one of considerable general importance I thought it best to state my reasons formally. The facts are shortly as follows: The suit was brought on the Original Side of the Court for a sum of very nearly 5½ lakhs and it was founded upon what he, the plaintiff, described as "the decree dated 19th December 1925, at Hyderabad Deccan, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in the State of His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad", that suit is not before me but will be tried in the ordinary course by a Judge sitting on the Original Side of this Court and I desire to say nothing that would in any way seem to anticipate that decision. But I am asked here to exercise a jurisdiction the effect of which might be to compel a man either to furnish security in a very large sum of money or possibly on his failure to do so to undergo imprisonment. I think it is desirable that I should state what are the principles which, in my opinion, should guide me in exercising that jurisdiction. It appears to me that before exercising the powers conferred by O. XXXVIII, a Court should be satisfied on two points. The first is that the plaintiff's cause of action is prima facie an unimpeachable one subject to his proving the allegations made in the plaint. The second is that the Court should have reason to believe on adequate materials that unless the jurisdiction is exercised there is a real danger that the defendant will remove himself from the ambit of the powers of the Court. For the reasons which I am about to give I do not think it necessary for me to go into the second point in this case as I do not think that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing his position on the first point. The debt on which the Hyderabad proceedings were founded was incurred about 50 years ago before the present defendant was born, in any event before the year 1877, because in that year a suit of some sort was launched for this very debt against Hargopaldoss, the brother of the present defendant's grandfather. It appears to have been started in a Tribunal called the Court of Bankers which ceased to exist before any conclusion was arrived at; and according to the plaintiff, the suit was then transferred to the High Court of Hyderabad which I take to be the ordinary and regular tribunal in that State for the disposal of Civil cases. No final judgment was ever delivered in that Court because owing to some failure by the plaintiff to pay stamp-duties or fees in the regular course, the High Court ordered the suit to be taken off its list of pending cases. This statement I take from the affidavit of the plaintiff himself. The defendant says that that order was passed as long ago as 1881, and his statement is uncontradicted. In March 1922 a petition was addressed by the plaintiff to His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad and in response to that petition a firman was issued by His Exalted Highness appointing a special Commission to hear and report to him upon the claim and apparently some special directions were given in the firman, a complete copy of which has not been put before me, as to how the plea of limitation which, it was doubtless anticipated, the defendant would set up was to be dealt with. The Commissioners were two Judges of the High Court and a gentleman who is described as holding the office of Sadrul Maham which is translated as Head of the Department of Commerce and Industries. That Tribunal issued a report a copy of which is before me furnished by the plaintiff. The Commissioners framed issues, heard evidence, and examined accounts. The wording of a portion of the firman is quoted to the effect that the suit is to be heard by the Commission "irrespective of limitation." The issue that was framed is this; "Is this case different from the case of Amersi Sejan Mal and Mahanand Ram Puran Mal (that is apparently the original suit in the Court of Bankers) and is it not covered by the firman and is it not exempt from limitation" with a note "onus on the defendant"? The reason for framing this issue in this form appears to be as follows, that the plaintiff contended that the proceedings before the Commissioners were a mere continuation of the old suit that was filed before the defunct Court, the Court of Bankers, in 1877, and it was alleged that in that Court no question of limitation was ever entertained and no such plea was ever open to a defendant there.

I have not had put before me any information as to how the Courts of Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction in Hyderabad are constituted nor under what authority the ordinary Law of Limitation is in force as it undoubtedly appears to be in the Ordinary Civil Courts of the State. I have no information as to how far the prerogative of His Exalted Highness extends and I am not suggesting any doubts that His Exalted Highness was acting entirely within his constitutional powers in issuing the firman of 1923. So far as I can ascertain from perusing the document, the proceedings of the Commission really amounted to what I should call a report to be laid before His Exalted Highness and I gather that the mandate to pay a sum of money issued to the defendant took the form of an order passed by His Exalted Highness in the amount reported by the Commissioners to be the sum in their opinion due. I may add that the principal debt was found by them to be a sum of about 2¾ lakhs and that interest at the rate which is alleged to have been originally agreed upon between the parties would on a rough calculation, appear to amount to nearly 8 lakhs at simple interest and to the stupendous figure of about half a crore at compound. Such a conclusion obviously staggered the Commissioners and they cut down the interest to the exact sum of the principal, I do not know on what legal basis.

I have already said that I do not propose to say anything about the merits of this case but I think before I make an order under O. XXXVIII I must at least be satisfied that the plaint does not reveal on the face of it any matter which is obviously doubtful and arguable. In my opinion this plaint discloses highly contentious matters. Assuming as I do for the purposes of this case that the acts of His Exalted Highness as a Soverign Prince cannot be questioned in these Courts and that his subjects cannot be heard to say that any orders passed by him in relation to them are not binding upon them or that he has not power to take away any matter from the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, to be dealt with by himself or anybody appointed for the purpose by them, it nevertheless seems to me that there are two matters apparent on the face of this plaint which preclude me from exercising the jurisdiction conferred on me by O. XXXVIII. The plaint is founded on the proceedings of the Special Tribunal created under the firman and describes it as a decree of that Commission. As I have already pointed out, it is at least highly arguable that the proceedings before the Commissioners terminated not in anything that could be called a decree or a foreign judgment within the meaning of s. 13 of the C. P. C., but a report submitted to His Exalted Highness to guide him as to what action he should take. It is also obvious that it is highly arguable that the order to pay passed by His Exalted Highness, though binding on the defendant as a subject, is not a judgment but an executive act. I pass no opinion as to whether those arguments are sound or unsound but it appears to me that it would be wrong for me to subject this defendant to any process before he has had an opportunity of urging them. It is inapposite to speak in this case of safeguarding the liberty of the subject because the matter comes before me on the footing that the defendant is not a subject of His Majesty the King-Emperor but of His Exalted Highness the Nizam. But at the same time when the jurisdiction of this Court is invoked against a subject of a Foreign State on the ground that by coming within the physical boundaries of the jurisdiction of this Court he is liable to be sued as if he were a subject of His Majesty, a duty is cast upon me to be as jealous in safeguarding his liberties as if he were for all purposes a subject of His Majesty. I do not think it necessary to refer to the provisions of s. 13 of the C. P. C., except in so far as inferentially I may be taken to have founded myself on cl. (a) of that section as being a provision which it will be open to the defendant to invoke in his favour and I do not feel called upon to pay any attention to the argument about natural justice which is referreed to in cl. (d). It would obviously be grossly disrespectful of this Court to entertain any argument to the effect that an order passed by a Sovereign power by virtue of its prerogative was opposed to natural justice; nor for the matter of that am I able to see how natural justice, whatever the expression may mean, can be said to include the right of a defendant to plead limitation, unless it is granted to him by a Statute acknowledged by the Sovereign Prince to be binding upon him and to limit by its terms the exercise of his prerogative. I may add that the impossibility of this Court taking upon itself to question the act of a Sovereign Prince on any such ground adds additional force to the defendant's contention that the act of His Exalted Highness was an executive act performed by him by virtue of his prerogative as a Sovereign Prince and not in any sense a judgment or a judicial decree. In conclusion, I wish to repeat once more that all these matters which I have discussed are ultimately matters for the Judge before whom the suit will come for trial, and that I need say no more than this; that they raise to my mind sufficient ground for my refusing to act in anticipation of that determination by that Tribunal. The summons will be dismissed with defendant's taxed costs in any event.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 77—Suit for possession of land—Defendant's plea as to right of occupancy—Jurisdiction.

Where in a suit for possession on the allegation of defendant's trespass, it becomes necessary on the plea of the defendant that he is an occupancy tenant, to adjudicate as to the status of the defendant as occupancy tenant, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted and the suit becomes one cognizable by a Revenue Court only.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 30th April 1925, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Gujrat, dated the 27th February 1424.

Malik Ram Lal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs instituted the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen for possession of land. The defendants were alleged to be trespassers. Inter alia the plea of the defendants was that they were occupancy tenants and that, therefore, the suit was not cognisable by the Civil Courts. It appears that the defendants were held to be occupancy tenants by Revenue Courts in 1900. Subsequently disputes arose between the parties and the plaintiffs alleging to have purchased the occupancy rights from the defendants got the names of the latter removed from the column of cultivation in the revenue records. But this order was set aside by the Commissioner on the 31st June 1920. The result is that the defendants are shown as occupancy tenants in the revenue records. On the 9th May 1921 by virtue of a compromise which was attested before the Naib-Tahsildar and has been proved by Nawab defendant the plaintiffs agreed to allow the defendants to continue as occupancy tenants. The present suit by the plaintiffs under the circumstances was clearly cognizable by the Revenue Courts because the pleas of the defendants made it necessary to adjudicate as to their claim of the status of occupancy tenants. The plaintiffs-respondents have not appeared before me in this appeal and consequently accepting the appeal I order that the suit be dismissed with costs throughout.

Sri TRIPURASUNDARI COTTON PRESS, BEZWADA, REPRESENTED BY THE SECRETARY, ADDEPALLI VENKATAPPAYYA—DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 115, 161, 120—Dividend payable by company—Suit for recovery by share-holder—Limitation.

A suit by an auction-purchaser of a share-holder's rights to receive dividends of a Company for recovery of dividend declared and payable by the Company is governed by Art. 120 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and not by either Art. 62, 115 or 116. [p. 521, col. 1]

A debt created by the declaration of dividend by a Company in favour of a share-holder, whether or not in certain circumstances and for certain purposes it may be regarded as a contract, is not a contract such as is contemplated by Arts. 115 and 116 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 520, col. 2.]

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—This is a

Letters Patent appeal from the judgment of Wallace, J. One Subba Rao was a share holder of the 2nd defendant Company. A money decree was passed against him and in execution of it certain shares belonging to him together with the dividends that had accrued were attached and sold. The plaintiff who became the purchaser at the Court-sale has instituted the present suit for the recovery of the dividends The short question to be decided is: What is the Article of the Limitation Act that is applicable to the case? The defendant Company contends that the period of limitation is three years, whereas the plaintiff urges that the period is six years. Wallace, J., was of the opinion that the suit would have been in time had the plaintiff been a share-holder but that the plaintiff would not fall under that Article. The ground of his decision is that Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co, Ltd. v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) which lays down that a suit for return of deposit is governed by Art. 116 is inapplicable, if the suit is brought not by a share-holder between whom and the Company there is a contractual relation but by a transferee from such a share holder. With great respect, I am unable to agree. Article 116 applies to a suit "for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered." The Article does not say that the suit must necessarily be by the promisee against the promisor; if, for instance, the claim is founded upon a registered bond, can it be said that a suit by a transferee from the payee under the bond does not come under this Article? The suit being for a dividend that has accrued, is in the nature of a claim for money due and the position of the transferee for this purpose cannot be different from that of the share-holder himself.

The case cannot, therefore, be distinguished as has been done by Wallace, J., from Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co., Ltd. v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1).

In my opinion the real question that arises is: Does Art. 116 apply at all? In other words, does Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co., Ltd v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) correctly state the law.

Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., held in it that a suit by a share-holder against a Company is governed by Art. 116. With the utmost respect for the learned Judges I feel bound to say that this decision is based on a fallacy. Article 116 applies to contracts in writing registered. Is the contract between the share-holder and the Company a contract of this description? The learned Judges having held that the memorandum and the articles of association constitute the contract between the share-holder and the Company, took the view that these two documents must be deemed to be registered within the meaning of Art 116. Is this construction correct? The word "registered" has not been defined in the Limitation Act but its definition is to be found in the General Clauses Act of 1897. Section 3, cl. (45) of that Act says:—"'Registered' used with reference to a document, shall mean registered in British India under the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents." Can it be said that the Indian Companies Act embodies any portion of "the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents?" The Act deals with the registration of companies and not registration of documents. Section after section refers to the registering of a Company. Section 2, cl. (2), defines a Company as one registered under the Act. Section 2, cl. (15), defines the "Registrar" as a Registrar performing under the Act the duty of registration of Companies. Section 4 prohibits certain partnerships unless they are registered as Companies. Section 11 aims against the registration of Companies by names identical with those of Companies already in existence. Section 248 provides for the establishment of registration offices and deals with the offices where Companies shall be registered. It is unnecessary to refer to further sections, but it is clear beyond doubt that it is the registration of Companies and not of documents that is within the purview of the Indian Companies Act.

It is no doubt true that in a few sections the word 'registered" is used with reference to the memorandum and the articles of association. After dealing with the registration of these documents (sections 17, 18, 22 and 23), the Act proceeds to enact in s. 24 that a certificate of incorporation shall be conclusive evidence that the association is a company registered under the Act. But registration of the articles and memorandum is merely incidental and the object to be achieved is the registration of the Company. It is not sufficient to say that in the Indian Companies Act there are some stray provisions that deal with the registration of certain documents. The real question is: Does the Indian Companies Act contain any portion of "the law" as contemplated by the General Clauses Act "for the time being in force for the registration of documents?"

(1) 48 Ind. Cas. 903; 42 M. 33; 35 M. L. J. 253; 8 L. W. 354; 24 M. L. T. 246.

I have so far applied a negative test. Where is this law then contained? If we now turn to the Registration Act of 1908 we find the preamble running thus:—

"Whereas it is expedient to consolidate the enactments relating to the registration of documents. It is hereby enacted as follows."

It is the Indian Registration Act, therefore, that contains "the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents." It is needless to point out that this Act does not deal with the registration of memoranda or articles of association.

The view I have taken derives some support from Art. 112 of the Limitation Act which gives the period of limitation as three years for a suit to enforce a call by a registered Company. If in the opinion of the Legislature, enforcing a call is enforcing an obligation arising under a registered contract, a period of three years would not have been prescribed; for, under Art. 116 when any contract (whatever its nature may be) is in writing registered, the period of limitation is six years See Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinathji Thakur (2). The general policy of the Act is to prescribe the longer period in the case of obligations arising under a registered contract. If, therefore, Art. 112 in truth refers to such an obligation, the position will be this: Article 112 will stand apart and be inconsistent with the general scheme and policy of the Act. From this it is a fair inference that the idea underlying Art. 112 is that the obligation in respect of a call does not arise under a registered contract. This Article also incidentally shows by its wording that what is registered is the Company and not the Articles or memoranda.

Article 116, therefore, of the Limitation Act cannot apply to a suit by a share-holder against a registered Company. The learned Judges who decided Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co., Ltd., v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) came to the opposite conclusion as they felt that a narrow interpretation should not be put upon the words in the General Clauses Act. When two interpretations are possible, one narrow and the other a liberal one, I should certainly not have the slightest hesitation in adopting that interpretation which accords with justice. But I cannot help feeling in the present case that the construction suggested on behalf of the plaintiff is utterly unsound. It is with the greatest reluctance that I feel compelled, departing from the authority cited, to adopt a view which gives the shorter period of limitation.

The plaintiff's learned Vakil suggests that if Art. 116 does not apply, Art. 120, the residuary Article, governs the case. I cannot accept this contention. Article 115 applies to suits for compensation for the breach of a contract not in writing registered. It is contended that the memoranda and Articles do not constitute a contract between the Company and its members. In Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co. Ltd. v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1), it was held that the obligation to pay a dividend arises from the contract evidenced by these documents. I am prepared to follow this decision in this respect. Section 21 of the Indian Companies Act runs thus:—

"The memorandum and articles shall, when registered, bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed by each member and contained a covenant on the part of each member, his heirs and legal representatives, to observe all the provisions of the memorandum and of the articles, subject to the provisions of this Act."

This section is almost identical with s. 14 of the English Act, The Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. The contention is that although the section says that there shall be deemed to be a covenant on the part of each member, it does not say that the company is bound by reason of a contract entered into by it.

There has been a good deal of conflict of opinion in England on this point and Palmer in his "Company Law" deals in Ch. IV with this subject.

In Welton v. Saffery (3) Lord Herschell observed: "It is quite true that the articles constitute a contract between each member and the Company."

Stirling, J., in Wood v. Odessa Water- works Co. (4) said: "The articles of association constitute a contract not merely between the share-holders of the Company, but between each individual share-holder and every other."

James, L. J., in Johnson v. Lyttle's Iron Agency (5) referred to the articles as a contract between the Company and the share-holders. It is unnecessary to multiply references and it is sufficient to refer to the following passage in Buckley's Companies Acts, 1924 Edition, page 28:—

"All the authorities as to whether the articles constitute a contract as between the Company and its members were reviewed by Astbury, J., in the recent case of Hickman v. Kent or Ramney Marsh Sheepbreeder's Association (6) who decided that the result of the apparently conflicting decisions and dicta referred to above was that though the articles can neither constitute a contract between the Company and an outsider nor give any individual member of the Company special contractual rights beyond those of the members (or, quære, any particular class of members) generally, they do in fact constitute a contract between a Company and its members in respect of their ordinary rights as members."

If the articles and memoranda constitute, therefore, a contract binding on the Company as well as on each member, Art. 115 clearly applies to the case and a suit for the recovery of the dividend must be brought in three years from the date when payment becomes due.

As the view I am taking is opposed to that adopted by a Bench of this Court in Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co. Ltd. v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) and as the point, I understand, is likely to frequently arise in connection with a Company which is now under liquidation, I would refer the following question to a Full Bench:—

Is a suit by a share-holder against a Company for recovery of a dividend governed by Art. 115 or 116 of the Limitation Act?

If neither Article applies, which is the Article applicable?

Madhavan Nair, J.—For deciding this Letters Patent appeal, it has become necessary to consider the question, what Article of the Limitation Act governs a suit by a share-holder against a Company. In Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co., Ltd., v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) it was held by Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., that Art. 116 applies to such a case. Under this Article a period of six years is fixed for suits "for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered." The learned Judges in Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co., Ltd v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) took the view (1) that the memorandum and articles of association constituted the contract between the share-holders and the Company and (2) that these two documents must be deemed to be registered within the meaning of Art. 116. Accepting the soundness of the view that the two documents constitute the contract, the learned Vakil for the respondent has argued that these two documents cannot be considered to be registered within the meaning of Art. 116. "Registered" according to the General Clauses Act, s. 3, cl. (45), when used with reference to a document, means "registered in British India according to the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents." According to its preamble, the Indian Registration Act contains the law for the time being in force for the registration of documents. That Act does not contain any special provision for the registration of "memorandum and articles of association." Sections 17 and 18 of the Indian Companies Act refer to the registration of these documents and s. 22 says that the Registrar of the Province in which the registered office of the Company is situate shall retain and register them. The Registrar means a Registrar or Assistant Registrar performing under the Indian Companies Act the duty of registration of Companies [see s. 2, cl. (15)]. Section 23 refers to the effect of registration and s. 24 says that a certificate of incorporation given by the Registrar should be conclusive evidence that the association is a company registered under the Act. As pointed out by my learned brother, ss. 2, cls. (2) and (15), 4, 5, 11 and 248 indicate that the Indian Companies Act embodies only the law for the "registration of Companies" and not any portion of the law for the "registration of documents," for which provision is made in the Indian Registration Act. The wording of Art. 112 of the Indian Limitation Act suggests that what is registered is the "Company" and not the "memorandum" or "articles of association." No doubt, there are sections, as already mentioned, in the Indian Companies Act relating to the registration of these two documents, but on the strength of those sections which deal only with what may be described as matters incidental to the registration of Companies, I do not think it can be said that any portion of the law for the registration of documents for the time being in force is contained in the Indian Companies Act.

If this view is accepted, then Art. 115 of the Indian Limitation Act would be the Article applicable to a suit by a share-holder against a Company, but the learned Vakil for the appellant argues that that Article is inapplicable because the memoranda and the articles of association do not constitute a contract between the Company and its members and that, therefore, the proper Article which would govern the case is Art. 120. As regards the question whether the memoranda and the articles of association constitute a contract, there has been some conflict of opinion in England, but the weight of authority is decidedly against the view put forward on behalf of the appellant. I think it has been rightly held in Ripon Press & Sugar Mill Co., Ltd. v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) that the right to receive a dividend arises out of the contract evidenced by the memorandum and the articles of association.

In the circumstances pointed out by my learned brother, I agree that the opinion of the Full Bench may be invited on the questions proposed by him.

Mr. K. N. Rajagopala Sastry, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Respondents.

This Letters Patent Appeal came on for hearing yesterday and this day in pursuance of the order contained in the said Order of Reference to the Full Bench. The Court expressed the following OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—In this case the appellant bought up at a Court auction sale the rights of the judgment-debtor to receive dividends accrued in a limited Company of which he was a share-holder. The question that we have to determine, now that the auction-purchaser is seeking to enforce his right against the Company, is what period of limitation is applicable to such a claim.

The Indian Limitation Act is one of those unfortunate pieces of Indian legislation which by trying to provide for everything conceivable very often ends by leaving out cases of the most glaring description. I might take this as a very good instance, for there is no Article which provides simpliciter for a debt due, such a debt as would have been the subject of the old Common Law action in debt, although, oddly enough, provision is made by Art. 63 "for money payable for interest upon money due from the defendant to the plaintiff; " so that a special Article is enacted for the interest and nothing is said whatever about the principal of the debt. It is suggested that to such cases as this, art. 62 might apply which is "for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use." The fact is that the money out of which the dividend has to come is received by the Company for its own use and put into its own coffers. Then at a later stage in accordance with the Article a dividend is declared by the Company in a general meeting on the advice and recommendations of the Directors. The very ingenious argument put forward was that as soon as the declaration was made, there must be taken to be a notional second receipt by the Company, as it were from its right hand to its left, the second receipt to be deemed to be for the use of the share-holders who will be entitled to the dividend. It is sufficient to say that that is a line of argument which seems quite in conflict with the enactment of the Statute as to when the time begins to run and that is when the money is received, the clear implication being—and it is not inconsistent with the frame of the English cause of action for money had and received—that the money must at the time it came into the hands of the defendant have been there and then put into his hands for the use of the plaintiff. It is quite true that in cases where the party aggrieved is ignorant of the facts, the time will only begin to run, not when the money was in fact received by the defendant, but when the plaintiff first became aware of it; but that is a matter of procedure which really does not, except for a special purpose, fix the time when the money is to be deemed to be received. I think we are constrained to hold that the original receipt by the company is the only receipt upon which art. 62 would operate and that as that receipt is not for the use of the plaintiff he cannot be brought within Art. 62

I now pass to the next suggested alternative which is Art. 115, and that is worded as follows: "For compensations for the breach of any contract, express or implied, not in writing registered and not herein specially provided for" and if the defendant Company can bring itself within the four walls of that Article, that carries them home in this case and this action is statute barred. Were the matter res integra, I should myself be strongly inclined to say that an action such as this was not an action for compensation for the breach of any contract. The English and the Irish Courts have quite clearly laid it down that upon the declaration of a dividend a debt immediately becomes payable by the Company to each share-holder in respect of the amount of dividend represented by the amount of his holding in shares, and I should have thought, therefore, that it was not correct to describe the obligation to pay a debt as being compensation for the breach of a contract. But that matter is not res integra because it has been dealt with in a decision under the following Article, 116 of the Limitation Act, by the Privy Council. That is the case of Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinath Ji Thakur (2) and the judgment of the Board was delivered by Lord Sumner. Now the words of Art. 116 are as follows:—"For compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered." In Tricomdas' case (2) the sum of money in issue was arrears of rent due under a registered lease, and the argument that was put forward and which the Board refused to accept was that Art. 110 of the Act specifically provided a period of limitation for arrears of rent and, that being so, it was immaterial whether the rent was due under a registered or an unregistered lease. The Board rejected that argument on the ground that the words of Art. 116 were not incapable of covering a case of rent due and that a long cursus curiæ of Indian decisions and the decisions of the Board had construed every possible section that they could with a view to giving favour to registered instruments and prolonging the period of limitation. That appears to us to be a method of approaching the case which is binding on us, and I think we have to say in the case of a debt such as the debt created between Company and share-holder on the declaration of a dividend that, if it is a contract at all, the remedy sought is aptly described as compensation for the breach of a contract, express or implied.

The matter does not rest there, however, because a very learned argument has been put forward before us, the effect of which is to show that although the declaration of a dividend creates a debt, yet the relation between share-holder and Company is not a relationship which could be described as a contractual one. On that point there has been a very great conflict of opinion and divergent views in the English and Irish Courts. I am not a company lawyer and I do not propose to do more than refer very briefly to the main views that have been expressed. The whole matter is summed up in the judgment of Astbury, J., in the case of Hickman v. Kent or Romney Marsh Sheepbreeders' Association (6) where he comes to the conclusion that although the articles cannot be held to constitute a contract between the Company of the one part and an outsider in his capacity of outsider of the other part, yet as between share-holder and share-holder and company, a contract is in fact constituted. There were many weighty expressions of opinions to the contrary. We have come to the conclusion that the safest course to adopt here is to take the view that the declaration creates a debt. Byrne, J., in In re Artisan's Land and Mortgage Corporation (7) after reviewing the very weighty pronouncements in Irish cases which he refers to, holds that it not merely creates a debt but by virtue of the share certificates and the memorandum of articles it creates a specialty debt. Although the Irish Courts, not, I think, Byrne, J., do use language which seems to imply that it is not merely a specialty debt but it is a debt arising out of a specialty contract, we are not really bound to go so far as that. We think that this debt created by the declaration, whether in certain circumstances and for certain purposes it might be regarded as a contract, is not a contract such as was contemplated and envisaged by Art. 115 of the Limitation Act. It is difficult enough to regard that form of words as applicable to a claim for rent. It seems to me clumsy beyond anything that is legitimate to allow the claim of a share-holder for his dividend to be regarded as aptly described by "compensation for breach of contract, express or implied." In our opinion, it is merely a claim for debt and as, unfortunately, the Limitation Act does not contain a section applicable to debts, all we can do is to fall back on the omnibus Art. 120 and treat this case as one for which no Article specifically applicable is prescribed under the Schedule.

There is only one other matter that we have to deal with which, in essence, was the start of this whole business. We were referred to a decision of this Court reported as Ripon Press & Sugar Mills Co., Ltd, v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) a decision of Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Iyer, J., That was a suit for dividend and it was decided that the suit fell within Art. 116. Article 116 of course speaks of registered contracts and there is no doubt that the learned Judges held not merely that registration of a contract, in the ordinary sense was covered by the Article, but the deposit of the memorandum and articles of association of a limited Company with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under the direction of the Act. That seems to us to be putting an intolerable strain upon the word "registered" and one which the draftsman of this Statute could not possibly be thought to have contemplated. Of course the decision amounts to this, and we find ourselves unfortunately in disagreement with it even on the minor point, that the relation constituted between the share-holder and the company is a contractual relation. We do not even go so far as that, as we wish to limit ourselves carefully, if 'contractual' is taken to mean, contractual in the sense contemplated by Arts. 115 and 116 of the Limitation Act. We, therefore, are of opinion that Ripon Press & Sugar Mills Co., Ltd, v. Nama Venkatarama Chetty (1) is incorrectly decided and we think we ought to say so.

The reply to the question submitted to us is that in our opinion Art. 120 is the Article that applies.

Krishnan, J.—I agree.

Beasley, J.—I agree.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL NO. 221 OF 1924.

FIRM MUL CHAND-MURARI LAL SITUATE AT FAZILKA, DISTRICT FEROZEPORE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 90 Letters Patent (Lah.), cl. 10—Execution of decree—Sale, application to set aside, dismissal of —Appeal, second, whether lies—Revision—Appeal under Letters Patent, whether competent.

An application to set aside an auction-sale was dismissed as barred by time. In appeal the District Judge held that as the necessary deposit under O. XXI, r. 84 (1) of the C. P. C., had not yet been made the sale was not complete and the application was within time. He remanded the case to the first Court for a fresh decision. In revision a Single Judge of the High Court set aside the order of the District Judge and restored that of the first Court dismissing the application. The judgment-debtor filed an appeal against the order of the Single Judge under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent and contended that the order of the first Court was passed under s. 47, C. P. C., and was, therefore, a decree and consequently open to second appeal, and that the order of the Single Judge must be treated as having been passed in a second appeal and was appealable under the Letters Patent:

Held, (1) that the order of the first Court was passed under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C., and was not open to second appeal;

(2) that the order of the Single Judge was passed in revision and was not open to appeal under the Letters Patent.

Letters Patent Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice LeRossignol, in Civil Revision Case No. 627 of 1923, dated the 27th February 1924.

Lala Jaggan Nath Aggarwal, for the Appellant.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda and Lala Anant Ram Khosla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In execution of a decree land belonging to the judgment-debtor was sold by auction by the Tahsildar on the 21st March 1923 and was purchased by the decree-holder, who had obtained permission to bid. Objections to the sale were lodged on the 21st April 1923, but the Subordinate Judge dismissed them as time-barred and confirmed the sale. On appeal the Additional Judge held that as a deposit of Rs 25 per cent. of the purchase-money had not been made, as required by O. XXI, r. 84 (1) of the C. P. C., the sale was not complete on the 21st March 1923, and the judgment-debtor's application for having the sale set aside was, therefore, within time, and he set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and remanded the case for a fresh decision. The decree-holder applied to this Court for revision of the order of the Additional Judge, and the application was accepted by a Judge in Chambers and the order of the Subordinate Judge restored.

The judgment-debtor has preferred an appeal under the Letters Patent, and it is contended on his behalf, that there was no complete sale, that the Subordinate Judge's order was consequently not one passed under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C., but was one under s. 47 and amounted to a decree, and that, therefore, a second appeal lay to this Court and the order of the Judge in Chambers should be treated as one passed in a second appeal and is appealable under the Letters Patent.

It is pointed out that the only bidder at the sale was the decree-holder, and that the Tahsildar in his report to the Court did not say whether he accepted the decree-holder's bid; but we think it is clear enough that he did accept the bid even though he did not say so in express words. With regard to the omission to make the deposit of 25 per cent. of the purchase-money, the Court is empowered by O. XXI, r. 84 (2), as observed in the order of the learned Judge in Chambers, to dispense with the requirements of sub-r. (1) regarding the payment of the deposit when the decree-holder is the purchaser and is entitled to set off the purchase-money, so that we do not think that the omission to make the deposit renders the sale incomplete. Moreover, it was not urged in the Executing Court that the sale was not complete on account of that omission.

We are clearly of opinion that the order of the Subordinate Judge was one passed under O. XXI, r. 90, of the C. P. C., and was not a decree, and that, therefore, no second appeal lay to this Court. The order of the learned Judge in Chambers was an order passed on an application for revision and no appeal lies from it under the Letters Patent. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Nellore, dated the 26th January 1925, in E. P. No. 44 of 1924, in O. S. No. 2 of 1923.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. V. Venkataramier, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs who are respondents Nos. 1 and 2 herein arrested the 2nd defendant, the 3rd respondent herein, in execution of a money-decree. The appellant executed a security bond on 11th December 1923 undertaking to produce and hand over the 2nd defendant whenever the Court passed an order to produce him. The bond also provided that in default of the surety producing the second defendant and handing him over to the Court, the amount of decree interest, and costs shall be recovered by the plaintiffs from the surety personally. On the execution of the bond, the second defendant was released from arrest. The plaintiffs applied to the lower Court for an order that the surety be directed to produce the second defendant and in default of producing him, the decree amount be realised from him. The appellant contended that the decree of the plaintiffs against the second defendant had been satisfied and that no execution could issue against him in execution of a decree already satisfied. The District Judge overruled the objection of the appellant and directed him to produce the second defendant on or before a certain date and on his failure to do so that execution should issue against him. The appellant has preferred this civil miscellaneous appeal.

Two points arise for consideration in this case one of fact and the other of law.

The first point is whether the decree has been satisfied. Mr. Somayya for the appellant relies very strongly upon Ex. II which is the defendant's ledger, in the account book of plaintiffs. From the entries in the ledger, it is found that a nil balance is struck. And Mr. Somayya's contention is that the decree debt has been wiped off by payment. There are entries on both sides of the ledger and the balance is zero. In Ex. III, the ledger of the 3rd defendant, there is a debit entry of Rs. 5,000. It is argued for the appellant that the 3rd defendant paid Rs. 5,000 in discharge of the decree-debt and thereby the decree-debt has been fully satisfied.

Exhibit I is the day-book and in it there is an entry that the decree in O. S. No. 2 of 1923 has been transferred to Adapala Varada Reddi for Rs. 5,000 and a promissory note for the sum of Rs. 5,000 has been obtained this day from him.

Mr. T. V. Venkataramier for the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 contends that there was no transfer of the decree in favour of Adapala Varada Reddi, the 3rd defendant in the case, but there was only an agreement to transfer the decree to him. Exhibit A, pro-note executed by Varada Reddi in favour of the plaintiffs on 10th January 1924 contains a recital but Varada Reddi had arranged to take a transfer of the decree-debt for the plaintiffs. The entry in the day-book is of the same date as that of the pro-note. The 3rd defendant was only a surety for defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and in the razinama decree, he is made liable only for 2/5ths of the decree amount in case the plaintiffs were unable to realise the decree-amount from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It is unlikely that when he was made liable only for 2/5ths of the amount in case the plaintiffs were unable to obtain satisfaction from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 that he would discharge the whole of the decree amount by undertaking to pay Rs. 5,000. There is no evidence that the decree has been transferred to the 3rd defendant. The appellant's contention is, that the decree has been transferred should be taken to mean that the decree was transferred on the 10th January 1924. Taking the entry alone, in Ex. A, it cannot be said that the decree has been transferred to the 3rd defendant. The onus is upon the appellant to show that the plaintiffs have transferred the decree and that they could not apply for execution. On a consideration of the evidence we have no hesitation in holding that the decree was not transferred to nor was any amount paid towards the decree by the 3rd defendant. The appellant has not shown that the decree has been satisfied by any amount being paid by the 3rd defendant Varada Reddi.

The next question is granting for argument's sake, that the decree amount was paid by the 3rd defendant can the appellant take advantage of the payment, when the payment has not been certified by the Court as required by O. XXI, r. 2. The appellant's argument is that the surety is not a party to the decree and he could not apply to the Court to enter up satisfaction of a decree which has been satisfied by payment by the 3rd defendant. The surety is not a party to the decree but becomes a party only for a limited purpose that is for purpose of appeal when an order is made against him under s. 145, C. P. C. vide Ramanathan Pillai v. Doraiswami Ayyengar (1). The fact that he is not a party to the decree is no ground for getting round a definite provision of law under O. XXI, r. 2, cl. (3).

Mr. Somayya strongly urges that the said provision is contained in processual law and should not be held to override positive law and under the law of contract a surety is not bound to pay when the debt which he undertook to pay in case of default of the principal debtor has been paid off or adjusted.

Whatever may be the policy of the Legislature in enacting cl. (3), the Court is bound to give effect to it. Where the decree is adjusted wholly or in part the judgment-debtor should apply within three months to the Court and that such adjustment or payment should be recorded as certified and if he fails to do so, he cannot plead adjustment or payment in answer to the execution of the decree against him. Considerable reliance is placed by Mr.

Somayya on the interpretation of O. XXI, r. 16 by the Madras High Court that the Executing Court has a discretion to refuse execution at the instance of a transferee of a decree.

In Rama Aiyen v. Sreenivasa Pattar (2) the judgment-debtor transferred some of his immoveable properties to a person in consideration of his paying the judgment-debt to the original decree-holder. The vendee without paying the decree-holder the amount of the decree got a transfer of the decree to himself and, as assignee, applied for execution. It was held that he was not entitled to execute the decree when he himself inspite of his undertaking to discharge the decree had fraudulently obtained a transfer of the decree from the decree-holder. Mr. Justice Subramania Aiyar observed at page 232*, with regard to s. 258 of the old Code corresponding to O. XXI, r. 2 of the present Code "The last paragraph prohibits judgment-debtors, who omit to apply under the second paragraph or having applied fail to establish their case, from relying in execution proceedings upon any payment, satisfaction or adjustment not duly certified. Manifestly, therefore, the enquiry under the said paragraph can take place only between persons standing in the relation of judgment-debtor and judgment-creditor."

The surety not being a party to the decree could not apply under O. XXI, r. 2. I am unable to accept the argument that a surety though he is not a party to the decree could not ask the Court to hold an enquiry as to the decree being satisfied by payment or adjustment provided the application is made within the time allowed by the law. Though he has no locus standi to insist upon an enquiry he could apply to the Court to hold an enquiry inasmuch as he has an interest in showing that the decree has been satisfied. In Ponnusawmi Nadar v. Letchmanan Chettiar (3) there was a difference of opinion between Mr. Justice Adbur Rahim and Mr. Justice Sundara Iyer as regards the question whether the prohibition regarding uncertified adjustment will or will not apply while the adjustment is made by a third party.

In Bayyana Ramayya v. Nidamarthi Krishnamurthi (4) it was held that "O. XXI, r. 2 did not disentitle a judgment-debtor from proving facts that a transferee of a decree applying for execution was merely a benamidar for another judgment-debtor."

These cases have no application to the present question and they do not throw any light upon the point raised in this case. The real question is whether a surety can plead adjustment or the discharge of a decree when the judgment-debtor himself could not successfully put forward that plea. In this case the payment or adjustment was not certified by the Court as required by O. XXI, r. 2 and, therefore, execution could proceed against the second defendant.

When there is an executable decree against the second defendant, can it be reasonably contended that so far as the surety is concerned there is no executable decree? The Court cannot recognise any adjustment or payment out of Court unless certified as is required by law and in the absence of such certificate, a decree-holder, however, fraudulent his conduct may be is entitled in law to execute his decree against the judgment-debtor, and so long as he is entitled to execute the decree against the judgment debtor, a surety, who undertakes to pay the decree amount, cannot plead that there is no decree against the judgment-debtor and, therefore, he is released from liability under the bond. Section 145 says "Where any person has become liable surety...the decree or order may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable". On the failure of the surety to carry out the terms of the bond he makes himself liable for the amount of the decree or for such amount as he has undertaken to pay.

It is next suggested that the original decree is not executed against the surety but a second decree passed on his failure to carry out his undertaking and, therefore, that decree is different from the original decree. No second decree is passed against the surety. The order under s. 145 is passed when he makes himself liable by failing to carry out the terms of the bond to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable. The decree that is executed against him is the decree passed in the suit and, therefore, it cannot be said that a second decree is passed against him.

The contention of Mr. Somayya for the appellant that uncertified adjustment or payment could be pleaded by the surety, was specifically negatived in a recent case decided by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Onkarmal Agarwala v. Nritya Gopal Chaki (5). The learned Judges observe at page 886 "The surety is bound so long as the judgment-debtor is bound. The judgment-debtor is bound so long as any payments which he may have made are not certified to the Court."

In the result we have no hesitation in holding that so long as there is an executable decree against the judgment-debtor the surety is not relieved from his liability to pay the decree amount under the terms of the security bond executed by him.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Custom—Partition—Widow's right to claim partition Onus of proof.

A widow of a deceased co-sharer in a joint holding has a statutory right to demand partition of her share and the burden of proving that she cannot claim partition of her share is upon the person denying her such right.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 30th November 1918.

Messrs. Badri Das and Balwant Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the dispute out of which the present appeal arises are given in our judgment of to-day in Civil Appeal No. 386 of 1919. This is an appeal from the lower Court's order giving the plaintiffs Musammat Murad Bibi and her daughter Musammat Fatima a declaratory decree to the effect that they are entitled to partition of their share of the joint property. Mr. Ghulam Mohi-ud-din contended, in the first place, that the onus was wrongly placed on his client to prove that the widow was not entitled to partition. He referred to Art. 15 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law which states that, where a widow is permitted to succeed to her husband's share in a joint estate, she cannot ordinarily claim partition so as to constitute herself sole owner, though she may at times obtain separation of the share to secure her a full participation of the profits. The earlier rulings of the Chief Court were no doubt to the general effect that a widow is not ordinarily entitled to claim partition, but in Bhag Bhari v. Wazir Khan (1) a Division Bench held that a widow of a deceased co-sharer in a joint holding has a statutory right to demand partition and although a suit for a declaration that she is not so entitled is competent in a Civil Court, the plaintiff can only succeed by proving a custom by which widows are restrained from claiming partition, and no consideration of desirability or undesirability should have any weight with the Court. This decision was arrived at after a consideration of the previous decisions of the Chief Court which are quoted at page 268* of the report. In Abdul Qadir v. Rabia (2) a different view was taken, but we are not bound by that decision. Subsequent to Bhag Bhari v. Wazir Khan (1) there is no reported case of the Chief Court or of this Court to the effect that the onus in such a case is upon the widow to prove that she has a right to a separate partition of her share. In the case of Parshotam v. Raj Devi (3) a Division Bench of the Chief Court did take the view that the onus was on the widow, but that is not a reported case and, therefore, not of the same authority as Bhag Bhari v. Wazir Khan (1). On the other hand, in Shadi v. Jeoni (4) it was held that as the Riwaj-i-am of the Jullundur District to which the parties belong is in favour of a widow's right to claim partition of her husband's share in a joint estate the onus of proving the negative was on the plaintiff-collateral who alleged it. This decision was based on the same Riwaj-i-am as has been exhibited in the present case, and, therefore, is strongly in favour of the plaintiffs' right to claim partition.

Again, in Ghansham v. Ramji Lal (5), it was held that an entry in the Riwaj-i-am of the Gurgaon District favouring the widow's right of partition threw the onus that such a right did not exist upon the plaintiff who disputed the widow's right to obtain partition. Under these circumstances we see no reason for not following the decision in Bhag Bhari v. Wazir Khan (1) which throws the onus upon the person denying the widow's right to claim partition. Copies of certain decisions by the Revenue Courts and by the Chief Court prior to Bhag Bhari v. Wazir Khan (1) have been cited on behalf of the defendants, but we agree with the lower Court for the reasons given in its judgment at pages 128-129 of paper-book A that they do not in any way help the defendant to discharge the onus which lay heavily upon him.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal but for the reasons given in our judgment in Civil Appeal No. 386 of 1919, we leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court. The plaintiffs' appeal asking for their costs in the lower Court is also hereby dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—Original Suit No. 320 of 1918 was a suit brought by the 1st respondent upon a mortgage. The suit was decreed and the plaintiff purchased some of the suit property in Court auction. The 2nd defendant in the suit thereupon filed an application to set aside delivery of the items purchased on the ground that he had a paramount title which prevailed over the title of the mortgagor in consequence of more than 16 years' possession after the property had been surrendered to him by the owner. The District Munsif found in favour of the petitioner and directed release of the property. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge by the decree-holder-purchaser, the District Munsif's order was set aside and the petition was dismissed. It is now contended that no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the appellant, though made a party to the suit, was exonerated as he set up a title paramount to that of the mortgagor and consequently the decree-holder's remedy, if any, against the District Munsif's judgment was to bring a suit to set aside the order. The Subordinate Judge held that he could dispose of the appeal against the order under s. 47 as the claim petition was preferred by a party to the suit and he thought that the latest decision in Medisetti Venkatasami v. Kunchalla Chidambaram (1) was in favour of this view. Reliance is now placed upon Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (2). The learned Judges who decided that case were inclined to the view that if a party was exonerated from a suit on the ground of misjoinder he would not remain a party to the suit for the purpose of s. 47 and that it was immaterial whether his name was actually removed from the record in pursuance of the order exonerating him. In Medisetti Venkatasami v. Kunchalla Chidambaram (1) Sadasiva Iyer, J., and Phillips, J., took the view that the plain words of the Code were intended to give legal effect to the decision of the Full Bench in Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (3) and to overrule the previous decisions which had decided that a defendant whose name appears in the decree without being struck off was not a party to the suit, if he had been exonerated by the decree passed in the suit. In Vaddali Sannamma v. Kaduganti Radhabhayi (4) this case is quoted in the foot-note and Abdur Rahim, J., who was one of the referring Judges, expressed a doubt as to the correctness of Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (2) and thought it requires to be overruled, as it did not give sufficient effect to the plain language of the section. The decision of the Full Bench did not actually overrule Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (2) as it was not necessary to do so in order to answer the questions referred to the Full Bench. The opinion of the Full Bench was that if a person had been properly impleaded as a defendant in a suit and if the plaintiff abandoned his claim against him and the suit was dismissed as against him such a person would be still "a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed" within the Explanation to s. 47 of the C. P. C. In Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (2) the previous decision in Venkatapathi Naidu v. Subraya Mudali (5) was quoted with approval. This is a judgment of a Single Judge given before the amendment of the Code. With due respect I am unable to follow the learned Judge when he says that a party against whom a claim has been abandoned is clearly not a party to the suit. The mere exoneration of a party does not have the result of making him cease to be a party. It may mean only that the plaintiff does not want a decree against him as was the case in Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (3). In my opinion the ground upon which a party is exonerated can never determine whether he continues to be a party to the suit or ceases to be a party, but it will depend entirely upon whether his name has been struck off from or retained on the record. In Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (2) the learned Judges were evidently impressed with the anomaly that might arise out of the Court having to decide in execution proceedings questions which it had refused to determine in the suit. That might be the consequence of exonerating a person who had a superior title to the principal defendant; but the obvious remedy would be for the Court to adopt the procedure provided in s. 47 of treating the petition in execution as a suit and trying it in the regular manner if it had not already taken the simpler course of removing the party from the record under O. I, r. 10 (2) at an earlier stage. As the appellant in the present case was a party to the suit and the final decree merely states that he is exonerated without removing his name from the record, I think that his remedy lay only by a petition under s. 47, which was the course he adopted, and as the Subordinate Judge has decided against the claim on a question of fact, no second appeal will lie. The appeal is dismissed with costs of the respondent. We direct each party to bear his own costs in the Courts below.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree. In Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (3) it was decided that the defendant, in whose favour a suit is dismissed, he being exonerated from the suit, must be regarded as a party to the suit within the meaning of s. 244 of the old Code. The Explanation to s. 47 of the present Code, viz., "for the purpose of this section, a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, are parties to the suit", gives effect to this decision; an appeal, therefore, clearly lies in the present case. The question raised before us was, no doubt, left open in the Full Bench decision reported as Vaddali Sannamma v. Kaduyanti Radhabhay (4). But it appears to me that the opinion of the learned Chief Justice is to the effect that, in cases of this description, unless a party's name has been struck out and removed from the records he would remains "a party to the suit". That has not been done in this case and, therefore, though the 2nd defendant (appellant) has been exonerated in the judgment, in my opinion, he must still be regarded as a party to the suit within the meaning of s. 47, C. P. C.

RESPONDENTS.

Divorce—Misconduct, proof of—Burden of proof—Withdrawal of charge—Condonation.

In a proceeding for dissolution of marriage, the burden of proving the respondent's misconduct lies heavily upon the petitioner. In such a proceeding the duty of the petitioner is to show that on or between the dates specified in the petition, the respondent was guilty of misconduct with the co-respondent, and that must be a matter of proof upon evidence which, though it may not be direct, must at all events be so clear and cogent, both as to inclination, opportunity and conduct as to lead to the inevitable inference that the offence has been committed. [p. 528, col. 2; p. 529, col. 2; p. 530, col. 1.]

A withdrawal of a charge of adultery amounts in law to a condonation of such offence, if any, committed prior to the date of the withdrawal. [p. 528, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Robert Watson, applies to the Court for the dissolution of his marriage with his wife, Frances Watson, on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent Samuel Mac Farlane. The respondent has filed an answer denying the charge.

The co-respondent has not appeared.

The admitted facts of the case are that the petitioner and the respondent were married on the 18th July 1914 according to Christian rites and forms at the "Sacred Heart of Jesus" Church at Dhurrumtollah Street in Calcutta. They lived together after the marriage and had issue, a son, born on the 25th January 1915.

About the end of 1920 difficulties arose between husband and wife and matters went so far that the petitioner brought a criminal charge against the present co-respondent in the Police Court. A charge was framed by the Magistrate but before the case came to trial it is said that friends of the parties intervened and their differences were adjusted. The Magistrate's order dated 19th January 1921 records: "Complainant does not wish to proceed with the case as all differences have been settled. Complainant is fully satisfied with the explanation given by his wife. Accused undertakes not to interfere with the complainant and his wife in the future."

Strictly speaking, this evidence is only relevant in the present suit as showing that the petitioner at one time had reason to suspect the co-respondent's relations with his wife but as it is admitted that subsequent to the withdrawal of the case, husband and wife again lived together for about a year, any misconduct which may have been charged at the time of the Police case was evidently condoned by the reconciliation.

On 21st January 1922 according to the petitioner and a month later, according to the respondent, a second rupture took place. The petitioner says that his wife left him in order to be free to see the co-respondent. The respondent says that she was driven out of the house by the violence, abuse and drunken habits of her husband.

The petitioner charges that the respondent while living in Woodburn Court committed adultery with the co-respondent between 14th May 1922 and 7th June 1922.

The present suit was filed on 1st August 1922 but owing to causes over which apparently the parties had no control it did not come up for hearing although on the board on several occasions, till to-day.

It is plain upon the pleadings that the burden of proving the respondents' misconduct is heavily upon the petitioner. As I have already said the withdrawal of the previous charge amounts in law to a condonation of such offence if committed prior to that date. The duty of the petitioner here is to show that on or between the dates specified in the petition, the respondent was guilty of misconduct with the co-respondent and that must be a matter of proof upon evidence which though it may not be direct must at all events be of such a character as would lead the Court to the conclusion that no other inference than that of misconduct can be derived from it.

The petitioner in the box very frankly stated that he himself had no personal knowledge of any misconduct on the part of the respondent; and his information came from two persons whom I understood him to describe as private detectives. The evidence of these two persons, therefore, is, for the petitioner's purpose, of the utmost importance and it is necessary when the interests at stake are so high to scrutinise their statements closely.

The first of them is a man named Badri Singh. He was, according to his statement, formerly a durwan. When he came to Calcutta he had no employment. His evidence is that he first came into touch with the petitioner through the petitioner's durwan, a man who comes from the same village as himself. He says that the durwan told him that Watson Saheb wanted a man for some work or other and upon this he called upon Watson who told him that he would engage him to follow the Memsaheb, meaning Mrs. Watson, and report to him daily what he saw and for his services he was to get Rs. 25 a month. His position is not that of the "private detective" spoken of by the petitioner. He was simply picked up by the petitioner's durwan apparently by chance and for no better reason than that the durwan wished, to do him as a co-villager a good turn and find him some employment.

Badri Singh says that he only did the work of watching for one month and received pay from the petitioner for two months, and that the petitioner told him that any further reward would depend upon the rasult of the case.

It is, I think, plain that a witness who is paid to get evidence will get evidence, and it is also plain that a witness who has not been paid in full will give such evidence as will ensure, as far as it is possible, that he will be paid in full. It would, therefore, be unsafe to rely upon a witness who has so obvious an interest in manufacturing evidence, whether it be recorded in a notebook or in the presence of an attorney, and repeating such evidence in Court when it is called for.

What he says is that on two occasions on the 21st and 22nd May he saw a man enter the respondent's room about midnight and stay there in one case to 4-30 A. M. and in the other case to 5 A. M. He says this man was the co-respondent. He does not say how the co-respondent entered the room on the first occasion, but on the second occasion he says that the co-respondent removed his shoes and climbed up to her room by a spiral staircase outside the house. It is very difficult to believe that he saw anything of the kind. A person who was going to take a risk such as the co-respondent is said to have taken would not be so obvious in his methods; he would be more likely to attract than to escape attention by climbing up a staircase whence he would be visible to every passer by. I think no reliance can be placed upon this witness.

The second witness Khan Mahammad Khan has his shop at the gate of Woodburn Court. He is not quite so fortunate as Badri Singh, because he says that so far as he has had nothing from the petitioner, though he too has his promise that he will be paid by results.

Here then is a witness who is in the unhappy position of having to give his evidence not knowing whether he is going to get anything for his trouble or not, but at the same time fully realising that if he does not help the petitioner he will get nothing at all. In this state of mind his testimony will inevitably be coloured to suit the petitioner's case, and to accept evidence of this kind would seem to me to involve a risk which no Court would be justified in taking.

The story he tells that he was awakened one night by the respondent tripping over him on her way in and that he saw co-respondent close by does not seem to me probable. He has further stated that on another night he carried her food up to her room and there found the co-respondent with her in his night apparel. This also appears to be equally fantastic. I do not see why a shop-keeper should feel it necessary to act as a table servant or why he should take the trouble to perform this service for her unasked and without expectation of a reward.

I feel bound to say that this man did not impress me as a truthful witness.

Learned Counsel for the petitioner has relied upon certain statements made by the respondent in her evidence as supporting the testimony given by these witnesses, and he has pointed to the undoubted fact that the respondent has frequently seen co-respondent both at Allahabad and in Calcutta. Assuming that the parties have been on friendly terms, it is still a long stage to travel before misconduct can be held to be proved. It is not to be expected that in cases of this kind direct evidence will ordinarily be available, but there ought to be such clear and cogent evidence both as to inclination, opportunity and conduct as to lead to the inevitable inference that the offence has been committed. After giving my best attention to the evidence in the case, I feel bound to say that I do not think the petitioner has succeeded in establishing his case.

The result, therefore, is that the petition is dismissed with costs on scale No. 2. So far as the co-respondent is concerned, the petition is dismissed without costs.

Sodhi KISHEN SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

Sodhi MOTI SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33—Death of one of several appellants—Legal representative not brought on record—Partial abatement—Decision in favour of all.

Where an appeal has partially abated in consequence of the death of one of the appellants without his legal representatives being brought on the record, it is competent to the Court to accept the appeal in favour of all the appellants including the legal representatives of the deceased appellants not brought on the record. [p. 530, col. 2.]

Mr. Gullu Ram and Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Badri Dass, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was by Sodhi Moti Singh for possession of certain land and house which he alleged had been mortgaged to his father Sodhi Narendra Singh by Sodhi Kishen Singh defendant. Sodhi Kishan Singh pleaded that the plaintiff was not his father's heir that he had been disinherited and that Sodhi Narendra Singh's all self-acquired property including the property in suit had been bequeathed to one Wazir Singh. Wazir Singh was then impleaded as a defendant and issues were struck of which we are concerned with the first two (1) did the plaintiff's father voluntarily and in full senses execute the registered Will dated 8th April 1908, whereby he disinherited the plaintiff from all self-acquired property which was thereby bequeathed to defendant No. 2 and (2) if so, did the plaintiff's father acquire the mortgage rights in suit from the income of the ancestral estate and, therefore, the same should be considered to be ancestral property.

When Sodhi Narendra Singh died, his son Sodhi Moti Singh took possession of all his property and subsequently Wazir Singh instituted a Suit (No. 33 of 1915) for possession of the self-acquired property left to him by the Will of the 8th April 1908. That suit was pending at the same time as the one with which we are dealing and all the parties to the present suit agreed that they would not produce any evidence on the above issues and that the questions would be decided on the evidence given in Wazir Singh's suit for possession. Both suits were before the same learned Sub-Judge and he decided the suit in which Wazir Singh was the plaintiff against him with the result that the present suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiff Moti Singh.

The defendants have appealed that Sodhi Kishen Singh died during the pendency of the appeal on the 12th August 1922 and his appeal has abated, since the application to substitute his legal representatives was made some 15 days after the expiry of limitation. No application for setting aside the abatement has been presented to us.

Wazir Singh's appeal remains for disposal and together with it has come before us his appeal in the other suit (No. 1439 of 1920) Wazir Singh v. Sodhi Moti Singh (1). In that appeal we have reversed the decision of the Trial Court and have held that the Will in favour of Wazir Singh bequeathing property including the mortgagee rights now in question to Wazir Singh was valid. It has been conceded that the decision in that appeal settles the fate of the present appeal in favour of Wazir Singh. Although Kishen Singh's appeal has abated we have decided to exercise our powers under O. XLI, r. 33 and to dismiss the suit against all the defendants. We accept the appeal and order that the suit be dismissed.

The plaintiff-respondent must pay the costs of Wazir Singh in this Court. Kishen Singh's representatives are not appellants and hence they must pay their own costs in the lower Court. The plaintiff-respondent also must pay his own costs there. It has been urged before us that the plaintiff should not be called upon to pay Wazir Singh's costs in the lower Court, because he did not make Wazir Singh a defendant and because Wazir Singh did little or nothing to defend this particular suit and for a time proceedings were ex parte against him. In our view Wazir Singh was a necessary party who was properly joined as such and ordinarily he was entitled to have his costs from the unsuccessful plaintiff. The Trial Court's decree, however, has awarded the defendants the large sum of Rs. 424 as Counsel's fee. We do not consider that Wazir Singh has earned this in the present suit, since practically all the proceedings were taken in the other suit. We direct that the plaintiff shall pay the costs of Wazir Singh in the Trial Court, but that the sum recoverable as Counsel's fee shall be Rs. 82 only.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 202 OF 1924.

U TUN GYWE—APPELLANT
KO KO GYI—RESPONDENT.

*Buddhist Law, Burmese—Inheritance—*Orasa son—Minor, whether can claim rights of orasa son—Death of husband—Widow, rights of—Alienation by widow.

The whole doctrine of the orasa son under the Burmese Buddhist Law is based on the eldest son being in a position to take his father's place as head of the household in the event of his father's death. The eldest son, therefore, can on the death of his father claim one-fourth share in his property from his mother only if he has attained the full status of an orasa son at the time of his father's death. A minor son cannot be regarded as having attained the full status of orasa and cannot, therefore, claim one-fourth share of the estate on his father's death. In such a case the widow who owned half of the joint property in her husband's lifetime, inherits his half when he dies and thus becomes possessed of the whole and is competent to alienate the whole of it. [p. 531, col. 2; p. 532, col. 1.]

Mr. Thu Gywe, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The District Court has held on the authority of Arunachellam Chetty v. Maung San Ngwe (1) that the mortgage by the widow of estate property is not valid to the extent of the one-fourth share in which the orasa son has a vested interest. It is contended by Mr. Tha Gywe on appeal that as the so-called orasa son was a minor at the time of his father's death, he had not attained the full status of orasa, not being competent to take his father's place, as head of the family, and that he had not, therefore, a vested interest in one-fourth of the estate. The fact of the minority of the eldest son was not considered as an influencing factor by the First Appellate Court. It is pointed out that the passage of the judgment on page 178* implies that unless the eldest son is of age he would not be entitled to one-fourth share at the time of his father's death. It was, therefore, observed that "it has not yet been decided that Maung San Ngwe is the orasa son or that if he is, he was at the time of his father's death of an age to be entitled to a one-fourth share." This observation was made after considering rr. 11 and 5 of Book X of the Manugye, which, as Carr, J., pointed out, are conflicting and cannot be relied on safely to any great extent. The judgment relied is certainly not an authority for a minor son being entitled qua orasa to one-fourth share on his father's death.

In Nga E v. Nga Aung Thein (2) it was held by the learned Judicial Commissioner that the eldest son being a minor, the right to claim one-fourth did not accrue, and the whole estate was the property of the widow. I am not aware that this ruling has been dissented from or overruled and if followed it is decisive. The doctrine of the orasa was examined and expounded at length by the Judicial Commissioner, Lower Burma, in MaYa v. Maung Po Thin (3) where it was laid down after discussion of the Dhammathats that the eldest son, if competent, is the representative of his father and in that capacity is entitled to one-fourth of the inheritance on the death of his father. By "competent" is clearly implied of an age to take his father's place. At the time of his father's death, Ko Ko Gyi was only 11 years old and obviously not competent to take his father's place as head of the household. As I understand it, the whole doctrine of the orasa son is based on his being in a position to take his father's place as head of the household in the event of his father's death. For the respondent, Mr. S. Mukerjee relies on the case of Maung Shwe Ywet v. Maung Tun

Shein (4) which deals with the right of the eldest son to claim one-fourth share on his father's re-marriage. It is not necessary to question the correctness of the ruling in that case here, because the orasa in that case was 19, when his mother died. The rights of a Buddhist widow as to disposal of the joint property of the marriage were laid down by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma in Ma Sein Ton v. Ma Son (5). It was there laid down by Twomey, J., (at page 513*) that the real principle seems to be that the widow, who owned half of the joint property in her husband's lifetime, inherits his half, when he dies, and having thus become possessed of the whole, can do as she likes with it subject to the claims of the eldest son and the eldest daughter. In the next paragraph it was clearly pointed out that it must be noted that the eldest son can claim one-fourth share from his mother only, if he has attained a full status of orasa at the time of his father's death. In the same case Parlett, J., substituted for the "full status of orasa" the words "if the eldest son or daughter is grown up." I have no hesitation, therefore, in holding that a minor son has not attained the full status of orasa and cannot claim a one-fourth share of the estate on his father's death. Ko Ko Gyi being a minor his mother had, it follows, the right to mortgage the whole estate. I set aside the decree of the District Court and restore the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court dismissing the suit throughout with costs.

Held, that appellant's conduct was calculated to obstruct and interfere with the due course of justice and the due administration of the law and that the appellant was, therefore, guilty of contempt of Court. [p. 533, col. 1.]

Where proceedings in a Magistrate's Court would be quite sufficient to meet the requirements of a case, it is not desirable to invoke the special jurisdiction inherent in the High Court by way of proceedings for contempt of Court. [p. 534, col. 1.]

Where, however, a Judge of the High Court has exercised his discretion and taken action by way of proceedings in contempt and the matter has been fully investigated and a definite conclusion has been arrived at, the Court will not, on the Appellate Side, interfere with the exercise of such discretion where the conclusion arrived at by the Judge on the merits is not challenged. JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by Vernon Milward Bason against a judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose which was delivered on the 22nd of May 1925*.

It appears that the appellant had instituted a suit against certain defendants for damages for breach of an agreement. The suit was dismissed with costs. The defendants' bill of costs was taxed and an allocature was issued on the 2nd of May 1925. It was served on the appellant's attorneys on the 5th of May; and, on the 9th of May a notice was issued under O. XXI, r. 37, C. P. C. which runs as follows: "Notwithstanding anything in these rules, where an application is for the execution of a decree for the payment of money by the arrest and detention in the civil prison of a judgment-debtor who is liable to be arrested in pursuance of the application, the Court may, instead of issuing a warrant for his arrest, issue a notice calling upon him to appear before the Court on a day to be specified in the notice and show cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison." It was necessary to serve that notice on the appellant and, one Ashit Kumar Pal, who was a clerk in the service of Messrs. Orr Dignam & Co., was entrusted with the duty of effecting the service. He went to the place where the appellant resided in Moira Street. What took place on that occasion has been described by the learned Judge in his judgment.

An application was made to the learned Judge for an order committing the appellant to jail in respect of an alleged contempt of Court. The defendants were examined verbally and cross-examined. We were informed that the hearing occupied two days. The learned Judge accepted the account of the occurrence given by Ashit Kumar Pal and rejected the account given by the appellant.

In this Court the learned Advocate, who appeared for the appellant, has not challenged the finding of the learned Judge upon the facts of the case. The learned Judge said as follows: "He (i. e. the clerk,) informed Bason of the purpose for which he had called and made over to him both the original notice under O. XXI, r. 37 (1), C. P. C. and a copy. (It may be noted in passing that Ashit in his affidavit states that he made over the original notice only to Bason). Bason read the notice and flung the papers on the floor. Ashit thereupon picked up the papers from the floor and showed to Bason the original notice bearing the seal of this Court and informed him that if he refused to accept service he would affix a copy on the outer door. Bason thereupon became very angry and called Ashit Kumar Pal a 'damned swine' and caught him by the throat and dragged him and pushed him towards the door, so that he nearly fell down. Ashit states that thereafter he affixed a copy of the said notice on the front door of the room."

Those being the facts the learned Advocate has argued in the first place that no contempt of Court was committed by the appellant.

I am not able to accept that argument.

The learned Advocate cited the case of In the matter of a special reference from the Bahama Islands (1) and I agree that the question is whether, what the appellant did was calculated to obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice or the due administration of the law. It is clear that it was necessary for the clerk to serve the notice upon the appellant. In the first place, it was necessary for him to try and effect personal service and if he could not effect personal service then it was necessary to affix a copy of the notice on the door of the appellant's flat.

I have no doubt whatever that what the appellant did to the clerk was calculated to obstruct or interfere with the course of justice and the due administration of the law, although, in fact, it did not prevent the clerk from affixing the copy of the notice on the door.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the first point on which the learned Advocate relied, is not a good one.

The next argument, which the learned Advocate submitted, was that even if the action of the appellant did constitute contempt of Court, the learned Judge ought not to have invoked the jurisdiction, which is inherent in this Court, and should not have called upon the appellant to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt, first because the matter was one which could have been investigated fully and dealt with adequately in a Magistrate's Court in Calcutta; and secondly because there was no necessity for the matter being immediately dealt with because, in fact, the notice had been served and the proceedings in execution would go on.

I think there is considerable weight in that argument and if I had been sitting as a Judge of first instance and had been hearing the application, I feel sure that I should have rejected it and should have held that the proper place for this matter to be investigated was the Magistrate's Court in Calcutta. I do not think this was a case, in which it was necessary to invoke the special jurisdiction which is inherent in this Court, by way of an application for committal for contempt of Court.

But the position is this: The learned Judge had jurisdiction. He heard the case, as I have already said, for two days. Witnesses on the one side and the other were examined before him. He investigated fully the facts and he came to a distinct conclusion, which was unfavourable to the appellant.

The learned Advocate in this Court, as I have already said, has not ventured to challenge the finding of fact; and, the question, therefore, arises, would it be right for this Court in these circumstances to interfere with the discretionary order which the learned Judge made?

In my judgment it would not, in the first place because the facts have been fully in- vestigated and a distinct finding has been arrived at by the learned Judge, a decision which has not been questioned in this Court; and, secondly, because I am unable to say that the fine which was inflicted by the learned Judge upon the appellant in respect of the assault can be said to be unduly severe.

In my opinion, therefore, it is not necessary for this Court to set aside the decision of my learned brother in order that the matter might be dealt with in a Magistrate's Court in Calcutta.

At the same time I desire to make it clear that, in my opinion, in such cases as this, where proceedings in the Magistrate's Court would be quite sufficient to meet the requirements of the case, it is not desirable to invoke the special jurisdiction inherent in this Court by way of proceedings for contempt of Court.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Rankin, J.—I agree.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 68—Bulls supplied to minor, whether necessaries.

The question whether the bulls supplied to a minor are a necessity or not depends upon the particular circumstances of the case.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Nannilam, in S. C. S. No. 2 of 1923 (S. C. S. No. 302 of 1922 on the file of the Additional District Munsif's Court of Tiruvalur).

Mr. S. R. Dekshit, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. S. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It is not disputed that the plaintiff supplied the defendant with two bulls. The defendant being a minor he is liable to pay for them only if the plaintiff is able to show that these were "necessaries" to the defendant. This position is accepted by both the parties. The plaintiff has given evidence on the question. It appears to me that the learned District Munsif has not given proper consideration to the evidence on record because in his view "bulls" can never be considered "necessaries". There is no law laying down such an absolute proposition. The question in each particular case will have to be decided with regard to the evidence let in by the parties on the question. I cannot for these reasons accept the finding of the learned District Munsif as a satisfactory finding. I would, therefore, ask him to review the evidence in the light of s. 68 of the Indian Contract Act and submit a fresh finding on the question whether the sale of bulls to the defendant in this case can be considered to have been for the necessaries of the infant. These will be submitted within four weeks and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Munsif of Nannilam submitted the following

FINDINGS.—I have been directed by the High Court in its order, dated the 15th day of October 1925, in C. R. P. No. 1119 of 1923 (connected with Small Cause Suit No. 2 of 1923 of the file of this Court) to submit a finding on the following point:—

"Whether the sale of bulls to the defendant in this case can be considered to have been for the necessaries of the infant?

* * * * *

I, therefore, accept the evidence on the plaintiff's side in preference to that on the defendant's side and hold that having regard to the occupation of the defendant, as well as the price paid for the bulls, that the bulls are the "necessaries of the infant" suited to his condition in life.

My finding on the point is in the affirmative and in favour of the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif has found that the sale of the bulls was for the necessaries of the defendant. There is evidence to support this finding. Accepting this finding I set aside the decree of the lower Court and give the plaintiff a decree as prayed for with costs throughout. The decree will be against the properties of the defendant.

Settlement—Husband releasing interest in property—Widow, whether can challenge settlement.

A widow claiming title through her husband is not competent to challenge a settlement to which her husband was a party and by which he released his interest in certain property.

Messrs. A. C. Clauson and Cecil Turner, for the Appellant.

Mr. E. B. Raikes, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Phillimore.—Their Lordships have followed with care and with interest the very careful arguments put before them on both sides in this case, and in the circumstances they do not think it necessary to reserve consideration of the case in order to write an elaborate judgment. They think that the same conclusion which the Courts below have arrived at might possibly have been reached by simpler methods; but, however that may be, they see no reason to differ from the construction put upon this section in both Courts below, and therefore, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the principal appeal should be dismissed.

As to the cross-appeal there are many answers to make, but the one which is sufficient is that it is an appeal by a lady claiming as the widow of the party to the settlement sought to be impeached, and having no title except as widow of that party. Her husband deliberately put his hand to a deed which on its face did not bind others than those who were parties to it, and by it he in substance, though not exactly in those words released, all his interest under the previous deed, and for that reason if for no other the cross-appeal must be rejected.

With regard to the costs the trustees should certainly have their costs, and upon the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the costs, as between Solicitor and client, of all parties, including those of the cross-appeal, should come out of the estate in the manner provided in the judgment of the High Court of Bombay, which will be followed in this matter.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 176 OF 1923.
December 7, 1925.
Present:—Mr. Justice Wallace and Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair.

T. R. RAMASWAMI AIYANGAR—APPELLANT
THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF COIMBATORE—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

*Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 53, 54—Fraudulent preference, intention necessary to constitute—Execution of mortgage by debtor—Act of insolvency—Adjudication, order of, as insolvent—Application to set aside mortgage under s. 53—Mortgagee, whether bound by prior order—*Bona fides, proof of—Mortgage declared void—Prior genuine mortgage-debts, discharge of, by mortgagee—Rights of mortgagee.

In order to make out that an alienation by an insolvent amounts to fraudulent preference under s. 54, Provincial Insolvency Act, it must be shown that the insolvent had the dominant idea of cheating his other creditors by preferring particular creditors. [p. 536, col. 2.]

Where at the instance of a creditor, a debtor is adjudicated an insolvent on the ground that a mortgage executed by him amounts to an act of insolvency, on an application by the petitioning creditor under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to have the mortgage declared void as against the Official Receiver, it is not open to the mortgagee to attack the finding that the execution of mortgage was an act of insolvency. [p. 537, col. 1.]

To attract the operation of s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, it is not in terms necessary that the document should be to defeat or delay creditors. It is sufficient if it is a transfer not in good faith or not for valuable consideration. It is, therefore, open to the mortgagee to escape the operation of the section by showing good faith and payment of valuable consideration. [ibid.]

A document cannot be partly in good faith and partly not. [ibid.]

The general principle applicable to cases under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is this:—The assignment, as an assignment is void; but, for money genuinely paid in discharge of genuine debts, the alienee will stand in the shoes of those whom he has paid. In the case of a mortgage-debt paid off, the transfer will not operate as a mortgage at all, not even to the extent of the amount paid, but the alienee will be entitled to rank in the schedule of secured creditors to the extent of his payment. JUDGMENT.

Wallace, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the lower Court setting aside a mortgage in favour of the appellant under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act on a petition by a petitioning creditor dated 12th July 1920. This very alienation by mortgage was held to be an act of insolvency and adjudication followed thereon. The mortgage was dated 10th April 1920 and was for Rs. 6,000, and the consideration was four prior debts of a total sum of Rs. 2,500, which the mortgagee undertook to discharge, and a cash payment of Rs. 3,500. It is found by the learned Judge, and it is not disputed here, that two of the debts amounting to Rs. 1,000 were genuine and were paid by the mortgagee. The Judge holds that the Rs. 3,500 cash were never paid. He records no clear finding as to the nature of the document, viewing it at one time as a sham and at another time as a fraudulent preference. He has set it aside in toto.

The first point for consideration is whether the Rs. 3,500 cash was paid. I agree with the lower Court that the appellant, on whom the onus lay, has not proved the payment. There are various suspicious circumstances. The document recites that the money was paid in cash on the date of the document, and the evidence of the appellant's witnesses, P. Ws. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 is that the whole sum was paid at once, 35 notes of Rs. 100 each—but the appellant himself deposed that he got Rs. 3,500 by cashing a Rs. 10,000 hundi, at the Bank of P. W. No. 4. The Bank books, however, show that only Rs. 3,100 was paid to the appellant on the date of the document, and the balance not till the next day; so that, the appellant's account of how he got the full sum of Rs. 3,500 to pay the whole amount on the date of the document is not true. Further, although the document was not registered until 31st May 1920, no separate voucher was taken from the insolvent for the Rs. 3,500. Nevertheless, the appellant handed over the document to the insolvent for registration. He has claimed that it was in his own possession up till the day of registration, and filed Ex. V to support his statement. But as the District Judge has shown, a good deal of suspicion attaches to Ex. V, and it has been in fact not proved by the writer of it. Further the appellant says that he noted the payment of Rs. 3,500 in his diary and accounts. He has produced neither of these documents. Also he did not obtain any encumbrance certificate, while, as a matter of fact, there was an undischarged prior encumbrance on the property. The appellant is a banker and is used to dealing cautiously with applications of money, and usually in the case of his own Bank demands collateral security for all advances. It is very difficult to believe that he would have parted with a sum of Rs. 3,500 in such a careless fashion. I am not, therefore, prepared to differ from the learned Judge in holding that the Rs. 3,500 was not paid. It is further clear from the evidence of the appellant and from that of the insolvent that the appellant was aware that the insolvents were in financial straits. Under this mortgage the latter disposed of all their property, and along with the prior mortgage on the property, the property was mortgaged upto the hilt. I think the proper conclusion is that this Rs. 3,500 was not paid and that the object of inserting the same in the document was to secrete this money for the insolvent's benefit. The four debts mentioned in the document are genuine debts and two of these were paid. The appellant says that he refrained from paying the other two because the insolvency petition was presented.

I have now to consider the effect of these findings. I do not think that it can be concluded that the insolvent had the dominant idea of cheating his other creditors by preferring the creditors of these four debts. It is thus not properly a case of fraudulent preference under s. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but I think it can be brought under s. 53. As already pointed out, the District Judge has held this mortgage to be the act of insolvency and the adjudication was based on this conclusion. That adjudication is not now before us and I take it that this finding stands, namely, that the document is one got up by the insolvents to defeat and delay creditors, of whom the petitioning creditor was one. The alienee in such circumstances no doubt is faced with this handicap, that it is not open to him to attack that finding, but on the other hand, to attract the operation of s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, it is not in terms necessary that the document should be to defeat or delay creditors. It is sufficient if it was a transfer not in good faith or not for valuable consideration. It is open, therefore, to the alienee to escape the operation of the section by showing good faith and payment of valuable consideration. Now, this alienee had paid valuable consideration to the extent of Rs. 1,000 but considering that the intention of the document was to secrete a much larger part of the insolvent's estate from his creditors, it is impossible to hold that the mere payment of Rs. 1,000 will avail to make the document one taken in good faith. A document cannot be partly in good faith and partly not. The dominant intention underlying the document is what has to be looked at, and in this case, that intention was to deceive and defraud creditors. It is, therefore, a document taken not in good faith and liable to be declared void against the Official Receiver. There is, therefore, no reason to disturb the order of the District Court setting it aside.

The appellant contends that even so he is entitled to stand in the shoes of the creditors whose debts he has discharged. One of these was a simple money debt and the other was a mortgage debt. We have been referred to certain rulings under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. In Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Iyer (1) it was held that a transfer to defeat creditors is wholly void even if it is in part for valuable consideration and that it cannot be upheld even to the extent to which it is supported by consideration. But the upholding contended for and negatived in that case was an upholding as an assignment. In Palamalai Mudaliar v. South Indian Export Co. (2) after a mortgage had been paid off, the alienee was given a charge on the property to the extent of the payment; and the same principle was acted upon in In re Jaladanki China Pitchiah (3), Loorthia Odayar v. Gopalasami (4) and Rajani Kumar Das v. Gour Kishore Saha (5). The general principle applicable to cases under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act; I think is this: the assignment, as an assignment is void; but, for money genuinely paid in discharge of genuine debts, the alienee will stand in the shoes of those whom he has paid. In the case of a mortgage debt paid off, the transfer will not operate as a mortgage at all, not even to the extent of the amount paid, but the alienee will be entitled to rank in the schedule of secured creditors to the extent of his payment. Consequently, I think the proper method of disposal by the Official Receiver is that the appellant should be allowed to rank in the schedule of secured creditors to the extent of the amount paid by him to discharge the mortgage, and as an unsecured creditor to the extent of the amount paid by him to discharge the unsecured debts; and I would direct that this be done.

I would give the appellant roughly proportionate costs on his success and direct that he receive one-third of the costs throughout and pay two-thirds of the costs throughout.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I entirely agree. The learned District Judge has held that the alienation in favour of the appellant should be set aside under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but he has also found that the appellant has paid a sum of Rs. 1,000 thereby discharging two prior debts of the insolvent, namely, (1) Rs. 500 due to one Sinnakkal under a mortgage, Ex. II, and (2) Rs. 500 due to the Bank under Ex. III. I agree with my learned brother that the evidence in the case fully supports these conclusions. It is argued that the sum of Rs. 1,000 having been paid, the alienation in favour of the appellant should be upheld at least to the extent it is supported by consideration, and in this connection, some decisions under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act dealing with transfers made with intent to defeat or delay creditors were referred to in the course of the argument. In Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Iyer (1) confirmed by the Privy Council in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sirinivasa Sastrial (6) it was held that a transfer intended to defeat creditors is wholly void as an assignment though it is in part supported by valuable consideration; but this does not mean that the alienee is not to get any credit for the debt that he may be found to have actually discharged. In Palamalai Mudaliar v. The South Indian Export Co. (2) an alienee who paid a portion of the consideration by discharging a valid mortgage previously binding on the property alienated was given a charge on the property to the extent of his payment. This principle is recognised in Loorthia Odayar v. Gopalasami Iyer (4) though this decision covers a wider ground. Applying the principle of these decisions, I think that though the assignment as an assignment is void under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the alienee is entitled in so far as he has paid off the mortgage debt due to Sinnakkal to rank in the schedule of secured creditors to the extent of his payment and, in so far as he has paid off the debt due to the Bank, to rank as an unsecured creditor. I agree with my learned brother that the Official Receiver should be directed to dispose of the claims of the appellant as regards these two debts on this basis. I also concur in the proposed order as to costs.

RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Mortgage suit—Receiver—Loan by tenant to mortgagor—Payment towards rent—Money spent on improvement of mortgaged property—Collateral arrangement—Receiver, whether bound—Estoppel—Tenant in possession—Notice—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 8, 50.

A Receiver was appointed in a mortgage suit and thereafter the mortgagor entered into an arrangement with the tenant of the mortgaged premises under which the tenant advanced a sum of money to the mortgagor which was applied towards the repairs and improvement of the mortgaged premises, the mortgagor agreeing to set off the amount of the loan towards future rent:

Held, that irrespective of the fact whether the Receiver had or had not power to sanction the arrangement between the mortgagor and his tenant the Court would not allow him to repudiate the transaction after it had been carried through, and after he and the mortgagees had taken advantage of the transaction and the money had been advanced and spent in the improvement of the premises which were the mortgagees' security. [p. 541, col. 2.]

Where an arrangement between a mortgagor and the tenant of the mortgaged premises for pre-payment of rent, or for setting off future rent against money due from the tenant to the mortgagor, is made subsequent to the date of the mortgage, such arrangement is only a collateral bargain between these parties and is not binding upon the mortgagee. [p. 542, col. 1.]

Per Rankin, J.—The principle to be applied in the case of a mortgage of tenanted land is that the mortgage operates as a grant of the reversion expectant on the determination of the term of the lease, and the rents and profits accruing after the transfer pass to the mortgagee. The tenant in such a case has the protection of s. 50 of the Transfer of Property Act, if the rent is paid as rent and is not paid in advance. Any payment made by the tenant to the mortgagor in advance would be a mere loan. [p. 543, col. 2.]

In the absence of an enquiry by a transferee of tenanted premises, the open possession of the tenant over the premises is notice not only of the immediate terms of his tenancy but of collateral agreements as well. [p. 545, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Page, dated the 19th March 1924.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Page which was delivered on the 19th of May 1924.

The plaintiffs brought a suit against the defendant, who was sued as J. B. Beattie & Co., to recover possession of a portion of certain premises, which was occupied by the defendant. The portion in question was part of the first floor of premises Nos. 3 and 3-1, Mangoe Lane, Calcutta.

There was a prayer for Rs. 3,160 in respect of rent up to the 31st of August 1923.

There was a further prayer for damages at the rate of Rs. 600 per month from the 1st of September 1923 until delivery of vacant possession by reason of the alleged wrongful possession of the defendant after the 1st of September 1923.

The defence shortly stated was that the defendant had been a tenant of these premises for a long time, and that in 1920 the defendant was requested by his landlords, Messrs. Hyam and Jones, to advance money in order that such money might be applied in repairing and improving the premises generally.

It was alleged that it was verbally agreed that the defendant would advance Messrs. Hyam and Jones money to be spent on repairs, and that the money so advanced would be accepted as rent of the premises paid in advance and that the defendant would be entitled to remain in possession as tenant of the premises until rent of the said premises at the rate of Rs. 200 per month should have accrued to an amount equivalent to the rent so paid in advance.

It was alleged that the defendant advanced in June 1920 Rs. 7,800 ; that on the 20th of October 1921 he made a further advance of Rs. 1,500, and that on the 29th of December 1921 he again advanced a sum of money, this time the sum being Rs. 2,500; that the money was spent by the landlords upon repairs and improvements of the premises in accordance with the arrangement and that consequently the defendant was entitled to remain in possession up to some date in 1926.

The facts of this case may be stated shortly as follows: The defendant was a tenant of the portion of the premises, which I have mentioned, from about the year 1907 at a rental of Rs. 150. On the 13th of July 1914 his landlords Messrs. Hyam and Jones executed a mortgage to Mr. M. A. Sassoon and two others of the whole premises. On the 13th of January 1917, a mortgage suit was filed by Messrs. Sassoons, the mortgagees : on the 16th of March 1917 M. A. Sassoon was appointed Receiver and on the 27th July 1917 a preliminary decree was made : on the 24th of January 1919 the final decree was made and it included an order for sale.

It should be mentioned that on the 30th of April 1917 Messrs. Hyam and Jones had made a further mortgage of the premises to Messrs. Mackintosh Burn & Co. They had brought a suit and had obtained a decree in January 1919. They were added as parties to the suit of Messrs. Sassoons, and the final decree of the 24th of January 1919 dealt not only with the rights of Messrs. Sassoons, the mortgagees, but also with the rights of Messrs. Mackintosh Burn & Co., as second mortgagees.

The 6th of May 1920 is a material date inasmuch as the Calcutta Rent Act came into force on that date.

The first agreement, which was made by the defendant with his landlord, was on the 7th of June 1920 ; and, in respect of that, the sum of Rs. 7,800 was advanced, and a receipt was given in the following terms :—

"Received from J. B. Beattie, Esq., the sum of rupees seven thousand and eight hundred only in advance on account of rents of premises No. 3-1, Mangoe Lane for the purpose of making an additional room on the roof of the one storied godown in the above premises, to be deducted out of the monthly rents payable, viz., Rs. 200 per month."

Part of the arrangement was that the rent was to be increased from Rs. 150 to Rs. 200.

On the 12th of July 1921 Messrs. Hyam and Jones created an equitable mortgage by depositing the title deeds of the premises with the plaintiffs.

In order to carry this out Messrs. Sassoons were paid off and the deeds were handed by them to the attorneys for the plaintiffs ; and, a receipt was given by Messrs. Sassoons in the following terms :

"Suit No. 270-16.

"M. A. Sassoon v. J. I. J. Hyam.

"Received from Messrs. Hyam and Jones a cheque for Rs. 7,02,000 only, viz., Rs. 6,92,093-3-3 in full satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim for principal and interest due under the decree herein and Rs. 9,906-13-9 on account of the costs of the suit. We undertake to refund excess, if any, on adjustment of the costs of this suit."

On the 20th of October 1921, as I have already said, a further advance of Rs. 1,500 was made by the defendant to Hyam & Jones and on the 29th of December 1921 another sum of Rs. 2,500 was advanced. The position, therefore, up to this date was that Messrs. Sassoons had been paid off and apparently had no more interest in the premises. The plaintiffs became mortgagees by the deposit of the title deeds.

It appears that Messrs. Sassoons subsequently alleged that a mistake had been made in the calculation of the amount which was due to Messrs. Sassoons, and that there was still a sum of about Rs. 25,000 due in respect of interest. In consequence thereof an application was made to the learned Judge sitting on the Original Side for the sale of the premises by Messrs. Sassoons: and, on the 5th of April 1922 an order for sale was made. The material part of the order was as follows: "It is ordered that the Registrar of this Court do sell the mortgaged premises Nos. 3 and 3-1 Mangoe Lane and No. 1 Barrettos Lane or a sufficient part thereof with liberty to the plaintiffs to bid for and purchase the same as directed by the said decree dated the twenty-fourth day of January one thousand nine hundred and nineteen for recovery of the balance of interest due to the plaintiffs under the said decree dated twenty-seventh day of July one thousand nine hundred and seventeen and it is further ordered that on payment to the plaintiffs the said sum as aforesaid the Receiver of this suit be discharged."

It is not for me in this appeal to express any opinion whether that order should have been made, having regard to the fact that Messrs. Sassoons had accepted the sum, which was actually paid to them in July 1921, in full satisfaction of their claim for principal and interest and had delivered up the title-deeds.

The result, however, was that the premises were sold by the Registrar of the Court and the plaintiffs in this suit became the purchasers at that sale for one lac of rupees and the purchase was stated to be subject to a mortgage, dated the 12th day of July 1921. As far as I knew there was no such mortgage. It was, however, assumed by both parties to this appeal that the mortgage intended to be referred to was the mortgage of the plaintiffs, dated 12th July 1921.

Clause 15 of the conditions, upon which the sale was held, provided that the said properties were sold subject to a mortgage, dated 12th July 1921, in favour of Messrs. Telak Chand Hanotmull for Rs. 6,00,000 carrying interest at 12 per cent. per annum and the existing tenancies, quit rents, rights of way and other rights and easements if any affecting the same: and, it specifically mentioned a lease for a period of 25 years.

The sale was held on the 24th of March 1923, and the plaintiffs became the purchasers. Their attorneys by letter, dated 28th March 1923, gave notice to the defendant of the sale and that the plaintiffs had become purchasers and they called upon the defendant not to pay rent to any person other than the plaintiffs. On the 31st May 1923 they gave notice to the defendant to quit the premises by the end of June.

Then the defendant set up the agreement to which I have already referred and I need not read the letters with regard to that.

On the 30th of July the plaintiff's attorneys gave further notice to the defendant calling upon him to quit the portion of the premises occupied by him on the 31st of August and stated that in default the defendant would be held liable for damages at the rate of Rs. 300 per month.

The defendant did not give up possession, and this suit was filed on the 9th of November 1923.

The learned Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim altogether.

As I understand the learned Judge's judgment he treated the three payments which were made by the defendant in June 1920, 20th October 1921 and 29th of December 1921 as having been made in pursuance of the arrangement which was made between the defendant and his landlords on the 7th of June 1920.

With great respect to the learned Judge, in my judgment, the evidence does not support that finding: and, it appears to me that the case must be considered upon the basis that there was a fresh arrangement made in respect of each of these payments.

It is necessary, therefore, to see whether there is any difference in the rights of the parties as regards these three payments.

I propose in the first place to deal with the payment of Rs. 7,800 and the arrangement which was made in respect of it in June 1920.

In my opinion the evidence shows that the defendant advanced Rs. 7,800 to his landlords, Messrs. Hyam and Jones, undoubtedly for the purpose of repair and improvement of the premises, and the agreement was that the money was to be re-paid by the landlords giving the defendant credit for the monthly rents as they became due at the rate of Rs. 200 per month. It was an implied term that the defendant should remain in possession of the premises until the whole amount was re-paid in this manner, unless the landlords re-paid in a lump sum or otherwise. That being the arrangement, the advance of Rs. 7,800 would cover the rents which were payable for 39 months at the rate of Rs. 200 a month, and would cover a period from June 1920 to the end of August 1923.

I agree with the learned Judge's conclusion that the plaintiffs cannot recover any rents in respect of the period up to the end of August 1923. I agree with the learned Judge's finding that Messrs. Sassoons and the Receiver Mr. M. A. Sassoon knew about the arrangement which was made between the defendant and Messrs. Hyam and Jones in June 1920 and assented to it. In my judgment the money, which was advanced by the defendant, was in fact spent on repairs of the premises, as has been found by the learned Judge.

In those circumstances, in my opinion, neither Messrs. Hyam and Jones nor Messrs. Sassoons nor the Receiver could have claimed rent from the defendant for the period up to the 31st of August 1923.

The plaintiffs became mortgagees by paying off Messrs. Sassoons and taking a deposit of the title-deeds from Messrs. Hyam and Jones on the 11th July 1921 which was after the arrangement made between the defendant and Messrs. Hyam and Jones: and, I am at a loss to understand how the plaintiffs could be in a better position than Messrs. Hyam and Jones or Messrs. Sassoons or the Receiver.

In my judgment the learned Judge was right in his conclusion as to this part of the case.

The learned Counsel for the appellants argued that the arrangement which was made between the defendant and his landlords was of no effect as against the plaintiffs by reason of the provisions of s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Even if the plaintiffs could be said to be parties who would have any right under any decree or order which might be made by the Court in the mortgage suit instituted by Messrs. Sassoons upon which I express no opinion, I am of opinion that this point is of no avail to the plaintiffs by reason of the fact that the mortgagees, who were plaintiffs in the suit, and the Receiver were both aware of the arrangement which was made by the defendant with the landlords and had assented to such an arrangement and the plaintiffs cannot be in a better position than Messrs. Sassoons or the Receiver.

The learned Counsel further relied upon the limitation of the Receiver's powers as to dealing with the property.

I do not think it necessary to examine in detail what were the powers of the Receiver, because I am of opinion that, even if the Receiver had no power to sanction the arrangement which was made between the defendant and his landlords, the Court would not allow him to repudiate the transaction after the transaction had been carried through, and after he, the Receiver and the mortgagees had taken advantage of the transaction and the money had been advanced and spent in the improvement of the premises which were the mortgagees' security. I think there is no substance in that point.

The last point to which it is necessary for me to refer in this connection is the argument of the learned Counsel who appeared for the appellants, that there was no proof that the arrangement which was made in June 1920 between the defendant and Mr. Hyam was made with the authority of Mr. Jones, the other landlord.

The issue was, "Was there an agreement between the defendant and Messrs. Hyam and Jones as alleged in the written statement?"

As I understand the learned Judge's judgment, and on reference to the evidence, the contest was upon the question whether the arrangement alleged by the defendant had been made. There was no suggestion at the trial that Mr. Hyam was not acting with the authority of his co-lessor: further I do not find the point specifically taken in the memorandum of appeal. In these circumstances and having regard to the nature of the arrangement, which to my mind was a perfectly proper arrangement, the result of which was for the benefit and advantage of the landlords and an improvement of their property, I have no doubt that Mr. Hyam in making the arrangement of June 1920, was acting with the authority of Mr. Jones. For these reasons, I agree with the learned Judge's conclusion that the plaintiffs cannot recover rent in respect of these premises for any period prior to 31st August 1923.

The position, however, to my mind is different as regards the payments which were made by the defendant on the 20th of October and the 29th of December 1921.

The arrangement as to these payments

according to the evidence is said to have been similar to that which governed the previous payment in June 1920.

But as I have already said, it seems to me that the evidence shows that the arrangements of the 20th of October 1921 and of the 29th of December 1921 must be regarded as being separate from the previous arrangement of June 1920. These two arrangements were made after the mortgage to the plaintiffs. That being so, the rule which was referred to by Lord Justice Swinfen Eady in Ashburton v. Nocton (1) is applicable.

The learned Lord Justice stated the rule as follows:—"If the arrangement between mortgagor and tenant for pre-payment of rent, or for setting off future rent against money due from the tenant to the mortgagor, be made subsequent to the date of the mortgage, such arrangement will be treated as a collateral bargain between those parties and not binding upon the mortgagee."

Therefore, unless it can be shown that the plaintiffs assented to the above-mentioned arrangements between the defendant and the mortgagors, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are not bound by them. There is no evidence to show that the plaintiffs consented to the arrangements; and, in my judgment, in October and December 1921 Messrs. Hyam and Jones were not in a position to give more than their personal undertaking to set off the sums which would become due in respect of the monthly rents against the advances which the defendants made so long as they were in a position so to do. They were not able to bind the plaintiffs, the mortgagees, or to deprive the mortgagees of any of their rights, which would include the right to give notice to the defendant to pay the rent to them and on failure by the defendant to pay the rent to determine the tenancy.

It was alleged that Mr. Hyam did not inform the defendant of the mortgage which had been created in favour of the plaintiffs. Even if that be so, although one may sympathise with the defendant, it does not affect the plaintiffs' rights.

The learned Counsel for the defendant based part of his argument upon the Calcutta Rent Act and urged that his client was safeguarded by reason of the provisions thereof.

In my opinion the Calcutta Rent Act is not sufficient to release the defendant from his liability for the reasons that the rent after August 1923 had not been paid by the defendant to the persons to whom it was due, namely, the plaintiffs.

There are two other points to which it is necessary for me to refer. The learned Counsel for the defendant relied upon the doctrine of merger. He referred to the fact that the plaintiffs had purchased the property at the sale which was held under the order of the Court in March 1923 and he relied upon the conditions of sale in cl. 15, to which I have already referred.

He urged that the plaintiffs were affected with notice of the defendant's tenancy: and for the doctrine of merger, he relied upon the case of Toulmin v. Steere (2) and of Smith v. Phillips (3).

I am of opinion that the doctrine of merger is not available to the defendant.

It was held in the case of Gokoldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das (4) that the doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere (2) is not applicable to Indian transactions, except as the law of justice, equity and good conscience.

Sir Richard Couch, in giving the judgment of the Judicial Committee stated as follows: "The doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere (2) is not applicable to Indian transactions, except as the law of justice, equity and good conscience. And if it rested on any broad intelligible principle of justice it might properly be so applied. But it rests on no such principle. If it did it could not be excluded or defeated by declarations of intention or formal devices of conveyancers, whereas it is so defeated every day. When an estate is burdened by a succession of mortgages, and the owner of an ulterior interest pays off an earlier mortgage, it is a matter of course to have it assigned to a trustee for his benefit as against intermediate mortgagees to whom he is not personally liable.

"In India the art of conveyancing has been and is of a very simple character. Their Lordships cannot find that a formal transfer of a mortgage is ever made, or an intention to keep it alive ever formally expressed. To apply to such a practice the doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere (2) seems to them likely, not to promote justice and equity, but to lead to confusion, to multiplication of documents, to useless technicalities, to expense, and to litigation."

I agree with the learned Counsel's argument to this extent that the plaintiffs, when they bought the premises, did receive notice of the defendant's tenancy and were thereby put upon enquiry and they must be taken to have had knowledge of the actual facts.

Now, what were the facts of which they would have become aware upon enquiry?

Messrs. Hyam and Jones had made arrangements with the defendant in October and December 1921, by which the above-mentioned sums were advanced by the defendant, and they had entered into a collateral bargain by which they had made themselves personally liable to set off the monthly rents as they became due against the sums which had been advanced, and so to re-pay them. The plaintiffs would have found that these arrangements were made after the date of the plaintiffs' mortgage and that they, the plaintiffs, were not bound by them; consequently, in my judgment, neither of the above-mentioned points, upon which the learned Counsel relied, are sufficient to release the defendant from his liability.

In my judgment, the plaintiffs cannot recover any rent for any period prior to the end of August 1923. But the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the premises and to recover mesne profits after the 31st of August 1923.

The result is that the plaintiffs' claim for rent for the period up to the 31st of August 1923 is dismissed; the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for Rs. 200 for rent for the month of September 1923, and they are entitled to a decree for mesne profits from the 1st of October 1923 until the date of delivery of possession at the rate of Rs. 210 (two hundred and ten) per month, which we consider to be a fair rate to be paid for the occupation of the premises. The possession of the premises must be vacated by the defendant on or before the expiry of three months from to-day.

We have considered the question of costs: and, having regard to the peculiar features of this case, we have come to the conclusion that each party should pay its own costs not only of the appeal but also of the trial. It is not necessary to mention all the reasons which have weighed with us: it is sufficient to say that the plaintiffs have failed with regard to a substantial part of their claim in which they persisted even in the Court of Appeal.

Rankin, J.—I agree.

As regards the arrangements which were made in October of 1921 and December of 1921, which were after the mortgage by deposit to the appellants, had been made by Hyam and Jones on the 12th of July 1921 upon the terms of the registered deed of that date—the position is controlled entirely by s. 8 and s. 50 of the Transfer of Property Act. The principle to be applied in the case of a mortgage of tenanted land is that the mortgage operates as a grant of the reversion expectant on the determination of the term. In India a mortgage by deposit has the same effect as a "legal mortgage." By s. 8 accordingly, when this mortgage by deposit was entered into in July 1921, there passed to the mortgagees, namely, the appellants, the rents and profits accruing after the transfer. The result is that the tenant in such a case has only the protection of s. 50 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is the equivalent in India of the old Statute of Queen Anne which was canvassed in De Nicols v. Saunders (5) and, the principle of that case applies where the arrangement in question has taken place subsequent to the mortgage. In order to get the benefit of the protection of s. 50 the tenant must pay rent as rent, and must not pay rent in advance which, in these circumstances, is a mere loan to the mortgagor. I entirely agree that the evidence does not admit for a moment of these two subsequent arrangements of October and December 1921 being regarded as the carrying out of a previous arrangement entered into in June 1920, and I respectfully differ from the learned Judge in so far as he has not differentiated between the first of the three arrangements and the others.

The only argument which to my mind requires examination in support of the claim of the respondent to stand as against the appellants, upon the later arrangements, is the argument urged before us that although the appellants, had their mortgage of the 12th of July 1921 stood by itself, would not have been bound by the arrangements of October and December 1921, nevertheless when they came to take as auction-purchasers in March 1923 the equity of redemption subject to their own mortgage, they became unable to set up as against the respondent the rights which they had under their mortgage of July 1921. That, as has been pointed out, is the doctrine of merger and the cases which were relied upon before us, the cases of Smith v. Phillips (3) and Morrogh v. Alleyne (6) are mere illustrations of the doctrine of merger laid down in the case of Toulmin v. Steere (2), an authority which has been much buffeted by modern decisions both in India and in England. I see myself no principle in saying in this case that the appellants' position as against the respondents' was made worse by the circumstance that they paid one lac of rupees and bought in the equity of redemption in addition to their subsisting mortgage. It remains, therefore, to consider the rights of the parties as regards the transaction which was entered into on the 7th of June 1920.

Now, the facts as to this transaction are not very satisfactorily presented in the evidence. The evidence of Mr. Beattie is that the roof of the premises—and I understand he is speaking not only of his own part of the premises—was in a bad condition, that it was leaky, that it required repairs and that the premises otherwise were bad and required repairs. Mr. Hyam's evidence is the same and there is no cross-examination of either witness tending to show that that version of the facts was in any way incorrect. It is quite true that when one scrutinizes the receipt, dated the 7th of June 1920, one finds that the advance is said to be for the purpose of "making an additional room on the roof of the one-storied godown in the above premises." When the plaintiffs' witness Mr. Shorsbree was in the witness-box he was cross-examined on the basis that a part of the premises was to be constructed out of the advance. However, that may be, the defendant and Hyam both go into the witness-box, they are not asked anything to throw doubt upon the story that the property as a whole was out of repair and that the purpose of that advance was to enable repairs to be made. The learned Judge has accepted that view: and, in the circumstances, it is quite impossible for this Court to accept any suggestion to the contrary.

The position, therefore, was this: A mortgage with the Sassoons had been made in 1914. In a suit which was solely between the Sassoons and Hyam and Jones and which had begun on the 13th of January 1917, one of the Sassoons had been appointed Receiver so far back as the 16th of March 1917. A later mortgage had been given to Mackintosh Burn, Ltd., in April 1917, and notwithstanding that a preliminary decree had been passed in the Sassoons' suit on the 27th of July 1917, not till 1918 did Mackintosh Burn, Ltd., bring a suit at all. The final decree for sale on the 24th of January 1919 was made in the Sassoons' suit to which Mackintosh Burn, Ltd., were added as parties in order that the rights of all persons might be worked out in each other's presence. It appears that Mr. Hyam was acting really as manager for the Receiver; so he says. At all events, the Receiver was allowing him to make out the rent bills, to endorse them to him and the Receiver's peon collected the rent. The Receiver and Hyam were managing this property for a period of over three years; and we must take it that the time came when the property required to be repaired. At that time it so happened that Mr. Beattie was in this position, at all events, as regards the main part of the premises, that under the Calcutta Rent Act, he had, so long as he would keep the covenants, fixity of tenure, and, in these circumstances, the Receiver and Hyam knowing that they could not eject the defendant or claim more rent, and being in need of money got the necessary money for repairs by getting him to pay rent in advance. It was a substantial amount of Rs. 7,800. I do not regard that as if the Receiver was wrongly making a lease for three years. It is a mere arrangement whereby Hyam and the Receiver too, in order to get the advance, undertook, so long as Mr. Beattie kept the covenants, that they would not attempt to give him notice to quit at all events unless they paid off the balance. That may or may not be an arrangement within the competency of a Receiver, but it was done with the consent of the Sassoon mortgagees. It was done at a time when, as the learned Judge found, Mr. Beattie had not been informed about Messrs. Sassoons' mortgage. To my mind it was an entirely unreasonable arrangement. I do not say that it was contrary to the Receiver's duty. But if it was, I do not understand why we are to suppose that the consent of Mackintosh Burn & Co. was lacking to a perfectly good and very beneficial agreement to which they have never objected.

(6) (1873) Ir. R. 7 Eq. 487.

We have to consider whether it binds the equitable mortgagees of the 12th of July 1921.

Now, it seems to me that the cases of Green v. Rheinberg (7) and Ashburton v. Nocton (1) show that such an arrangement will in equity bind a person taking a transfer of the reversion, unless he can show that he purchased for value without notice. This no doubt is an advance upon the Common Law stand point of Cook v. Guerra (8).

In this case there was a tenant upon the property and his open possession is notice not only of the immediate terms of his tenancy but of collateral agreements as well, in the absence of all enquiry by the transferees.

Under the doctrine, therefore, illustrated by Daniels v. Davison (9), the mortgagees in this case, who made no enquiry, are not entitled to say that they were purchasers for value without notice. Therefore, the transfer of the reversion to them by the equitable mortgage of the 12th of July 1921 is not a transfer free from the rights of the respondent under the arrangement of the 7th of June 1920.

In these circumstances the learned Counsel for the appellant says that in view of fact that he in March 1923 became the auction-purchaser of the property subject to his own mortgage as has been already detailed, he can obtain a better right and a right to override the arrangement of June 1920 by the doctrine of lis pendens. I do not understand him to argue that he could obtain a better right than Messrs. Sassoons, the mortgagees, by the doctrine of subrogation, but he says that as he ultimately became the auction-purchaser he obtained a better right by the doctrine of lis pendens. To my mind, that doctrine has no application to this case, not because I am prepared to hold that an auction-purchaser is necessarily outside s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, but because it seems to me that where the Court is by its Receiver managing property for a series of years in a mortgage suit the person who takes the property after that management cannot under this section go back and rip up such transactions of the Receiver and question their formal propriety. The doctrine is intended to prevent one party to a suit making an assignment inconsistent with the right which may be established in the suit and which might require a further party to be impleaded in order to make effectual the Court's decree.

I think that the arrangement is one which binds the appellant.

The respondent being prima facie monthly tenant, was given on 30th July 1923 a month's notice to leave after August 1923, and it is for him to show what this arrangement of June 1920 was, and to show that it prevented the owners of the reversion from giving him a valid notice to quit as they purported to do.

The arrangement was on the 7th of June 1920. There is no evidence or suggestion that the rent of the respondent was payable monthly in advance. The arrangement was according to the written document simply this: "For the purpose of making an additional room on the roof of the one-storied godown in the above premises, to be deducted out of the monthly rents payable, viz, Rs. 200 per month." I have no doubt that the intention was that on the 1st of July the rent for June should be taken to be Rs. 200 and Rs. 200 should be cancelled accordingly. The learned Judge taking, rather at the foot of the letter, two passages in the evidence appears to have thought that the arrangement was that the rent should be increased only as and when the repairs were finished. That, I think, is not the meaning of the receipt: and, so far as I can gather, the computation of the defendant in para. 5 of the written statement was not based upon anything of the sort. There is no evidence as to when the repairs were finished; and the burden lies entirely upon the defendant. In para. 5 of the written statement the computation is made as if the increased rent first applied to the month of July 1920, that is to say, the rent payable on the 1st of August, assuming it to be payable in arrear in respect of July 1920.

In my judgment, the evidence does not show that: and, I think, therefore, that there was a good notice to quit determining the respondent's status as a monthly tenant. Thereafter his right to continue in occupation rested solely on the Rent Act. The writ was issued on the 7th of November at a time when the rent for September had not been paid to the proper person, and, as the tenant had no further right to notice, there is no answer to the suit under the Calcutta Rent Act as a matter of ejectment. He cannot, however, be charged more than Rs. 200 for September 1923.

CIVIL REVISION PETITIONS NOS. 854 AND 855 OF 1925.

October 28, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jackson.

THE VICE-CHAIRMAN, CHIDAMBARAM MUNICIPALITY—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

GANASAMBANDHAM PILLAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920)—Rules for conduct of elections, r. 5—Candidate's name, omission of, in final list of valid nominations—Remedy of party aggrieved—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of—Statutory tribunal, creation of—Effect.

Where a special tribunal out of the ordinary course is appointed by an Act to determine questions as to rights which are the creation of that Act, then except so far as otherwise expressly provided or necessarily implied, that tribunal's jurisdiction to determine those questions is exclusive. If the tribunal has functioned and given a decision whether right or wrong, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction. It is only when the special tribunal has refused to function that a Civil Court exercises the jurisdiction which the proper tribunal has failed to exercise. [p. 546, col. 2; p. 547, col. 1.]

Sarvothama Rao v. Chairman, Municipal Council, Sidapet, 73 Ind. Cas. 619; 47 M. 585 at p. 594; 17 L. W. 431; (1923) M. W. N. 266; 32 M. L. T. 178; 45 M. L. J. 23; A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 475 and Bhaishankar Nanabhai v. Municipal Corporation, 31 B. 604; 9 Bom L. R. 417, followed.

Where at an election of a Councillor for one of the wards of a Municipality, the name of a candidate is omitted from the final list of valid nominations published under r. 5 of the Election Rules, the remedy of the aggrieved party is to refer the matter to the Local Government under r. 31 or to file an election petition under r. 1 of the Election Dispute Rules, and not a suit for injunction restraining election in a Civil Court. [p. 546, col. 2.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Munsif of Chidambaram, in I. A. No. 1005 of 1925 in Original Suit No. 502 of 1925.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner seeks to set aside two orders of the District Munsif of Chidambaram, one ordering the production and the other ordering the attachment and seizure of the ballot boxes in the election of a Councillor for the 4th ward of Chidambaram Municipality. There is no ground for presumption from the record at this stage of the proceedings that the District Munsif had any jurisdiction to interfere with the final election. It seems that when the final list of valid nominations was posted in accordance with Election Rule 5, the respondent found that his name had been omitted. Accordingly he filed O. S. No. 502 of 1925 in the Court of the District Munsif of Chidambaram. His remedy would have been to refer to the matter to the Local Government under r. 31 or to have filed an election petition under r. 1 of the Election Dispute Rules. As Mr. Justice Wallace observes in Sarvothama Rao v. Chairman Municipal Council, Sidapet (1) it is impossible in deciding the propriety of an injunction to avoid deciding on the maintainability of the suit and it is better if the Court concerned decide the two questions together. But the Munsif does not seem to have addressed his mind to this question of jurisdiction. The law is quite clear, and is set forth both in the Madras ruling quoted above and in Bhaishankar Nanabhai v. Municipal Corporation (2) where a special tribunal out of the ordinary course is appointed by an act to determine questions as to rights which are the creation of that Act, then except so far as otherwise expressly provided or necessarily implied, that tribunal's jurisdiction to determine those questions is exclusive [Bhaishankar Nanabhai v. Municipal Corporation (2).] If this tribunal had functioned and given a decision whether right or wrong, I am clear that the Civil Court would have no jurisdiction. It is only when the special tribunal has refused to function that a Civil Court exercises the jurisdiction which the proper tribunal has failed to exercise [Sarvothama Rao v. Chairman, Municipal Council, Sidapet (1).]

(2) 31 B. 604; 9 Bom. L. R. 417.

It is idle for the respondent to complain that if that is the law, it deprived him of the speedy and drastic remedy which he personally desires. It is only under the Statute, that he has any rights at all in this matter, and he must submit to the whole statutory scheme, instead of accepting the privileges, and repudiating disabilities. It is an essential condition of those rights that they should be determined in the manner prescribed in the act to which they owe their existence. In such a case there is no ouster of the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts for they never had any, there is no change of the old order of things; a new order is brought into being Bhaishnakar Nanabhai v. Municipal Corporation (2). Nor are the reasons for the Statute far to seek.

It is a positive practical necessity that these elections should be held and completed without being delayed at every stage by some person who considers that he has a personal grievance, and it is highly important that the ordinary Courts of Law should be kept entirely immune from the excitement that elections invariably generate. It would be deplorable if Munsif's Courts were to become the storm centre of disputed elections. If these principles require illustration the present case could hardly be bettered. An election has been held which ought not to be delayed because a Chairman has to be elected in November yet all the ballot boxes for one ward are in the Munsif's Court, and the Munsif has plunged into the fray not only with the fervour but with the vocabulary of the hustings. The respondent made yet a third application to have the taking of the votes stopped by the injunction, and the Munsif ordered that the election should not proceed without the respondent as candidates Whereupon the Chairman added his name as a candidate and proceeded. The Munsif describes this Act, which was certainly not in contravention of the plain terms of his order as an insult and gross insubordination. Evidently he regards himself as the authority in supreme control of the election, and the various other functionaries are his subordinates and it is precisely to avoiding putting the Courts of Law in this intolerable invidious position that the Legislature is careful to appoint special tribunals and to exclude the ordinary jurisdiction.

I find that the orders in question were passed without jurisdiction and order the District Munisf of Chidambaram to restore the ballot boxes to the proper authority. The injunctions are cancelled, costs to petitioners.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 25 OF 1923.

July 9, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Kennedy, J. C. and Mr. Lobo, A. J. C.

TANUMAL AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS IN APPEAL NO. 25 AND RESPONDENTS IN APPEAL NO. 20

GANGA RAM AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS IN APPEAL NO. 25 AND APPELLANTS IN APPEAL NO. 20.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 253—Partnership—Death of partner—Agreement by managing member of joint Hindu family to continue partnership, effect of—Right to sue for accounts of old partnership, whether survives.

Ordinarily a partnership is dissolved by the death of one of the partners but there may be an implied contract to continue the partnership after the death of a partner and in such a case the partnership would continue between the persons who have entered into such contract. Where such a contract is entered into by the managing member of a joint Hindu family not on behalf of the members of the family but acting merely on his own behalf, the contract is not binding on the other members of the family. [p. 549, col. 2.]

Where a partnership is continued after the death of one of the partners it is, however, technically a new partnership and not the old partnership. On the death of a partner each surviving partner is presumed, where the partnership is continued, to invest in the new partnership his share of the assets of the dissolved partnership and to take over his share of the liabilities of that partnership. So that even where a partnership is so continued one of the continuing partners has a right to demand a settlement of accounts of the old partnership up to the date of the death of the deceased partner, and he does not lose his right to such an account by reason of his agreement with the surviving partners to continue the partnership. [p. 549, col. 2; p. 550, col. 1.]

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Suganlal, H. Jeswani, Dipchand Chandumal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in Appeal No. 20 who are the respondents in Appeal No. 25 and one Tolaram father of the respondents in Appeal No. 20 entered into a partnership at Rohri in the name of Gangaram Dholandas & Co., to carry on certain saltpetre contracts at Ludhiana. The partnership commenced in May or June 1915. A regular deed of partnership was executed some months later. Tolaram was a gumashta or working partner with a share of 2 annas and 3 pies out of 13 annas and 6 pies. Some time after May, 1915, the firm of Gangaram Dholandas & Co., became amalgamated with another firm carrying on similar business at Kot Ramchand in the name and style of Gellanand Basantram on certain terms and conditions with which for the purposes of this appeal we are not concerned.

On the 8th July 1918, Tolaram died leaving surviving him his four sons the respondents in Appeal No. 20 one of them Ladhoomal being a minor. It does not appear from the record what happened for some months after the death of Tolaram but on 19th November 1918, the respondent No. 1 in Appeal No 20 Tanumal wrote to the appellants Nos. 1 to 3 in Appeal No. 20 a chit the relevant portion whereof reads as follows:

"I after due respect write to say that my deceased father Munshi Tolaram was a partner in this concern and his share is 2 annas 3 pies out of 13 annas 6 pies but now as my father Munshi Tolaram has died I bind myself to have the same share on the same terms in his stead and on his behalf. I will pay whatever profits and losses occurred before or after this in proportion to the same share. . . . I agree to pay Rs. 30 a month for the intervening period from the date of my father's death till I join. Therefore, I write this chit in order to continue on the partnership for the future."

It appears that nothing further was done till April 1919 when the appellants in Appeal No. 20 met respondents Nos. 1 and 3. Disputes then arose between them respondent No. 1 desiring that his brother respondent No. 3 should work in his stead in the partnership as he himself was employed in Government service and the appellants in Appeal No. 20 contending that the partnership deed which had been prepared should be signed by the respondent No. 1 which the respondent No. 1 refused to do. The result was that the partnership deed was not executed.

On 18th June 1919 respondents Nos. 1 and 3 in Appeal No. 20 served a notice on appellants Nos 1 to 3 wherein it was alleged that the partnership came to an end on the death of Tolaram and that Tolaram and his sons formed a joint Hindu family. A demand was formulated in the said notice for settlement of accounts of the partnership up to the death of Tolaram. The accounts not having been settled the respondents in Appeal No. 20 filed Suit No. 1008 of 1919 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rohri for settlement of partnership accounts as claimed in the notice of 18th June above referred to. The main defence put up in this suit by the appellants in Appeal No. 20 was that the partnership was not dissolved on the death of Tolaram, that the chit executed by Tanumal on 19th November 1918 was executed by him in his capacity as eldest surviving member and manager of the joint family consisting of himself and his younger brothers, that the said chit was, therefore, binding on the respondents in Appeal No 20 and that by reason of that chit which related back to the death of Tolaram the partnership had to be considered as a continuing partnership which had never been dissolved and the business whereof was still being carried on and that the plaintiffs, therefore, could not sue for accounts without suing for a dissolution of the partnership.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Rohri dismissed the suit accepting the defence put up by the appellants in Appeal No. 20 as set out above, discrediting Tanumal's attempts to prove a partition among the brothers subsequent to the death of Tolaram and discrediting also Tanumal's allegation that the chit of November 1918, Ex. 118 in the case was of a conditional character and not a complete agreement.

Against this decision the respondents Nos. 2 and 4 in Appeal No. 20 filed an appeal in the District Court, Sukkur being Civil Appeal No. 17 of 1921, the respondent No. 1 and the appellants in Appeal No. 20 were made respondents in that appeal. The learned District Judge accepted the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge as to the jointness of the respondents in Appeal No. 20 and as to the final and binding nature of Tanumal's chit, Ex. 118. He, however, held that the chit was binding on Tanumal alone that he had executed it in his own name and in his own personal capacity and that, therefore, it had no binding effect on his three brothers respondents Nos. 2—4 in this appeal. He held that Tanumal had by this reason of Ex. 118 disentitled himself from claiming accounts, Nos. 2 and 4 were so entitled. He, therefore, allowed the appeal and in consequence thereof respondents Nos. 2—4 in Appeal No. 20 became entitled to claim from the appellants in Appeal No. 20 an account of the partnership till the death of their father.

Against this decision which would lead to obvious difficulties the appellants have filed this Second Appeal No. 20 of 1923 while Tanumal has filed the companion Appeal No. 25 of 19.3.

Now it appears to us that the important point in these two-connected appeals is as to what was the effect of Tolaram's death upon the partnership between Tolaram and the applicants in Appeal No. 20.

That partnership was governed by the terms of a partnership deed dated 9th November 1915. The deed is not before us but it is agreed on all hands that it was silent with regard to the question as to whether or not the death of any partner resulted in a dissolution of the partnership. There was, therefore, no express contract for a continuation of the partnership after the death of Tolaram. Now s. 253 of the Indian Contract Act, provides that in the absence of any contract to the contrary the relation of partners to each other are to be determined by rules mentioned therein and according to sub cl. (10) of s. 253, Indian Contract Act, a partnership is dissolved by the death of any partner.

Both the lower Courts taking into consideration Ex. 118 and the course of events prior and subsequent thereto have held that an implied contract to continue the partnership must be inferred therefrom, the only difference between the finding of the two Courts below on this point being that whereas the learned Subordinate Judge considered that all the respondents in Appeal No. 20 were parties to that contract and bound by it, the learned District Judge held that the respondent No. 1 alone had agreed to the continuation of the partnership as between the appellants in Appeal No. 20 and himself.

We are inclined to agree with both the lower Courts in their finding that Ex. 118 was a final and complete agreement to continue the partnership from the date of the death of Tolaram. It appears to us that the wording of Ex. 118 is clear and explicit and is not subject to any such condition or conditions as were contended for by the executant Tanumal. With regard to the question as to whether it binds the brothers of Tanumal the executant, we are of opinion that the finding of the learned District Judge that it does not is correct. It appears to us that the absence in Ex. 118 of all reference to the joint family consisting of Tanumal and his brothers, the fact that Tolaram was merely a gumashta partner in the firm of Gangaram Dholandas & Co., the fact that there is nothing on the record to show that the joint family consisting of Tanumal and his brothers were between July 1918 and November 1918 treated as partners in the business all show that in executing Ex. 118 Tanumal was not acting on behalf of the joint family of which he was the eldest member and manager but that he was acting merely on his own behalf. The agreement to continue the partnership will, therefore, be binding only on the respondent No. 1, Tanumal in Appeal No. 20. But granting this to be so we do not agree that Tanumal has thereby deprived himself of his right to an account of the partnership till the death of his father Tolaram.

Even regarding the partnership as a continuing one so far as respondent Tanumal is concerned, there is ample authority in our own Court for holding that where a partnership is continued after the death of one of the partners it is technically a new partnership and not the old partnership. In the case of Parchomal v. Pamandas (1), Crouch, A. J. C., states: "When a partnership is a continuing one, there is, technically, a new partnership formed whenever any partner dies. On the death of such partner, each surviving partner is presumed to invest in the new partnership his share of the assets of the dissolved partnership and to take over his share of the liabilities." Again in the case of Ramdas v. Partabrai (2) it has been held by another Bench of this Court that where a partnership is continued after the death of one of the partners it is technically a new partnership and not the old partnership. In the present case, therefore, as there was after the death of Tolaram technically a new partnership the old partnership stood dissolved, logically there could be nothing to prevent a settlement of accounts thereof and this is exactly what the respondent in Appeal No. 20 sought in the Original Court. The four respondents as surviving members of a joint Hindu family have an identical cause of action, namely, the dissolution of the partnership caused by the death of Tolaram and the consequent right to claim an account of the said partnership and on the authorities referred to above the respondent No. 1 in Appeal No. 20 does not lose his right to such accounts by reason of his agreement with the surviving partners to continue the partnership.

(2) 23 Ind. Cas. 771; 7 S. L. R. 85.

We must, therefore, allow Tanumal's Appeal No. 25 of 1923 with costs of both Appellate Courts on the respondents and dismiss with costs throughout the appeal of Gangaram and others No. 20 of 1923. The respondent Tanumal as well as the other three respondents in Appeal No. 20 are granted a preliminary decree for accounts of Tolaram's 2 annas 3 pies share out of 13 annas 6 pies in the partnership business up to the time of Tolaram's death in July 1918. The Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rohri to proceed with the suit according to law.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 10—Wrong Court, presentation of plaint to—Duty of Court—Finding as to merits, legality of.

Where a Court holds that it has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit, it should not go into the merits of the case but should return it for presentation to the proper Court.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of Small Causes, Trichinopoly, dated the 10th December 1923, in Suit No. 1086 of 1923.

Mr. T. V. Ramamurthy Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. Swaminatha Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the Small Cause Judge of Trichinopoly. The Judge found that the Court had no jurisdiction. Having decided that the Court had no jurisdiction, it was not competent for him to go into the merits of the case and give a decision on them. He should have returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. I, therefore, set aside the decree of the Small Cause Judge and direct him to return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff is responsible for filing the suit in a Court which had no jurisdiction. Therefore the defendant is entitled to costs of the suit incurred in the Small Cause Judge's Court, Trichinopoly. As the revision petition was necessitated by the wrong order of the learned Judge I make no order as to the costs in this Court.

KARAM DIN AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

MEHR DIN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Adverse possession—Death of owner of property—Possession of one of several heirs beyond his share—Adverse possession in respect of excess.

Where one of the heirs of a deceased person comes to occupy more than his share to the exclusion of the rightful heir of the excess share and alienates it and such alienation is accepted by the conduct of the latter, the possession of the former is adverse to the latter and ripens into ownership if it extends beyond twelve years.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 22nd July 1925, modifying that of the Munsif, First Class, Chunian, dated the 30th November 1922.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Parkash Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The nature of this litigation is described in my judgment dated 20th February 1925, by which the appeal was remanded to the lower Appellate Court. The learned Additional Judge has now come to a fresh decision and has granted the plaintiffs a declaration that the sale so far as 7/8th of the land is concerned shall not affect them but he has dealt with the question at issue somewhat perfunctorily.

The facts have now been further elucidated. The whole of the land in suit originally was owned by Ghulam Nabi who died before the 1892 jamabandi was drawn up. From 1892 to 1906 Musammat Nur Bhari, widow of Ghulam Nabi, was entered as owner of the land. In 1906, the name of Umar Din is substituted for hers and, apparently, this was done when she married Umar Din. Umar Din died in 1908, and then the estate was mutated half to Musammat Nur Bhari and half to Murad Bibi, until 1914 when on the death of Musammat Murad Bibi her half was mutated in the name of Pir Bakhsh her grandson. Pir Bakhsh died on the 24th March 1921, and the present suit was instituted on the 18th July 1921. The date of the mortgage of the land in suit by the two widows is given in the jamabandi of 1909 as the 26th July of that year.

The all important question was that of limitation. It is argued for the appellants that under Muhammadan Law on the death of Ghulam Nabi, Musammat Nur Bhari became entitled to ¼th of the land. Umar Din, the brother, to the remainder, but that Umar Din permitted Musammat Nur Bhari to remain in adverse possession and lost his rights before the mutation in his name which was incorporated in the 1906 jamabandi Hence it is contended that Musammat Nur Bhari has all along been absolute owner of the land in suit. The obstacle to this view is that there is no evidence of what happened beyond the entries in the Revenue Records, and, if it is to be assumed that Musammat Nur Bhari previously held adverse possession, it must be assumed that when the land was mutated to Umar Din after her marriage with him, it was because she had gifted her estate to him. The entry in the Revenue Records that Umar Din was the owner raises a presumption in favour of the plaintiffs, which the defendants had to rebut by proving not only that Musammat Nur Bhari became owner by adverse possession but that she did not transfer her ownership rights to Umar Din I am unable to hold that the defendants have succeeded in establishing this,

Umar Din was thus the owner of the land in suit, and on his death, according to Muhammadan Law, the two widows were entitled to 1-8th and Pir Bakhsh, his grandson, to the remainder. The two widows, however, took possession and, so far as one-half is concerned, Musammat Nur Bhari and her alienees have retained possession. She mortgaged the land in conjunction with Musammat Murad Bibi in 1909 and the plaintiffs recognised the mortgage by purchasing the mortgagee rights. In my judgment Musammat Nur Bhari held adverse possession against Pir Bakhsh in respect of half of the land from the death of Umar Din in 1908, and when the plaintiffs sued in 1921 the suit was out of time in regard to this one-half. So far as the other one-half is concerned they were entitled to date their cause of action from the death of Pir Bakhsh.

I accept the appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court. In lieu thereof the plaintiffs will have a decree declaring that the sale shall not affect them as regards half of the land in suit. The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

A. D. SHANKS—DEFENDANT.

Negligence—Master, liability of, for negligence of servant—Deviation from instructions—Course of employment.

The defendant drove in his car to the Railway Station and gave the driver instructions to take the car back to the garage. The driver instead of taking the car to the garage direct went first to his own house, had his evening meal there and then drove to the garage. While driving to the garage the car collided with the plaintiff's car and it was found that the accident was due to the negligence of the defendant's driver. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendant:

Held, that the defendant's driver had deviated from the instructions of the defendant in going home for his meals, but inasmuch as at the time of the accident he was carrying out the defendant's instructions and was driving to the garage, he was at the time of the accident acting in the course of his employment and was not on a frolic of his own and that, therefore, the defendant was liable. Mr. M. V. Desai, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. F. S. Taleyarkhan, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the plaintiff for damages for injury done to her car in a collision due to the negligence of the driver of the defendant's car.

The defendant pleads contributory negligence and also that the collision was due to the negligence of the plaintiff's driver, and accordingly supplements his written statement by a counter-claim for damages

The accident occurred on January 13, 1922, at 9 30 P. M. The plaintiff's car is an Overland car and her husband was being driven in it to Mahim. Mr. Roberts was seated on the rear of the car and the driver was in the front seat driving. The accident occurred opposite the Church-Gate Street Station. Mr. Roberts did not actually see how the accident occurred, but he saw the defendant's car 60 or 70 yards ahead driven at great speed. He looked down to arrange some parcels of provisions, which were rolling about at the bottom of the car, and the next thing that he knew was that the defendant's car had crashed into his. The driver, however, did see how the accident occurred and he says that he was driving at a moderate pace of twelve or fifteen miles per hour along the right side of the road, i. e, along the west side of the Queen's Road, when the defendant's car approached him in the opposite direction. He says the defendant's car was driven very fast at a speed of 25 to 30 miles per hour and that it was driven in a very irregular manner zigzagging across the road. When the defendant's car came nearer, he says it swerved to the west on to him, and then he did the only thing possible, by swerving his own car to the east, but not in time to avoid the collision. The defendant's driver on the other hand admits that he was driving at 15 to 20 miles per hour, but he says that he was driving on his proper side of the road, i. e., the east side of the Queen's Road. He says the plaintiff's car approached him from the south at a rate of 20 to 25 miles an hour, and that the plaintiff's car swerved suddenly to east. He stopped his car, but it was not in time to avoid the collision and that the plaintiff's car hit his.

[While discussing the evidence whether the accident had happened owing to the negligence of the driver of the plaintiff or of the defendant, his Lordship came to this conclusion :—]

There is no evidence to support the plea of contributory negligence. It is suggested that the plaintiff's driver swerving to the right contributed to the accident, but I do not think it did. The plaintiff's driver could do nothing else when the defendant's car swerved on to his right but to turn. He could not turn to the left, because, if he had, the cars would certainly have met, and, therefore, the only chance of escape was turning to the right and he, therefore, took the only course possible. I think that the accident was solely due to the negligence of the defendant's driver.

It is suggested that the defendant is not responsible for the negligence of the driver on the ground that the driver was not then acting in the course of his employment. Now the facts are that the defendant had employed his driver to drive him to Bori Bunder Station. The defendant left his driver there at 8-30 P. M. with instructions to take the car back to the Wellington Mews. The driver instead of taking the car to the Wellington Mews went to his own house somewhere in Princess Street, had his evening meal there, and at the time of the accident was driving from his home in Princess Street to the Wellington Mews. It is suggested that because the driver had disobeyed his master's instructions to go straight from Bori Bunder to the Wellington Mews, the defendant is not liable. The following two cases were cited in support: Sanderson v. Collins (1) and Storey v. Ashton (2).

The facts in this case are distinguishable from Sanderson v. Collins (1) in that there the coachman had taken the carriage out for his own purposes, whereas here the driver had taken the car out on defendant's instructions and had been left in charge of the car by the defendant. In Storey v. Ashton (2) the accident occurred after the driver's employment in his master's business had terminated for although he had nearly returned home he drove off after business hours on an errand of a third person. Here the defendant's servant, no doubt, deviated from the instructions of the defendant in going home for his meals, but at the time of the accident he was carrying out the defendant's instructions and was driving to the Wellington Mews in order to garage his car. It is quite clear, therefore, that at the time of the accident the defendant's servant was acting in the course of his employment, and was not on a frolic of his own.

(2) (1869) 4 Q. B. 476; 10 B. & S. 337; 38 L. J Q. B. 223; 17 W. R. 727.

The only other point remaining is the qustion of damages claimed for the injury to the car. This is proved by Hyland's bill which amounts to Rs. 2,050-2-3 and for loss of use of the car during the two months it was under repairs. The damages for loss of use the plaintiff estimates on the footing of what might have been the earnings of a taxi-cab, which she used as a private car, during that period. She estimates this amount at Rs. 25 per day, but there are no regular accounts to corroborate this figure. She also says that she could have hired a car at the time as a substitute for Rs. 20 a day including chauffeur's wages and petrol. Chauffeur's wages and petrol would not enter into the account because these were expenses which would be incurred in any case. I think the fair amount to allow for the loss of the use of the car is a sum of Rs. 10 a day for the 61 days.

There will be a decree for the plaintiffs for the sum of Rs. 2,660-2-3 with costs and interest on judgment at 6 per cent.

Counter-claim dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Decision in previous case wrong—Cause of action recurring—Res judicata.

It is settled law that even if the cause of action for a suit be a recurring one every matter decided in the suit may be res judicata which was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit even though the decision in the former suit be erroneous.

Ram Lal Malik v. Deodhari Rai, 74 Ind. Cas. 781; 2 Pat. 771; 5 P. L. T. 7; A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 265, followed.

Appeals against a judgment of Mr. Justice Das, dated the 27th November 1924, modifying a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 5th September 1921, confirming that of the Munsif, Barh, dated the 21st March 1921.

Mr. B. C. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, Actg. C. J.—A suit for rent for the years 1315 to 1317 Faslis was brought by the appellant against the respondents or their predecessors in the year 1910 in the Court of the Munsif of Barh. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants were his raiyats and were liable to pay chauraha rent which is rent paid in rice.

The Munsif found that the defendants were the plaintiff's raiyats but that they were not liable for the rent inasmuch as the plaintiff had omitted to show them as his raiyats in Part II of a road cess return which he had filed in the course of a previous re-valuation. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

The case was finally taken on appeal to the High Court, and in 1917 Mr. Justice Atkinson affirmed the Munsif's finding and held that s. 20 (b) of the Road Cess Act was a bar to the plaintiff's claim.

The rents for the years 1318 to 1321 Faslis have become barred by limitation and the present suit is brought for the years 1322 to 1325 Faslis.

The defence taken by the tenants is that the judgment in the previous case raises a bar under s. 11 of the C. P. C.

The Munsif, and the District Judge in appeal, both decided against the defendants' contention and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

In second appeal Mr. Justice Das has found that Mr. Justice Atkinson's decision, even if it was erroneous, was res judicata and that the present suit cannot succeed.

Since the judgment of Mr. Justice Atkinson in the previous suit it has been held by a Division Bench of this Court that it is immaterial whether a landlord in his cess re-valuation return enters a raiyat's land in Part I or Part II and that so long as the land is contained in the return the landlord is entitled to recover his rent. Assuming, therefore, that Mr. Justice Atkinson's decision was wrong the question is whether s. 11 of the C. P. C. makes that decision res judicata for the purposes of the present suit. The question depends on whether the point now in issue was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit. It does not appear from anything that has been said in the judgments of the Courts below that the matter was not raised in the previous suit or that it was only incidentally raised; nor has the learned Vakil for the appellant to-day shown us anything from the pleadings in the previous suit which would lead us to hold that the issue was not identical in the two cases or that it was not directly and substantially raised. He rests his argument before us almost entirely upon the fact that the view of the Cess Act taken by Mr. Justice Atkinson has been pronounced to be wrong by a later decision of this Court and he contends that an erroneous decision on a point of law can never be res judicata.

This point has been considered in Ram Lal Malik v. Deodhari Rai (1) and unless we are prepared to make a reference to a Full Bench we must follow that judgment. In my opinion that reasoning contained therein is correct and the present suit is barred by res judicata. It is now settled that even if the cause of action for a suit is a recurring one every matter decided in the suit may be res judicata which was substantially and directly in issue.

The result is that the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

This judgment will also govern Letters Patent Appeal No. 21 of 1924.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

DRONAMRAJU VENKATASURYA NARAYANAMURTHY—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Scheme—Provision for redress by application to Court, legality of—Application by archakas for salary payable by trustee, whether sustainable.

A general clause in a scheme framed under s. 92, C. P. C., providing for application to the Court with regard to the scheme is ultra vires as being opposed to the principle of s. 92, C. P. C., since for such matters as are covered by the section, the sanction of the Advocate-General must be obtained. [p. 555, col. 2.]

An application by archakas of a temple to a Court for recovery of the arrears of their salaries is not competent even if the scheme provides for making an application to the Court by the trustee or any other person interested in regard to any matter arising out of the scheme. The proper remedy in such a case is by way of a regular suit. [p. 555, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Narasapur, dated the 6th September 1922, and made in I. A. No. 255 of 1922, in O. S. No. 46 of 1918, Mr. A. Satyanarayana, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants who are archakas of a temple applied to the Subordinate Judge of Narasapur to direct the defendant trustee, to pay them their salary due for seven months. The Subordinate Judge dismissed their application and they prefer this appeal.

The contention of the appellants is that there is a provision in the scheme for an application of this kind and, therefore, the Subordinate Judge was wrong in refusing their prayer. Paragraph 14 of the scheme is as follows:—

"Liberty to apply to the Court is hereby granted to the trustee or to any person interested in regard to any matter arising out of this scheme or seeking any modification thereof."

The appellants are only archakas of the temple. If the trustee does not pay their salary, their remedy is by a suit. If the contention of the appellants is to be upheld it would mean that a Court is to administer the trust-estate in which a scheme is framed—could it be said that a person who gives credit to the trustee for temple expenses is entitled to apply to the Court, to direct the trustee to pay the amount due to him? We are clearly of opinion that the appellants have mistaken their remedy and they have no right to move the Court by virtue of para. 14 of the scheme already referred to, to apply to the Court for relief.

The appellants rely upon Prayag Doss Ji Varu v. Tirumala Srirangacharlavaru (1), Damodarbhat v. Bhogilal (2) and Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Tirumala Purisa Srirangacharryulu (3). In view of the recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sevak Jeranchod Bhogilal v. Dakore Temple Committee (4) the above decisions cannot be considered good law; and it is unnecessary to consider that question, as the appellants do not ask for execution of the decree wherein the scheme is set out but for reliefs, in respect of services rendered to the temple. Granting that para. 14 gives power to persons interested in the scheme to apply to the Court for relief, the appellants are not persons who come within its purview. In this connection we are constrained to observe that a general clause in the scheme providing for application to the Court with regard to the scheme is ultra vires. No doubt such a clause was put in many schemes and such clause is opposed to the principle of s. 92 C. P. C. For such of the matters as are covered by s. 92, the sanction of the Advocate General is to be obtained. By the introduction of a clause in the scheme that applications for the removal of the trustee and for the framing of a new scheme can be made to a Court, s. 92 C. P. C. is practically given the go-by.

The introduction of such a clause will throw upon the Court not only the heavy burden of deciding petty applications of a vexatious nature but also of practically administering the trust institution. The Court should as far as possible be saved the trouble of directly or indirectly interfering with the internal management of temples and trust properties. It is not the function of a Civil Court to concern itself with the management of any institution except in so far as it is permitted by the C. P. C. In Ayinaville Narayanamurthi v. Bulusu Achayya Sastrulu (5) the learned Judges observe at page 691 "It is far from desirable that Courts should assume themselves the continued supervision of institutions, for the management of which they are called upon to frame schemes". They further remark "We are disposed to consider, though in the view we are taking, it is unnecessary to decide the point, that such decrees are really ultra vires having regard to the express provisions of s. 92 of the C. P. C., which makes it imperative that for the purpose of getting, certain reliefs in respect of public charities suits should be instituted by persons interested after getting the sanction of the Advocate-General". Ayinaville Narayanamurthi v. Bulusu Achayya Sastrulu (5) was followed by Spencer and Madhavan Nair, JJ. in C. M. A. No. 75 of 1925.

The cause of action of the appellants is purely a private one and it has nothing to do with the scheme and, therefore, their application was rightly dismissed by the lower Court.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 124 OF 1923.
June 24, 1925.
Present:—Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Ross.
LACHMAN SAHAY AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
GAURI CHARAN MAHTON AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding, non-transferable, transfer of—Rent, suit for, whether lies—Suit by transferee for declaration that rent-decree is void, maintainability of.

Where an occupancy tenant of a non-transferable holding transfers such holding, the landlord may, if he chooses, ignore the sale and bring a rent suit as against his tenant, and in execution of the decree obtained in such suit proceed to bring the holding to sale.

In such a case the transferee of the holding has no locus standi to maintain a suit for a declaration that the decree obtained by the landlord is invalid.

Appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 16th September 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, Barh, dated the 18th March 1922.

Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bimala Charan Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMEMT.

Das, J.—There is a deficit Court-fee of Rs. 80-4-0 due from the plaintiffs-respondents on their plaint and on their memorandum of appeal in the Court below. They are given seven days' time to make good the deficiency; if they fail to do so their suit in the Court of first instance will stand dismissed and the appeal in this Court will stand decreed with costs in all the Courts.

I now proceed to deal with the case on the understanding that the deficiency will be made good. The plaintiffs, who are respondents before us, sued the appellants, the defendants first party, for a declaration that, "the decree passed on the 30th of March, 1920 in Rent Suit No. 1964 of 1919 and the auction sale held on the 15th of November, 1920 in Execution Case No. 861 of 1920 are irregular, against the provisions of law and fraudulent and are fit to be set aside and rendered null and void."

The facts, are these. The defendants second party had a holding of 5 bighas of kasht land under the defendants first party. They transferred the entire holding to the plaintiffs. Thereafter the landlords brought a rent suit as against the defendants second party, obtained a decree against them, proceeded to execute the decree, and in due course purchased the holding at a sale held in execution of their decree.

The plaintiffs contend that there is a custom of transferability of occupancy holdings in the village and that the decree obtained by the landlords against the defendants second party is fraudulent and not binding upon them. The Court of first instance found that there was no custom of transferability of occupancy holdings in the village. The learned Judge in the Court below has not gone into that question, but he has come to the conclusion that assuming that the decision of the Court of first instance on this point is right, the plaintiffs are still entitled to succeed on the ground that the decree obtained by the landlords as against the defendants second party was fraudulent. In my opinion the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported. If there is no custom of transferability of occupancy holdings in the village, the plaintiffs have no cause of action and their suit should be dismissed on that ground. The learned Subordinate Judge was under the impression that the landlords had to bring a suit for ejectment as against the purchaser. In my opinion this is not right. The landlords may if they choose ignore the sale and proceed to bring a rent suit as against their tenants. This is the course which they adopted; and they are undoubtedly entitled to succeed unless it be established that there is a custom of transferability of occupancy holdings in the village.

I must set aside the judgment and the decree passed by the Court below and remand the case to that Court for disposal of the question as to the custom of transferability of occupancy holdings in the village. This judgment will not be signed by us until the 30th of this month. Costs will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Miscellaneous Second Civil Appeal No. 1982 of 1925.
February 22, 1926.
Present:—Mr. Justice Dalip Singh.
Musammat MANGLI and others—Defendants—Appellants
versus
POHU RAM and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 4 23—Appeal by one of plaintiffs only—Question, whether plaintiffs were collaterals—Finding that appellant was collateral—Remand of entire case, legality of.

Where in a suit for possession of property by several plaintiffs as collaterals of the last owner, only one of the plaintiffs appeals with regard to his own share and the sole question to be determined in appeal is whether the appellant was a collateral of the deceased, a finding of the Appellate Court that the appellant was a collateral of the deceased, on the basis of a pedigree-table covering the case of all the plaintiffs, does not empower the Court to remand the whole case, including that of the plaintiffs who have not appealed. The terms of O. XLI, r. 4, C. P. C., do not apply to such a case.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 9th June 1925, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Third Class, Ferozepore, dated the 4th December 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole point in this appeal is whether O. XLI, r. 4, applies to the facts of this case, and whether under that rule the District Judge had power to remand the whole case for decision. It appears that four plaintiffs sued for possession of certain property on the ground that they were the collaterals of the last male owner Munshi Ram and that one Musammat Mangli, who claimed to hold as the widow of Ram Chand, had no right to possession of the property.

The Trial Court found that the plaintiffs had not proved that they were collaterals of Munshi Ram and dismissed the suit. This was the only issue decided by the Trial Court, though four other issues had also been framed.

One of the plaintiffs Pohu Ram appealed to the District Judge only to the extent of his share. He paid Court-fee only to that extent. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the pedigree table propounded by the plaintiffs had been proved, and accepted the appeal of Pohu Ram and remanded the whole case for decision on the ground that the decision proceeded on a point common to the case of all the plaintiffs. The defendants have appealed against the remand of the whole case.

In my opinion it is clear that the terms of O. XLI, r. 4, do not apply to this case. The issue was whether the plaintiffs were or were not collaterals of Munshi Ram. Now, it is perfectly open to the Courts to hold that Pohu Ram was a collateral without proceeding to decide whether the other plaintiffs were or were not collaterals. It is true that the pedigree-table propounded covered the case of all the plaintiffs, but it was not necessary for the purposes of the appeal of Pohu Ram to decide whether the whole of that pedigree-table was correct. It was perfectly sufficient to hold that qua Pohu Ram it was correct. The rights of the collaterals were clearly separate rights with regard to their own shares and I cannot hold that the learned District Judge was empowered by the mere fact that he accepted the whole of the evidence originally led by the plaintiffs to prove their case to confer jurisdiction on himself to remand the whole case including that of the plaintiffs who had not appealed. There has been a change in the present Code and the words are no longer " decision appealed against," but decree appealed from, and further it is laid down that " any one of the plaintiffs may appeal from the whole decree and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse etc." In this case there was no appeal from the whole decree. It does not, in my opinion, make any difference that the grounds of the appeal cover the whole decision.

I, therefore, accept this appeal and vary the order of the learned District Judge to this extent that the case will be remanded for decision on the remaining issues only as to the share of Pohu Ram, namely, one-third. The respondents shall pay the costs of the appellants for this appeal. The other costs will abide the event.

KANHIRATHOTIKAYIL ITHALUTTY—Respondent.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 7 (1), 17—Redemption of kanom, suit for—Damages, claim for—Court-fee payable.

Where in a suit for redemption of a kanom, the plaintiff seeks to deduct from the kanom amount certain damages to which he claims to be entitled, he is bound to pay Court-fee not only on the kanom amount but also an ad valorem fee on the amount claimed as damages.

When damages are sued for, s. 7 (1) of the Court Fees Act must apply, and redemption and damages are two distinct subjects as contemplated by s. 17.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Calicut, in I. A. No. 1123 of 1924, in O. S. No. 286 of 1923.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. Parameshwara Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Petitioner is plaintiff in O. S. No. 286 of 1923 on the file of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Calicut. He sues to redeem certain land granted on kanom and seeks to deduct from the kanom amount certain damages to which he claims to be entitled. The question is whether he need pay Court-fee only on the kanom amount, or whether as held by the lower Court, he must also pay an ad valorem fee on the amount claimed as damages.

The petitioner relies upon Eacharan Pattar v. Appu Patter (1) but there it was simply a question of taking an account of rents due on the original contract. Here, there is the additional cause of action that the defendant committed a tort. Reference under Court Fees Act, s. 5 (2) is also a question of rents. I do not think that petitioner can draw any useful analogy between improvements and damages. Improvements are specially provided for in Madras Act (I of 1900) and it was early held that they would not affect the Court-fee. Zamorin of Calicut v. Surya Narayana Bhatta (3) I find no authority for extending this principle to damages; and it cannot be said to be intended by the phrase "or otherwise" in s. 6 (2), Madras Act (I of 1900).

The petitioner also contends that this is a mortgage suit in which any question of damages must necessarily be only one of account. The only authority he can cite is the observation in Ragavaji Sait v. Annamalai Mudali (4) (which was not a mortgage suit but a suit between principle and agent:) "Even if this suit be regarded as a suit for damages based on fraud and not as a suit for account." I agree with the lower Court that when damages are sued for s. 7 (1) of the Court Fees Act must apply and redemption and damages are two distinct subjects as contemplated by s. 17.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

Note.—The petitioner says that he relied upon Parasurama Pattar v. Venkatachalam Pattar (5), Thekkemannengath Raman v. Kakkesseri Pazhiyot Manakkal (6) and not upon Ragavaji Sait v. Annamali Mudali (4). These two cases deal with the point whether (1) a claim for rent (2) a claim for damages for breach of contract are barred at the time of redemption. I did not and do not consider that these rulings affect the question.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 70—Mortgage—Execution admitted—Proof, necessity of—Executant pardanashin lady—Consideration, proof of.

Admission of execution of a document dispenses with necessity of its proof. [p. 559, col. 1.]

But where the defendant executant of the deed is an illiterate pardanashin lady the mere admission of her execution of the document is not sufficient to dispense with the necessity of proving the passing of consideration. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 25th July 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Barh, dated the 3rd December 1921.

Mr. A. K. Ray, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. M. Niamutullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit on mortgage. The Trial Court passed a decree for money holding that the mortgage-bond had not been proved as a mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree and decided the cross-appeal in favour of the defendant holding that no consideration passed.

With regard to the question of proof of the mortgage-bond it was contended on behalf of the appellant that the learned Subordinate Judge had erred in law. There was a clear admission of execution in the written statement. All the attesting witnesses were summoned but only one appeared and his statement was that the executant did not sign the deed in his presence. The plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to prove the execution by other evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge referred to the decision of this Court in Hira Bibi v. Ramdhan Lal (1) as laying down the proposition that where evidence is adduced which shows that the deed was not properly attested, an admission of the execution will not have the effect of establishing the document. It is true that there are remarks to that effect in the course of the judgment, but the decision followed the decision of the Calcutta High Court which laid down that admission of execution dispenses with the necessity of proof. Consequently in view of the clear admission of execution in the written statement it must be taken that this document was sufficiently proved.

But the question still remains whether any consideration passed and, on this point, there is a finding of fact against the appellant. It is contended that the burden of proof was wrongly thrown upon the plaintiff in view of the fact that there was an earlier admission by the defendant that she had borrowed this money from the plaintiff to pay off a rent decree. But that admission was made in the plaint in a contribution suit in which the present plaintiff was, according to the finding of the Court below, acting as agent on behalf of the defendant. Consequently the admission cannot have its natural effect inasmuch as it is practically the statement of the agent, i. e., the plaintiff. The defendant is an illiterate pardanashin lady and the mere admission of her execution of the document is not sufficient to dispense with the necessity of proving the passing of consideration. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was right in his treatment of the alleged admission in the plaint in the contribution suit, and there was no error of law in this part of his judgment. Consequently this appeal is concluded by the finding of fact and must be dismissed with costs.

As there is a deficit Court-fee due on the cross-appeal in the Court below, the defendant will not be allowed to execute the decree for costs until the deficit is made good.

Das, J.—I agree.

Custom v. *personal law—Alienation—Presumption—*Tarkhans of Hassan Abdal, Attock District.

In the case of a person who is not a member of an agricultural tribe and whose main occupation is not agriculture, there is no initial presumption against a free power of alienation. [p. 560, col. 1.]

In matters of alienation the tarkhans of Hassan Abdal in the Attock District are governed by their personal law and not by custom. [p. 560, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Campbellpur, dated the 29th April 1921.

Messrs. M. S. Bhagat and Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. C. Mehra and Devi Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for a declaration that a mortgage executed by the defendant Mohammad Ghaus on the 18th August 1920 shall not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs.

The Trial Court has granted a decree for the declaration sought. The case now comes before us on appeal from that decision. In the Court below the plaintiffs claimed that the mortgage in question was void inasmuch as the mortgagor was a minor at the time of executing the deed. They further contended that the parties were governed by custom, and that the property being ancestral Mohammad Ghaus had no absolute power of disposal. The defendant Lachhmi Narain; the mortgagee in question, on the other hand, contended that even if Mohammad Ghaus was a minor at the date in question the plaintiffs were estopped from setting up his minority to avoid the transaction, inasmuch as they had themselves benefited by it as they had received one-half of the mortgage money to redeem a prior mortgage made by Mohammad Ghaus to themselves in May 1920.

In the course of the arguments before us, however, Mr. Lal Chend Mehra for the respondents admitted that if custom is not established his case must fail. It is, therefore, only necessary to decide whether or not the parties are governed by custom or by Muhammadan Law in matters of alienation.

The parties are not members of an agricultural tribe nor is their main occupation agriculture, and there is, therefore, no initial presumption against free power of alienation. The evidence shows that Mohammad Ghaus is a shop-keeper dealing in shoes, lungis and caps, while his father used to work at a water-mill as a carpenter.

As there is, therefore, no presumption in favour of a restricted power of alienation it is necessary for the plaintiffs to prove a special custom in this respect. The Court below has held that a special custom restricting alienation has been proved, but it has based its decision on two cases in the High Court the first being No. 933 of 1911 decided in 1914 and the other No. 1582 decided in 1920. The former of these two cases decided merely that custom in this particular family governed the parties in a particular mode of succession to property and did not decide any point of custom in respect of alienation. The decision of the High Court in the other case was confined to dismissing an appeal from the District Judge on the ground that there was no certificate, and the decision of the District Judge in favour of custom restricting alienation was itself based on case No. 933 of 1911, which, as we have already pointed out, had nothing to say as to alienation. We may also point out that the first Court in that case had held that the parties were not governed by custom and it referred to Suit No. 630 of 1914 (Fazal Ilahi v. Umar) decided on the 11th December 1914 in which it was decided that tarkhans of the same village to which the parties belong were not governed by custom in respect of alienation.

The evidence in the present case directed to proving a special custom in restriction of alienation consists of the testimony of two witnesses, namely, Mohammad Kassam (P. W. No. 3) and Husain Bakhsh (P. W. No. 4) Mohammad Kassam states that Mohammad Ghaus is dealing in shoes, lungis and caps and that his father worked as a carpenter. In respect of the matter of custom he says as follows:—"We follow custom. Two cases went up to High Court." In other words he bases his view that the parties follow custom by reference to the two cases which we have already discussed.

Husain Bakhsh uses almost the identical expression used by this previous witness in attempting to prove custom. He says "We follow custom. In two cases tarkhans of Hassan Abdal have been declared as following custom." These are the same two cases referred to by the previous witness.

It is quite clear upon the evidence in this case that no special custom restricting parties in matters of alienation has been established. We must accordingly hold that personal law applies according to which the alienation by Mohammad Ghaus could not be challenged by the plaintiffs.

Although it is not necessary to decide the question as to whether or not Mohammad Ghaus was a minor when he effected the mortgage in question we have no doubt that he was in fact under 21 years of age; but we are also of opinion that the plaintiffs in view of their conduct are estopped from relying upon this fact to attack the mortgage executed in favour of Lachhmi Narain.

For these reasons we accept this appeal and setting aside the decree of the Trial Court dismiss the suit with costs.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 179 OF 1923.

DATTATRAYA KESHAV NAIK—
PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
GANGABAI NARAYAN NAIK—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 3, 35, 87—

Registration of document—Death of one of two executants—Admission of execution by surviving executant and widow of deceased executant—Registration, validity of—"Representative", definition of, whether exhaustive.

One of the two executants of a deed died before the deed could be registered. After his death a fresh clause was added to the deed giving a more detailed description of the properties to which the deed referred. This fresh clause was signed by the surviving executant and by one of the widows of the deceased executant, who signed as the guardian of the sons of the deceased who were infants and whose own mother was also alive. The document was then registered on an admission of execution by the surviving executant and the widow of the deceased executant who had signed the additional clause:

Held, (1) that the widow of the deceased who had signed the additional clause was a representative of the deceased executant within the meaning of s. 35 of the Registration Act and that the registration was, therefore, valid;

(2) that even if the widow was not a representative of her deceased husband within the meaning of s 35 the error of the registering officer in accepting her as such was only a defect in the procedure which was not sufficient to invalidate the registration.

The definition of the word "representative" as given in s. 3 of the Registration Act is not exhaustive.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Thana, in Suit No. 310 of 1921.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. A. Padhye (S. D. Sapre, appeared) and M. K. Thakore, for Respondents Nos. 5 and 8.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for Respondent No. 7.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J., and Coyajee, J. gave separate judgments dismissing the appeal on its merits.

Coyajee, J., remarked:—It was, however, contended before us, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the document Ex. 67 was not registered in accordance with the provisions of s. 35 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, it did not, therefore, affect any of the properties comprised therein, and was not receivable in evidence. The facts material to a correct appreciation of this contention are briefly these. On April 13, 1890, Keshav and Gopinath signed the document and it was also duly attested. In May 1890 Keshav died, before the document was registered. On August 11, 1890, a fresh clause was added giving a more detailed description of the properties. This was signed by Gopinath for himself, and Bai Gopikabai, the widow of Keshav, as the guardian of the plaintiff and his brother Shripal, both of whom were then infants. This was attested by the same set of attesting witnesses. The document was then duly registered. It is contended that it was not competent to Gopikabai, who was the step-mother of the plaintiff and Shripad to represent them, for their own mother Bhagirathibai was then, and is still, alive, and that this circumstance renders the registration invalid. The Trial Judge has, in para. 23 of his judgment, given his reasons for rejecting this contention. In my opinion, he was right. The document was executed by Keshav himself. The material portion of s. 35 is: "If the person executing the document is dead, and his representative or assign appears before the registering officer and admits the execution the registering officer shall register the document." The question is whether Gopikabai was competent to represent her husband Keshav for the purpose of admitting the execution of the document. The definition of the word "representative" as given in s. 3 of the Act is not exhaustive. In the circumstances of the case, I think, she was competent. But assuming that the registering officer was in error in accepting her as Keshav's "representative" for the said purpose, it was only a defect in procedure which was not sufficient to invalidate the registration. [Reference may be made to (1) s. 87 of the Act; (2) the observations of the Judicial Committee in Sah Mukhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondun Lall (1) and (3) Pakran v. Kunhammed, (2)]

For these reasons I agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit is for specific performance of a contract of sale entered into with him by the first defendant. The District Munsif gave a decree for specific performance and the Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal of the first defendant. He has preferred this second appeal.

The contention of the appellant is that the direction in the decree, "that first defendant do draw the above amount on discharging the decree in Original Suit No. 185 of 1910 of the principal District Munsif's Court of Madura and filing a copy of record of satisfaction," is bad in law. The argument of Mr. Rajah Ayyar is that when a decree for specific performance is given against the vendor, he should not be directed to redeem any encumbrance on the property which was not disclosed to the vendor. The agreement dated the 18th day of October, 1909, does not mention the existence of any encumbrance on the property contracted to be sold, nor is there any recital in it that there are no encumbrances on the property. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is that the first defendant did undertake to free the property from two encumbrances which were mentioned in the certificate of sale, Ex. C. The first defendant purchased the property in Court-auction in execution of his decree in Original Suit No. 141 of 1902. In the sale proclamation, he stated that the encumbrances had been discharged. In Ex. C which was drawn up by the Court there is a recital that the encumbrances have been discharged. Ths finding is that the first defendant knew that these encumbrances had not been discharged and that he undertook to discharge them when the agreement, Ex. A, was entered into. The question is when a vendor undertakes to discharge the encumbrances on the property, whether the Court decreeing specific performance can direct him to discharge the encumbrances before he is paid the consideration for the sale? The contention of Mr. Rajah Ayyar is that the Court should decree specific performance and if the vendee finds that there are encumbrances on the property he should bring a suit for damages against the seller. Under s. 55, cl. 1 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act, a seller is bound to discharge all the encumbrances on the property then existing. If the vendee is not aware of the existence of any encumbrance on the property when the contract of sale is entered into, and he comes to know of the existence of any encumbrances he can ask a seller to discharge those encumbrances before a sale is effected. When he sues for specific performance of the contract of sale could it be said that he is not entitled to have a direction in the decree that the seller should discharge the encumbrances on the property before he is paid the consideration for the sale? The provisions contained in s. 18 (c) of the Specific Relief Act apply to this case. Where the vendor professes to sell unencumbered property and if it is afterwards found that the property is mortgaged for an amount not exceeding the purchase-money, the purchaser may then compel the seller to obtain a conveyance from the mortgagee or himself pay off the encumbrances out of the unpaid purchase-money. Here, on the finding of fact that the vendor undertook to discharge the encumbrances, the purchaser was entitled to insist upon his discharging them, before a conveyance is effected through Court. He is entitled to ask the Court to give a direction in the decree that the encumbrances should be discharged before the consideration for the sale is paid to him.

Considerable argument was advanced by Mr. Rajah Ayyar that the provisions of s. 55 do not apply to executory contracts, in other words, the covenants contained in s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act apply only to completed sales and not to agreements of sales. Under s. 55 the seller is bound to do certain things. One of them is to answer to the best of his information all relevant questions which may be put to him by the buyer in respect of the property and the title thereto and the other is to produce before the buyer on his request for examination all documents of title relating to the property which are in the seller's possession. It cannot be said that these two things should be done after the sale is effected. The covenants contained in s. 55 apply to contracts of sale as well as to completed contracts. In this connection with great respect I am unable to agree with the reasoning of Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in Adikesavan Naidu v. Gurunatha Chetti (1) Abdur Rahim, J., was of opinion that the covenants contained in s. 55 apply to contracts of sale as well.

It is argued for the appellant that it was open to the plaintiff to repudiate the contract and to claim damages when the vendor was not able to give him a clear title. No doubt the vendee can repudiate the contract of sale if he finds that the vendor has no title to convey or that the property is encumbered. Vide Reeve v. Beeridge (2). The case in Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., Ltd. v. Mohammad Fazl-ul-Karim (3) does not apply to the facts of this case. There it was held that it was open to the vendee to resist a suit for specific performance on the ground that the defects in the property were not disclosed by the vendor. But here the first defendant did undertake to discharge the encumbrances on the property and the plaintiff is entitled to enforce the terms of that agreement. The argument that s. 18 (c) applies only to undisclosed encumbrances and does not apply to cases where the vendor undertakes to discharge the encumbrances on the property before the sale cannot be accepted. When the vendor undertakes to discharge the encumbrances on the property, he contracts to sell the property unencumbered and, therefore, cl. (c) applies to a case like this. The Court granting specific relief is entitled to direct the vendor to discharge the encumbrances which he undertook to do before he is paid the consideration for the sale. The clause in the decree objected to is perfectly legal. In this connection I may refer to recent decision of Spencer and Viswanatha Sastri, JJ., in Venkataranga Iyer v. Ramaswami Iyer (4) in which a similar direction was given by them.

It is stated that the amount secured by the two mortgages on the property which the vendor undertook to discharge is about Rs. 300 or Rs. 400. As the consideration for the sale is Rs. 1,950, the direction in the decree may be varied by directing that the amount which would be necessary to discharge the encumbrances be kept in deposit and the balance be drawn by the first defendant. This would be an equitable arrangement as the plaintiff cannot be damnified to a larger extent than the amount of the two mortgagees. If the mortgagees try to enforce their mortgages the amount in Court would be sufficient to meet their demands and the first defendant need not be kept out of a large sum of money by reason of a portion thereof being necessary to meet the demands of the mortgagees.

With this modification I dismiss the second appeal with costs.

MISCELLANEOUS SECOND CIVIL APPEAL
No. 2569 OF 1925.
February 17, 1926.
Present:—Mr. Justice Campbell.
MAULA BUX—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
CHANAN MAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS —RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 3, 4—Appeal from injunction decree—Death of one of several plaintiffs-respondents—Legal representatives not brought on record in time—Abatement in toto.

Where in an appeal from a decree issuing mandatory injunction to the defendant restraining him from opening windows in a particular wall of his house one of the several plaintiffs-respondents dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record the appeal abates in toto. [p. 564, col. 1]

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 19th June 1925.

Mr. Chandra Gupta, for Lala Faqir Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case four plaintiffs obtained a decree against Maula

Bakhsh defendant for mandatory injunction restraining him from opening windows in the southern wall of his house No. 6220 under construction situate in Batala City. Maula Bakhsh appealed to the District Court. During the pendency of the appeal one of the plaintiffs Bhagat Ram died and application was not made in time to substitute his legal representatives on the record. The learned District Judge rejected an application to set aside the abatement of the appeal against Bhagat Ram and dismissed the appeal in toto on account of the abatement.

In second appeal it is argued, firstly, that the abatement against Bhagat Ram should have been set aside and, secondly, that in spite of it the appeal could have proceeded against the remaining respondents.

No sufficient cause was alleged in the affidavit accompanying Maula Bakhsh's application to set aside the abatement and the application was rightly refused. On the other point the test is whether appeal could have been preferred by Maula Bakhsh without joining Bhagat Ram as a respondent. In that case Bhagat Ram would have had, as his legal representatives now have, a final decree in their favour that the defendant is not to open windows in the wall of his house, and it would be impossible for a fresh decree to be passed in appeal against the surviving respondents altering the decree under appeal which would result in any effectual relief of the appellant. Furthermore a Court hearing an appeal must have before it all persons whose interests might be affected by the decree in appeal. The argument addressed to me that Bhagat Ram and all the several plaintiffs could have instituted separate suits for the injunction and, therefore, an appeal could proceed against any one of them without the others has no force. The joint suit has been brought and has resulted in a decree and to examine the correctness of that decree as regards the surviving plaintiffs-respondents in the face of the absolute decree in favour of the representatives of Bhagat Ram would be altogether nugatory. The lower Appellate Court was correct in dismissing the appeal.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 635 OF 1925.

April 17, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir Lallubhai Shah, KT.

KISHOREDAS P. MANGALDAS—PLAINTIFF

versus

AHMED SULEMAN—DEFENDANT.

Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act (II of 1918), s. 9—Landlord and tenant—Tenancy terminating during continuance of Act—Ejectment after Act ceases to be applicable—Notice to quit, whether necessary.

There is nothing in the provisions of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act to justify the contention that the contractual tenancy which, apart from the provisions of the Act, exists between a landlord and tenant cannot be terminated during the continuance of the Act. Where such tenancy has been terminated by a proper notice to quit during the continuance of the Act, the mere fact that the tenant is entitled to retain possession of the premises while the Act remains in force is not sufficient to create any such relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties as would require a fresh notice to terminate it after the provisions of the Act have ceased to be applicable to the premises. The right of the tenant to continue in possession of the premises occupied by him under the provisions of the Act is a statutory right the limits of which are to be found in the terms of the Statute; and the moment the Statute ceases to extend that protection to him he ceases to have the protection as against the landlord which the Statute gave him up to a certain period. Thereafter his possession with reference to the premises is that of a tenant holding over whose tenancy had been terminated, and he is not entitled to any fresh notice to quit. [p. 567, col. 1.]

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, (with him Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, KT.), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Kemp, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is one of the three suits in which the question arises as to whether after the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, II of 1918, has ceased to apply to a particular set of premises, the tenant is entitled to a fresh notice to terminate the tenancy even though a notice terminating the tenancy has been given by the landlord during the time when the Act was in operation. This particular suit has been fully heard and the parties have adduced evidence on all the points. At the instance of the learned Counsel for the defendants in the other two suits I have heard the parties in those suits also on the question of notice, which is common to all these three suits. But in dealing with the point I shall refer only to the facts of this case. The plaintiff sues to recover possession of a certain shop, which is described as shop No. 3, situated at the junction of Shaikh Memon Street and Janjirkar Street and which is one of a group of shops known as Green Market. The defendant was a monthly tenant on the basis of a lunar month. In 1918 he used to pay Rs. 120 as rent but after the Rent Act came into force he paid at Rs 72-6 0 per month as standard rent. On July 29, 1924, the plaintiff gave one month's notice calling upon the defendant to vacate the premises on Shravan Vad 30th, Samvat 1980, corresponding with August 30, 1924. The premises in question were used for the purposes of business and not as a dwelling house, and the protection which the tenant had under the Rent Act terminated on August 31, 1924. There was some correspondence between the parties which commenced in January 1925. In the course of that correspondence the plaintiff stated that he would charge Rs. 200 per month for the period during which the defendant was wrongfully holding over. The defendant offered to pay 60 per cent. over and above the standard rent, which would be nearly the rent which he was paying before the Rent Act came into force, i. e., nearly Rs. 120. But the plaintiff did not accept the defendant's offer, and insisted upon his paying Rs. 200 per month if he wanted to continue as a tenant. He filed the present suit on March 3, 1925, to recover possession on the basis that the tenancy had been duly terminated by the notice of July 29 and claiming compensation for the period during which the tenant held over after the period of the notice at the rate of Rs. 200 per month.

The principal defence is that the notice of July 29 is ineffective because the defendant remained in possession according to law after August 30 under the provisions of the Statute at least for one day. That gave him, it is contended, the position of a tenant according to the Act and as no notice terminating that tenancy was given, there was no effectual termination of the tenancy. It is also contended that the amount claimed by the plaintiff is too high under the circumstances if the notice is found to be effective.

I shall first deal with the question which relates to the notice. Though the question has been argued at some length it seems to me that the point is very narrow. Apart from the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act (II of 1918) it is clear that the defendant was a monthly tenant of the plaintiff and his predecessor-in-title, and it was open to the plaintiff to terminate that tenancy by one month's notice according to the lunar month. The notice given is clearly one month's notice. Apart from the provisions of the Rent Act it is not disputed and it cannot be disputed, that the notice is a perfectly good notice to terminate the monthly tenancy which existed between the parties. It is urged, however, that under the provisions of s. 9 of the Rent Act, so long as the defendant pays or is ready and willing to pay rent to the full extent allowable by the Act and performs the conditions of the tenancy, he is a tenant in spite of the notice to terminate the tenancy. No doubt the word "tenant" is used in s. 9 of the Act; and it is contended that as a result of that provision his position on August 31 was that of a tenant of the defendant and that in spite of the notice the original tenancy continued under the Statute which required a further notice to terminate it after the provisions of the Act ceased to apply after August 31. It seems to me that this contention is not sound. Apart from the Statute the tenancy is a matter of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant and in spite of the Statute it is perfectly open to the landlord to give a proper notice terminating that tenancy. It is equally clear that under the provisions of the Act in spite of the termination of such tenancy the tenant can continue in possession. No order for the recovery of possession of the premises can be made against the tenant so long as he pays or is ready and willing to pay rent to the extent allowable by the Act. In the view I take of the case, this would mean that on August 31 no order for the recovery of possession of these premises could be made against him if he was willing to pay the standard rent on that day. But when the provisions of the Act ceased to apply after August 31, 1924 there was in fact no tenancy to terminate. After August 30, on which the contractual tenancy terminated, he could remain in possession only under the provisions of the Statute which gave him the right to remain in possession subject to the conditions as to payment of rent and other conditions with which we are not concerned. But the moment the Statute ceased to have operation in his favour his position with reference to the premises is that of a tenant holding over, whose tenancy has been terminated. On a consideration of all the arguments urged on both sides, I have come to this conclusion and I have stated the view which I take of the legal position of the defendant after the notice was given and after he ceased to have the benefit of the Rent Act. It has been urged that as the word "tenant" is used in sub-s. (1) of s. 9, the Legislature has given him the position of a tenant during the period in which the Act is in force and he is entitled to all the rights and remedies which a tenant would have against the landlord as if he was a monthly tenant under a contract with his landlord. I am unable to accept this contention and I do not see how the mere use of the word "tenant" in s. 9 can justify this position.

Certain English decisions have been referred to in the argument before me and I shall refer only to two of them to show that the view taken by the English Courts on this point is not that the tenant, or the statutory tenant as he is called, is in the position of a tenant apart from the Statute, but that his rights and remedies, such as they are, are determined by the provisions of the Statute. In Shuter v. Hersh (1), it has been held that:—

"Where a tenant remains in possession under the provisions of the Increase of Rent, etc., Restrictions Act, 1920, after receiving notice to quit, there is no necessity for the landlord to give the tenant a fresh notice to quit before raising the rent to the extent permitted by the Act unless a new tenancy has been actually created, and the mere fact that the landlord accepts rent after giving the notice to quit cannot be taken as a waiver by him of the notice to quit so as to create a new tenancy."

Scrutton, L. J., refers to the entity described as the "statutory tenant" as the person who holds the land of another contrary to the will of that other, who strongly desires to turn him out. Such a person would not ordinarily be described as a tenant and in spite of the fact that he was described as a tenant in the parliamentary Statute the notice given to quit was accepted as a good notice and no further notice was considered necessary. I admit that the point which arises for decision in the present case did not arise for decision in that case, but the observations with regard to the validity of the notice given during the continuance of the protection of the Act to the tenant are useful in dealing with the present point.

The other case is the case of Keeves v. Dean (2). With reference to the point that arose in that case as to whether a statutory tenant would have the right to assign his right to retain possession it was held that the right of a statutory tenant was merely a personal right to retain possession of the premises and could not be assigned to another person. The following observations of Scrutton, L J., are useful (page 694)* :—

"This case is another stage in the unwelcome task which Parliament has imposed upon the Courts of defining the position of the 'statutory tenant.' My Lord has objected to his being called by that name, on the ground that he is not a tenant at all. But it is a convenient expression, and, although it is true that before the passing of these Acts no one would have spoken of a person who after the expiry of his tenancy remained in possession against the will of his landlord as a tenant, Parliament has certainly called him a tenant, and he appears to me to have something more than a personal right against his landlord. I take it that he has a right as against all the world to remain in possession until he is turned out by an order of the Court, and that he could maintain trespass against any person who entered the premises without his permission. However, it does not much matter what he is called so long as it is clear that one is speaking of a person who holds over after the expiry of his tenancy against his landlord's will."

I may also refer to Kalianmal Tillockchand v. Dharamsey Jetha & Co. (3) where the learned Chief Justice makes the following observations with regard to the position of a person entitled to remain in possession under the Statute (page 144†) :—

"The plaintiff was entitled to terminate under the ordinary rules of law the contract which had been established between him and the defendants by the consent decree, and on August 31, 1922, when the plaintiff's notice expired that tenancy terminated. Had it not been for the Rent Act, the defendants would have been bound to vacate, but under its provisions they might remain in possession, and under s. 9 no order for the recovery of possession of the premises could be made so long as they paid or were ready and willing to pay rent to the full extent allowable by the Act, and perform the conditions of the tenancy. I presume that would mean the conditions of the tenancy existing between the parties before the agreement terminated, which would be continued to that extent by virtue of those words if the tenant remained in possession under the Act."

The decisions do not deal with the point which arises in the present case. But they throw a very useful light upon the position of the person, who remains in possesion under the protection of the Statute after the contractual tenancy between him and his landlord has been duly terminated by a notice given during the period in which the Act is in force. I do not see any reason why on principle the landlord should be required to give a fresh notice to terminate a tenancy which in fact does not exist. So far as the contractual tenancy between him and his tenant is concerned it has been duly terminated and there is nothing in the provisions of the Rent Act to justify the contention, that it cannot be terminated during the continuance of the Act. The mere fact that the tenant is entitled to retain possession while the Act remains in force is not sufficient, in my opinion, to create any such relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties as would require a fresh notice to terminate it. In fact it is a statutory right the limits of which are to be found in the terms of the Statute; and the moment the Statute ceases to extend that protection to him he ceases to have the protection as against the landlord which the Statute gave him up to a certain period. In the present case there is no scope for the argument that by accepting the rent, the landlord has waived the notice to quit and has treated the contractual tenancy as subsisting. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the notice given on July 29 to the defendant was effectual and valid and put an end to the tenancy between the plaintiff and the defendant, and the fact that he was in rightful possession of the premises under the Statute for one day against the will of the landlord does not constitute any such change in the legal relationship of the parties as would render any further notice necessary to terminate the tenancy.

My finding, therefore, on the first issue is in the affirmative.

[The learned Judge awarded Rs. 125 a month as compensation.]

MAUNG SAN MIN AND ANOTHER—

MAUNG PO HLAING AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (b)—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Suit for recovery of possession of immoveable property—Allegation that possession was given to defendant as security for advance of Rs. 100 or upwards—Oral evidence, admissibility of.

Where a plaintiff seeks to recover possession of immoveable property on the allegation that possession of the property was given to the defendant as security for a loan of Rs. 100 or upwards, but without the execution of any registered instrument, oral evidence is not admissible to prove the transaction alleged by the plaintiff. [p. 569, col. 2.]

Civil reference made by Mr. Justice Carr, in Special Civil Second Appeal No. 303 of 1923, dated 20th May 1925.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Carr, J.—The plaintiffs in this suit set out that they borrowed Rs. 125 from the defendants and handed over their land temporarily, the land to be returned whenever required. The defendants denied this and alleged that the plaintiffs had made over the land absolutely in satisfaction of a debt of Rs. 355, and had agreed to execute a registered deed when required.

The plaintiffs' prayer was for possession of the land unconditionally.

The Sub-Divisional Judge held, on the authority of Ma Htwe v. Maung Lun (1), that the transaction set up by the plaintiffs was in effect a mortgage and that it could not be proved. He further held that the defendants had proved the agreement for sale. He dismissed the suit.

(1) 33 Ind. Cas. 163; 8 L. B. R. 334; 9 Bur. L. T. 114.

The District Judge considered that the plaint was skilfully worded—because it avoided the use of the word 'mortgage.' He said that no mortgage was the basis of the claim and that the question whether the transaction was a mortgage or a sale did not arise. He relied upon two unauthorised reports—Maung Aung v. Maung Shwe Lin (2) and Mg. Po Kin v. Mg. Oh (3). He proceeded to consider the plaintiffs' evidence as to the nature of the transaction and held that the plaintiffs had proved their case. He considered, however, that the plaintiffs were not unconditionally entitled to possession and gave them a decree for possession on re-payment of Rs. 125.

In effect he has allowed the plaintiffs to prove an invalid mortgage and has given them a decree for redemption. The transaction set up by the plaintiffs, and which the District Judge has held proved, was in the nature of an usufructuary mortgage, and would have been such a mortgage had it been effected by a duly registered deed. Its nature is in no way changed by the omission to describe it by its specific name. Thus the decision is contrary to the ruling in Ma Htwe's case (1).

That was a ruling by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, and remains binding. But I think that, in view of the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Maung Myat Tha Zan v. Ma Dun (4), this ruling requires consideration. In the last named case the principle of part performance was accepted on equitable grounds, and it was held that a person in possession under a sale which was invalid for want of a registered deed should be held to be in possession under a contract for sale, could set this up as a valid defence and could adduce evidence to prove the transaction.

The equitable considerations on which that decision was based seem to me to apply equally to a case such as the present. If it is inequitable to allow the giver of possession to recover possession in contravention of his agreement, then it is equally inequitable to allow the receiver of possession to retain possession in contravention of his agreement.

I am fortified in this view by the case of Jogendra Krishna Roy v. Kurpal Harshi & Co. (5). In that case the defendants had taken a three years' tenancy of certain premises on an oral agreement. It was held that a tenancy was created in law and that the defendants were liable for damages when they repudiated the tenancy within the three years. It was laid down generally—

> "When in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite legal documents have not been executed and registered, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, provided that specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined."

Reading this case along with Maung Myat Tha Zan's case (4), it would seem that the transaction in the present case must be considered as an agreement to mortgage and that the plaintiff is entitled to prove and to enforce it. But this conclusion is opposed to the decision in Ma Htwe's case (1).

I, therefore, refer the following questions for decision by a Bench or a Full Bench as the Chief Justice may direct:—

1. When a plaintiff alleges that possession of immovable property has been given to the defendant as security for a loan of Rs, 100 or upwards, but without the execution of any registered instrument, is oral evidence admissible to prove the transaction?
2. If so, and if the transaction is proved, is the plaintiff entitled to a decree for recovery of possession of the property on payment of the amount of the loan?

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

Robinson, C. J.—The questions referred for decision by the Full Bench are: (1) When a plaintiff alleges that possession of immoveable property has been given to the defendant as security for a loan of Rs. 100 or upwards, but without the execution of any registered instrument, is oral evidence admissible to prove the transaction? (2) If so, and if the transaction is proved, is the plaintiff entitled to a decree for recovery of possession of the property on payment of the amount of the loan?

(4) 81 Ind. Cas. 857; 2 R. 285; 3 Bur L. J. 78; A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 214.

(5) 68 Ind. Cas. 993; A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 63; 49 C. 345; 35 C. L J. 175.

It may be open to question in this case whether the plaintiff sued basing her claim on a usufructuary mortgage but the learned Judge finds and for the purposes of this reference, I think we must take it, that the suit was based on the alleged usufructuary mortgage; that being so, the case falls within the purview of the Full Bench ruling in Ma Htwe v. Maung Lun (1). The suit should, therefore, be dismissed and no question of the admissibility of oral evidence to prove the transaction arises. It must be remembered that there is a marked distinction in these cases between those relating to an inchoate mortgage and an inchoate sale. In the latter it is open to the party in possession of the land who has bought without obtaining a registered deed of conveyance to sue for specific performance of the contract to sell. There is no right to sue for specific performance possessed by a mortgagor who has given his land in mortgage without securing his right of redemption by a registered-deed of mortgage. There is no contest between the Full Bench ruling cited and the Full Bench decision in Maung Myat Tha Zan v. Ma Dun (4). This being the state of the law, the second question referred does not arise at all, but I think it will be well to explain my views in this somewhat difficult question. Had the plaintiff brought a suit merely alleging that she was the owner of the land and that the defendant was in wrongful possession thereof and claiming a decree for possession based on her title alone, there would be no objection to such a suit lying. I note that in the order of reference in Ma Htwe's case (1), Sir Charles Fox suggests this:—Had such a suit been brought and the defendant applied that he was in possession under a contract of sale which had not been completed by the execution of a registered-deed it would be open to the defendant to lead evidence to prove a contract to sell and if he had established that contract he would have been entitled to retain possession even though he had not properly registered the conveyance. That is laid down in Maung Myat Tha Zan's case (4), and is in accordance with a large number of authorities of other Indian High Courts. It would be also open to him to sue for specific performance and, on obtaining a decree, to complete his title. Even if he had failed in such a suit he would still be entitled to retain possession as against the plaintiff.

In my opinion it was open to the plaintiff in this case to have brought a suit based solely on her title. Defendant admits her title and if he fails to prove the contract to sell which he alleges, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree. That decree must be made conditional on her re-paying the money advanced not with the intention of granting her practically a decree for redemption but by ordering re payment on equitable grounds. Even if this were held to be impossible on the ground that no charge is created on the land for the amount advanced, it would be open to the defendant to bring a suit for the return of the money. The reason why different principles apply to the admissibility of evidence to prove a contract to mortgage and a contract to sell is that in the latter the defendant is entitled to claim specific performance and in the former case, he is not. The answer to the first question referred is in the negative unless it is the defendant, who seeks to lead that evidence in order to obtain from the Court equitable relief in the shape of a decree, conditioned, subject to the return of the money advanced. I would answer the second question referred to in the negative on this suit as it is held to have been framed.

Doyle, J.—I concur.

Brown, J.—I agree that the answer to the first question referred must be in the negative. If a suit is brought to redeem a mortgage, which is invalid for want of a registered-deed of sale, that suit must clearly fail and evidence cannot be brought to prove the transaction. The finding in Ma Htwe v. Maung Lun (1), on this point does not, in my opinion, conflict with the Full Bench decision in Maung Myat Tha Zan v. Ma Dun (4). I also agree with the remarks of the learned Chief Justice as to what the position would be if the plaintiff had brought a suit merely alleging that she was the owner of the land and that the defendant was in wrongful possession thereof and claiming a decree for possession based on her title alone. In such a suit it would be open to the defendant to bring evidence to show that he was in possession under a contract of sale and it would then probably be open to the plaintiff to bring rebutting evidence to show what the terms of the contract really were. From a perusal of the plaint, it seems to me to be at least open to doubt whether the plaintiff did not bring a suit of the nature in the present case, but that is not the question which has been referred to us and the learned Judge who has referred the matter would appear to hold otherwise. My answer to the first question referred being in the negative the second question does not arise.

KISHENPRASAD & Co. LTD.—PLAINTIFFS
RAJARAM RAMHARAKH AND OTHERS
—DEFENDANTS.

Trust—Breach of trust—Participation in division of trust funds—Liability to refund trust moneys.

Defendant No. 1 was an employee of the plaintiffs and was entrusted by the latter with the cashing of a cheque for a large amount of money. He cashed the cheque and made away with the proceeds with the help of defendant No. 2, his brother. The proceeds were subsequently divided between the different defendants who were members of a joint Hindu family. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were tried for the offence of criminal breach of trust and were convicted. Plaintiffs subsequently brought a suit to recover from all the defendants the amount of money which had been embezzled by defendant No. 1 with the help of defendant No. 2:

Held, that defendant No. 1 having committed a breach of trust in which defendant No. 2 was an abetter and that the remaining defendants having afterwards been parties to a mis-application of the trust property in breach of the trust with notice of the trust, they were all liable to replace the trust moneys and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree. [p. 573, col. 1.]

Mr. B. J. Desai, for the Plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.—This is a very peculiar suit. The defendants are all members of a joint Hindu family, and in effect the plaintiffs are seeking to make all the members of this family liable for the embezzlement by defendant No. 1 with the aid of defendant No. 2 of a sum of Rs. 40,000 belonging to his employers, the plaintiffs. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have both been prosecuted to conviction for this embezzlement. Defendant No. 2 has since died, and his name was struck out at the trial. As regards defendant No. 5, who is a minor, it is conceded that his only liability is to the extent of the assets received by him from his deceased father, defendant No. 2.

The details of the case are lengthy, but shortly stated these are the main outlines. The plaintiffs were foolish enough to entrust the 1st defendant with the cashing of two cheques of Rs. 30,000 and Rs. 10,000 respectively. I say foolish because the 1st defendant was only an employee of a few weeks standing on a salary of Rs. 17 per mensem. He had come from Kudanpur in the Allahabad District, and at that time defendant No. 2, the brother of defendant No. 1, was also in Bombay. It is common ground that defendant No. 1 cashed the two cheques for Rs. 40,000 at the Bank, but never gave the proceeds to his masters as he ought to have done. His story was that on his return from the Bank he was taken ill in the street, and that while he lay unconscious, he must have been robbed of the money in question. This was clearly a suspicious story, but at the time the Police thought there was insufficient evidence to convict him, and accordingly he was allowed to return to his native country.

The plaintiffs, however, had a watch kept through the Allahabad Police over the defendants' movements, and after some time this led to further discoveries. The defendants were apparently misled into thinking that the whole affair had blown over. At any rate much accession of prosperity appears to have come to the joint family. For instance, heavy mortgages of many thousands of rupees on their family lands were paid off, and other lands purchased. I may say at once that though various tales to the contrary were put forward, there is no satisfactory evidence to show where the money came from, apart from the proceeds of the Rs. 40,000 cheques. I am quite satisfied that that was the true source from which these family mortgages were paid off and the lands purchased. But what is even more important is that the defendants proceeded to quarrel as to how the balance of the proceeds of the stolen moneys should be dealt with, and they actually summoned their village punchayet to settle their differences on this point. It is clear from the plaintiffs' evidence that at that punchayet meeting it was common ground that the money had been brought by the 1st defendant from Bombay with the aid of the 2nd defendant, and that the 1st defendant claimed that he was entitled to a larger share of it than the rest of the family, because he was the person who had secured the money. Naturally one does not accept such a story without closely criticising it. In the present case I am satisfied that what the plaintiffs' witnesses have said about that punchayet is true.

In this civil suit practically all the evidence is taken on Commission; and at the trial the suit is undefended. But it so happens that I was the Sessions Judge who tried the criminal charges against defendant No. 1 under s. 408 and against defendant No. 2 under ss. 408 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code, which resulted in an unanimous verdict of guilty against No. 1 and by a majority of 7 to 2 against No. 2, and I sentenced each of them to three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine on November 11, 1921. At that trial the plaintiffs' witnesses were closely cross-examined, and in addition I had the benefit of hearing the oral statements of the accused from the dock and the argument of their Counsel. I was quite satisfied at that trial that the story of the 1st and 2nd defendants was a false one, and that in fact defendant No. 1 had embezzled the money with the aid of defendant No. 2, he being the person who actually took the money out of Bombay after it had been handed to him by defendant No. 1.

But to avoid any misunderstanding I should state that I decide this present civil suit solely on the evidence of the civil suit and not on that of the criminal proceedings, except that I am entitled to know that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have been prosecuted to conviction for the embezzlement of these moneys. I think I am also entitled to take into consideration that there is nothing in that criminal trial which should give me any hesitation in accepting the plaintiffs' evidence in the present civil suit.

So much for the more material facts. I do not propose to go into further details. The real difficulty arises as to the law. In this respect I regret that the case is undefended, and that the difficulties I have felt have not been met by Counsel, although I gave an express adjournment for the purpose. The point is this. Under what particular section of what Code or under what proposition of law can one recover in a civil suit money stolen by a thief, and how can the members of his joint Hindu family be made liable for the theft, if they did not actually participate in it? In the plaint the plaintiffs' case is based on conspiracy, viz., that the 1st defendant in conspiracy with the other defendants intended to misappropriate and did in fact misappropriate the Rs. 40,000, and that the 2nd defendant actually took the money from Bombay in furtherance of the conspiracy. That there was a conspiracy between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is clear, but there is not the slightest evidence to show that defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 were guilty of any conspiracy prior to the actual theft. On the contrary it would seem quite improbable that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 could anticipate that anybody would be so foolish as to entrust defendant No. 1 with Rs. 40,000 or any other large sum. However, that may be, I find as a fact that the alleged antecedent conspiracy so far as regards defendants Nos. 3, 4, and 5 is not proved. Consequently the plaintiffs' case in so far as it depends on any such antecedent conspiracy fails.

At the second hearing Mr. B. J. Desai based the plaintiffs' case on another ground. He relied on ss. 71, 76 and 108, Illustration (a), of the Indian Contract Act. Section 71 provides that a person who finds goods belonging to another, and takes them into his custody, is subject to the same responsibility as a bailee. But in the present case there is no question of any goods being "found," nor can it be said that any of the other defendants have "found" any money. The cheques were given to defendant No. 1 to cash, and he obtained cash, viz., currency notes from the bankers. So I fail to see how s. 71 has any relevance. Next, turning to ss. 76 and 108, these sections appear under the Chapter dealing with the sale of goods. It was said that, having regard to the definition of s. 76, goods would include a cheque or cash. But assuming that to be so, I am far from satisfied that s. 108 affects the question. The plaintiffs are not seeking to recover here any specific goods or the actual currency notes which the Bank handed over to the 1st defendant. They are merely making a money claim against the defendants; and it was expressly admitted at the trial that the plaintiffs are not seeking to follow the specific moneys in order to obtain any charge on the property which may now represent such moneys. Illustration (a), therefore, which deals with a stolen cow which A had bought from B in good faith, would hardly seem to cover the present case. The true owner might recover the cow, but could he recover damages from A, supposing the cow had died or had been re sold? As regards Ch. IX, which deals with bailees, even if one assumes that defendant No. 1 was a bailee and accordingly liable to the plaintiffs, the remaining defendants were not bailees, for the plaintiffs had never entrusted them with anything.

I next invited Counsel to consider whether under the Common Law of England there was not an appropriate civil remedy against a thief who had stolen property. It would seem contrary to common sense that an action would lie, say for breach of contract for payment of a certain sum of money, or in tort for trespass or for injury by negligence to a chattel, and yet that no action would lie for theft. But Counsel were unable to refer me to any authority on that proposition either in England or in India, though I suggested that in a case like the present an action would lie for money had and received. But the difficulty here is not so such as regards the actual thief but as regards the alleged liability of the remaining members of his family. I accordingly do not propose to go into the possible remedies which might be open at Common Law but will consider whether a remedy does not lie in equity.

I accordingly suggested further to Counsel that the plaintiffs' case might be put in this way, viz., that the initial embezzlement was a breach of trust by defendant No. 1, that defendant No. 2 aided and abetted that breach of trust, and that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were also guilty of that breach of trust inasmuch as with notice of the trust they participated in the improper division of the stolen moneys amongst, or for the benefit of, the members of the joint Hindu family. But this point had not been considered by Counsel, and accordingly I reserved judgment, for the mere fact that the case was undefended would not entitle the plaintiffs to judgment unless they could satisfy the Court that their claim was sound in law.

Shortly thereafter I came across a short paragraph in an English newspaper referring to a somewhat similar case which Mr. Justice Bailhache had tried, and which he was reported to have described as being "the most puzzling he had experienced in forty years study of the law" I accordingly waited for the case to be reported, and subsequently when I was home on leave I wrote to the learned Judge, who was kind enough to inform me that the case was only reported in the Justice of the Peace, Vol. 87, p. 817, dated December 1, 1923 and that the report was a very imperfect one. Shortly stated, in that case four defendants had broken into a jeweller's shop, and articles were stolen to the value of £443. Articles to the value of £188 were recovered, and the subject of the action was a claim by the jeweller for damages in respect of the unrecovered property against the four thieves who were then serving terms of imprisonment in respect of the robbery. The learned Judge held that the wrong against the State must first be vindicated which had been done by a criminal conviction. Next as regards the injury done to the plaintiff in his private capacity, if there had been only one individual concerned in the theft, there would be no difficulty in vindicating the plaintiff so far as trespass was concerned. But the action was complicated as there were four defendants. Further the stolen property was not traced to one individual, and the unrecovered goods could not be traced to any of the defendants. The learned Judge, however, held that he was entitled to presume that the missing articles were stolen by the four defendants, and that the fact that the property could not be traced made no difference. He accordingly held that if two or three people combined to commit a wrongful act and damage was done, judgment could be given against them. Accordingly the same principle applied as if there was only one defendant; and judgment was given against every one of the defendants as regards the stolen property which had not been restored. It was not essential whether the damage could be divided or not, as each of the defendants were liable. It will, however, be seen that in that case the defendants were the actual trespassers and thieves, or at any rate were all engaged in the conspiracy to trespass and steal. Here, as I have already held, there is no evidence to show that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 entered into any antecedent conspiracy in connection with the suit theft. Nor was it a case of trespass on the plaintiffs' premises.

I subsequently waited to see whether the case was to be reported fully as the judgment of the late Mr. Justice Bailhache on this branch of the law, of which he was a complete master, would have been particularly valuable to me. But no further report is forthcoming, and accordingly, as I have already intimated, I do not propose to consider the possible remedies open to the plaintiffs at Common Law, but will consider the obove equitable remedy for breach of trust which I have already referred to.

In this connection I should state that in my opinion the pleadings are sufficient to cover the point, although the precise words "breach of trust" are not mentioned. The facts pleaded clearly shows the fiduciary relationship between the plaintiffs and the 1st defendant. The allegation of a conspiracy to misappropriate the moneys after they had been stolen is I think a sufficient allegation of a wilful participation in the breach of trust. In this connection it must be borne in mind that the breach of trust was not necessarily concluded when defendant No. 1 handed the money to defendant No. 2, nor when defendant No. 2 took it away out of Bombay. It at any rate extended up to the time when the trust property was actually applied in paying off the mortgages and in buying property.

Now, in the first place, it is abundantly clear that there was a breach of trust by the 1st defendant in which defendant No. 2 was an abettor. That indeed is what they were convicted of, viz., criminal breach of trust. The only question, therefore, is whether defendants Nos. 3 and 4 having notice of the trust were afterwards parties to a misapplication of the trust property in breach of the trust. In my judgment, on the evidence before me, it is clear that that question should be answered in the affirmative. Accordingly, in my judgment, defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 were all liable to replace these trust moneys. It follows then that in the view which I take the plaintiffs' case can and does succeed on that ground. I say nothing further as to whether it could also be based on some other ground.

Counsel informs me that the plaintiffs have recovered Rs. 1,500 found on defendant No. 1, but have received nothing of the fines imposed by me. There will, accordingly, be judgment against defendants Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5 for Rs. 38,500 (being the balance of the Rs. 40,000) and interest at 9 per cent. per annum from July 5, 1918, to judgment. Costs and interest on judgment at 6 per cent. But so far as regards defendant No. 5 his liability is to be limited to the extent of the assets received by him from his father defendant No. 2 since deceased. The attachment before judgment will continue pending the further orders of the Court, and there will be general liberty to apply.

As the Justice of the Peace newspaper is not, I think, in the local law libraries, a print containing the above brief report of the case before the late Mr. Justice Bailhache can be annexed to this judgment for convenience of reference.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 235 OF 1924.

June 25, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.

DR. N. LOBO—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

BABULAL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Execution of decree—Objection proceedings—Order passed on objection, finality of—Wrongful attachment—Damages, suit for—Malice, proof of, whether necessary.

By virtue of the provision contained in r. 63 of O. XXI of the C. P. C., it is incumbent on a person, against whom an order is made in objection proceedings, to file a suit to set aside the order if he feels himself aggrieved thereby, otherwise the order passed in the objection proceedings will become final, and will not be open to question in any other proceeding between the parties. [p. 574, col. 2.]

In a suit to recover damages for wrongful attachment by a person other than the judgment-debtor it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to allege and prove that the person at whose instance the wrongful attachment was made acted maliciously or without reasonable or probable cause. The defendant may have acted in perfectly good faith and innocently, but he is nevertheless liable if damage has been caused by his mistake. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 29th February 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 78 of 1923.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The main facts of this case are not in dispute. The plaintiff-appellant Dr. Lobo sued the defendant-respondent in the first Court on the allegation that he had delivered a soda-water machine on the "hire purchase" system to one S. Kitchie. Kitchie, after a time, disappeared from Nagpur, leaving the machine in the house without having paid the price thereof. Kitchie was also in arrears of rent to the defendant who wished to have the house vacated. He applied to the Deputy Commissioner, Nagpur, who in the course of his proceedings took possession of the machine as unclaimed property apparently under the Police Act. Possession was so taken on the 5th of November 1921. Meanwhile, the defendant had filed a suit for arrears of rent against Kitchie and he obtained an attachment order before judgment in respect of the soda-water machine, the date of the attachment being the 3rd of December 1921.

The plaintiff-appellant Dr. Lobo's case was that he came to know of the whereabout of the machine in May 1922 and applied for possession thereof to the Deputy Commissioner. He then came to know that the property had been attached before judgment by Babulal, and he accordingly presented an objection to the attachment in the Civil Court and the property, in pursuance of that objection, was released on 25th October 1922; cf Ex. P. 3.

Apparently, the Collector was not even then satisfied that the soda-water machine was the property of Dr. Lobo and further enquiries followed, with the result that he (Dr. Lobo) got possession thereof only in February 1923. During the period of the soda-water machine remained in the Collector's custody; it was apparently kept in the open air exposed to the weather and in consequence deteriorated. The plaintiff accordingly claimed damages from the defendant amounting to Rs. 150 for deterioration, and in respect of his having been kept out of possession for roughly a year he claimed damages in respect of hire to the extent of Rs. 300, i. e., Rs. 450 in all were claimed.

The Munsif held that the defendant could not challenge the claim of the plaintiff to the soda-water machine and that the latter was owner thereof. He further held that the defendant Babulal was unaware of the plaintiff's ownership of the machine when he applied for attachment before judgment. The Munsif found that the deterioration and loss of hire each amounted to Rs. 50 and accordingly he passed a decree for Rs. 100 with proportionate costs. The defendant Babulal appealed to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, against the said judgment and decree, and the plaintiff also filed a memorandum of objections. On the question of title the Additional District Judge confirmed the finding of the first Court.

Counsel for the respondent in this Court has made an attempt to attack this finding on the ground that the plaintiff's title had been legitimately attacked in defence in the present suit, which was filed within a year of the order passed in objection suit. The language of O. XXI, r. 63, C. P. C., is, however, perfectly plain. It is incumbent on the person, against whom an order is made in an objection proceeding, to file a suit if he feels himself aggrieved thereby, otherwise the order in the objection suit is final. It seems unnecessary, therefore, for me to consider in detail the decision in Cecil Cole v. Nanalal Moraji Dave (1), which has been quoted by Counsel for the respondent in support of the proposition that the property had become the possession of Kitchie. But I may point out that in the agreement (Ex. P-4) there was the present case a clear condition that the soda-water machine was to remain in the sole and absolute property of the vendor until the full purchase had been effected. The decision in Namagauda v. Paresha (2) is clear authority for the proposition that the question of title cannot now be disputed and the decision of the two lower Courts on this point is undoubtedly correct.

Passing now to the question of the liability of the defendant-respondent for damages, I have been referred to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kissorimohun Roy v. Harsukh Das (3) and to Bishamber Nath v. Gaddar (4). Generally speaking, it is not incumbent on the plaintiff in the present case to allege and prove that the person at whose instance a wrong attachment has been made acted there anent maliciously or without probable cause. It is accepted law that proof of malice is not necessary when the property of a stranger, not a party to the suit, is taken in execution. The decree-holder may have acted in perfectly good faith and innocently, but is nevertheless liable if damages have been caused by his mistake.

I now come to the question of whether, as a matter of fact, any damages were caused by the present attachment before judgment. On behalf of the respondent it has been urged with some show of plausibility that at the time of the attachment the property was already in possession of the Collector, and it has been urged that, in effect, the attachment made no essential difference and that even, after the property had been released by the Civil Court on the 25th of October 1922, the Collector did not give it over to the plaintiff-appellant until some 4 months later. This argument, however, loses sight entirely of the fact that in May 1922 the present appellant had applied to the Collector for release of his property and, had it not been for the attachment order, the Collector would undoubtedly forthwith have proceeded to make enquiry as to Dr. Lobo's title to the soda-water machine just as that officer did in October 1922. It is, therefore, apparent that the property in consequence of the attachment remained in the possession of the Collector for a period of five months longer than it otherwise would have been in consequence of the Civil Court's attachment, and it seems to me clear that the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to damages, if any can be shown to have been caused during these five months, i. e., from the 25th of October 1922. The machine remained in the possession of the Collector for a period of roughly 15 months only, and the only reasonable presumption to make, so far as the deterioration is concerned, is that the said deterioration proceeded at a level rate during all these 15 months. It follows, therefore, that the defendant-respondent must be held responsible for a third of the total deterioration and loss of hire, the property having remained, in consequence of the attachment before judgment, in the possession of the Collector for some 5 months of the total of 15 months. There is a concurrent finding of both the lower Courts that the total deterioration amounted to Rs. 100. Therefore, it follows that the defendant-respondant is responsible for Rs. 33-5-4 out of this amount.

As regards damages on account of loss of hire, the appellant has stated that he would be content with a rate of Rs. 7 per mensem. I think the lower Appellate Court's reasons for finding that nothing at all was due on this account are unsound. It has apparently arrived at the said conclusion mainly because for some months the plaintiff remained inactive before attempting to trace out the machine. Any such argument, however, overlooks the fact that the plaintiff may well have delayed action in the reasonable enough hope, or belief that his debtor Kitchie would again return. The Judge of the first Court allowed damages on account of hire at the rate of Rs. 12 a month, but I concur with the Additional District Judge that this rate was excessive. The rate of Rs. 7 a month, however, which the plaintiff-appellant has stated he is willing to accept, seems to be undoubtedly rather below than above the correct figure, and, in these circumstances, I can see no reason for disallowing this rate. The result is that Rs. 35 will be allowed on account of loss of hire for the five months in question.

The judgment and decree appealed against are accordingly reversed and a decree for the total amount of Rs. 68-5-4 with proportionate costs will issue in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. In the peculiar circumstances of this case I do not think the defendant is entitled to costs on the portion of the claim which has been dismissed, and I accordingly order that parties will bear all the remaining costs as incurred.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT
No. 256 OF 1922.
March 21, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir Amberson Marten, KT.

THE COORLA SPINNING AND WEAVING MILLS COMPANY, LIMITED—PLAINTIFF
versus
VALLABHDAS KALLIANJI—
DEFENDANT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 73, 107, 140, 141—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 34—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 22—Sale of goods—Breach of contract—Re-sale beyond reasonable time after breach, effect of—Damages, suit for—Date of breach, determination of—Measure of damages—Interest pendente lite, whether can be awarded—Principal and agent—Contract entered into by guaranteeing agent—Breach of contract—Suit to recover damages—Principal, whether necessary party—Principal added as co-plaintiff after expiry of limitation—Suit, whether barred.

Where a contract for the sale of goods empowers the seller to re-sell the goods at the risk of the buyer in case the latter fails to take delivery, the re-sale must be held within a reasonable time from the date of such failure, and the same rule applies to a re-sale held under the provisions of s. 107 of the Contract Act. [p. 578, col. 2.]

Where the time for performing a contract of sale has been postponed, at the request either of vendor or purchaser, and the contract is ultimately broken, this has the effect of deferring the period at which the breach takes place, and, therefore, alters the date with reference to which the damages are to be calculated. The old contract continues, but the date of the breach is shifted. The damages for non-delivery or non-acceptance of the goods will be calculated at the market price of such goods on the last day to which the contract was extended if a date was fixed, or at the date when the plaintiff refused to grant further indulgence, or at a reasonable period after his last grant of an indulgence. [p. 579, col. 1.]

A plaintiff who sues for damages owes the duty of taking all reasonable steps to mitigate the loss consequent upon the breach and cannot claim as damages any sum which is due to his own neglect. But the loss to be ascertained is the loss at the date of the breach. If at that date the plaintiff could do something or did something which mitigated the damage the defendant is entitled to the benefit of it. [p. 580, col. 1.]

Where a breach of a contract for the sale of goods is committed by the buyer and the seller does not exercise his power of re-sale within a reasonable time, the correct measure of damages is the difference between the contract rate and market rate at the date of breach and not the market rate at the expiration of a reasonable time from the date of breach within which the re-sale should have taken place. It is immaterial in such a case whether the property in the goods has or has not passed to the buyer. [ibid.]

A clause in a contract for the sale of goods giving the power of re-sale to the seller confers a valid right on the latter to claim the difference between the contract price and the price realized at the re-sale, provided that power has been exercised in accordance with the provisions of the clause. But where that power has not been exercised within a reasonable time the only right of the seller is to claim damages on the footing of the difference between the contract price and the market value of the goods on the date of the breach, without any reference to the price which might be realized by a re-sale at any time after the limit of the reasonable time has been exceeded. [p. 581, col. 2.]

Where a party responsible for a breach of contract improperly delays the ascertainment of damages for a long time, interest on the damages awarded from the date of the institution of the suit may be decreed under s. 34 of the C. P. C. [p. 584, col. 1.]

Where a contract for the sale of goods is entered into by a selling agent who is in the position of a guaranteeing agent towards his principal and who on default by the buyer in taking delivery of the goods has paid to the principal the amount due in respect of the goods, the agent is entitled in equity to assignment of the principal's rights against the buyer under the contract and is entitled to maintain a suit against the buyer for recovery of damages. Such an agent may also be treated as being in the position of a surety who has paid all that he is liable for and who upon such payment is invested with all the rights which his principal had against the buyer and becomes entitled to the benefits of every security held by the principal. To a suit by the agent in such a case to recover damages from the buyer, the principal is a proper rather than a necessary party and the suit will not be deemed to be barred by time if the principal is not added as a co-plaintiff until after the period of limitation has expired. Messrs. Davar and Engineer, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. Lalji and Bhagvati, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiffs under a contract dated October 6, 1920, in respect of the sale to the defendants of 75 out of a total of 101 bales of bed-sheets, which were "bunto" goods, and were to be delivered between November 1920 and February 1921. The original plaintiffs, when the suit was filed on January 19, 1922, were the present 2nd plaintiffs, Messrs. Keshavji Manakchand & Co. They are the selling agents of the present 1st plaintiffs, the Coorla Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, who were added as co-plaintiffs by my order of March 26, 1924.

2. It is common ground that on November 19, 1920, the defendants took delivery of six out of the 101 bales and paid for the same. The plaintiff's case is that at the instance of one Mohanlal Anandji, who was a partner of the defendants or who was acting on their behalf, they gave time to the defendants as regards the balance of the goods, and agreed that the defendants should take delivery in one lot of all the remaining bales, that were turned out to the end of February 1921. They accordingly gave a notice dated February 28, 1921, to the defendants that 75 bales were ready, and forwarded a delivery order. Subsequently they say they saw Mohanlal, who promised to take delivery shortly. Next, on March 21, they wrote saying that twenty more bales became ready by March 16, and requiring delivery to be taken of 95 bales in all by March 31. No written reply was received to either of these letters. Then, on April 8, they sent a solicitor's letter to the defendants calling on the latter to pay for the 95 bales and to take them up without further delay, and stating that if they were not paid for within seven days, they would be sold on their account or proceedings would be taken. It is alleged by the defendants that this letter was not delivered till April 12.

3. On April 13, the defendants in their letter of that date for the first time repudiated their liability, and claimed that the bales were tendered after the due date. On April 28, the plaintiffs wrote stating in effect that the course they had taken as regards the 75 bales was by arrangement with Mohanlal, and that those bales must be taken delivery of, but that if so desired the question of the twenty bales could remain open. On May 25, the defendants replied that Mohanlal was not a member of their firm, but was only a broker in the transaction, and had no authority to act in the way suggested. Subsequently, on June 27, after further correspondence the goods were sold by public auction. Then, on November 10, 1921, this plaint was declared, but for some unexplained reason it was not admitted till January 19, 1922.

4. The defendants' case is that the contract was with the 1st plaintiffs, the Coorla Mills Company, and not with their agents, and that accordingly this suit is barred by limitation, as the Mills Company was not added as a co-plaintiff till after the expiration of three years from the date of the breach of contract in respect of which the suit is instituted. Secondly, the defendants say that Mohanlal was not a partner of theirs, nor was he authorised to grant any extension of time, and that accordingly they are not liable under the contract as the plaintiffs were not prepared to give delivery within the contract period.

5. As regards the formal issues raised in the case I may at once answer Issues Nos. 1 and 6 as follows, viz :—

"(Issue No. 1). The Coorla Mills Company Limited was added as a co-plaintiff in pursuance of the Court's order of March 26, 1924, after this issue was raised (Issue No. 6). Yes. After inspection of the relevant books, this was admitted by defendant's Counsel on November 13, 1924."

6. As regards Issue No. 6, I may state that Ex. E gives particulars of the bailing dates of the 75 bales. It will be seen that the first 59 bales were all manufactured by the end of January 1921, the next ten by February 1922 and the last nine by the end of February 1921. The total is 78 and not 75, because the first three were part of the six bales delivered and paid for on November 19, 1920. The remaining three of these six bales were already manufactured at the date of the suit contract, and are not included in Ex. E. It will accordingly be seen that, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, there was no reason why the bulk of the goods should not have been delivered long before the end of February, as under cl. 1 of the Contract the defendant had to take delivery on the Company giving intimation that the goods were ready, and under cl. 5 the Company was exempted from delivering all the goods in certain events. I think, therefore, that part delivery was within the terms of the contract. This view is borne out by the part delivery actually effected on November 19 and has not been contested before me.

7. The plaintiffs say that the reason why the goods were not delivered when ready was because of Mohanlal's requests for time. This brings me to Issues Nos. 3 and 4, and I have no hesitation in answering both of them in the affirmative. I entirely accept in this and other respects the evidence of Ratilal Keshavji Mehta, the salesman of plaintiffs No. 2. The opinion I formed of him was that he was a good and candid witness. He explains that Mohanlal first negotiated a ready contract for 48 bales of similar goods dated September 23, 1920, (Ex. I), and that though delivery was to be taken by the end of October, the defendants got into arrears and asked for time through Mohanlal. Time was granted at his request in respect of this ready contract, and eventually delivery was not completed till January 23, 1921, as will be seen from the statement, Ex. B, which sets out the various delivery dates. Consequently, says Ratilal, time was also requested in respect of the suit contract, and Mohan Lal gave as one excuse that the defendants had not then re-sold the ready goods. This seems to me a natural story, and to be borne out by Ex. E. The defendants have not called Mohanlal, or made any attempt to find him. Their only witness is their partner Narsing Vallabhdas. He impressed me unfavourably, and where his evidence conflicts with that of the plaintiffs' witnesses, I think it should be rejected. In particular I think he gave false evidence when he stated that the reason for defendants' delay in taking delivery under the ready contract (Ex. 1) was that the plaintiffs put them off from time to time. I am satisfied that the plaintiffs never did anything of the sort, and that the real reason was due to Mohanlal's request for time. Another specific instance of false evidence is his statement in cross-examination near the end of the trial to the effect that he signed the suit contract at the plaintiff's shop and that Devkaran, the plaintiff's partner, then said that the plaintiffs would tell the defendants when the goods were ready. This was the first time that it was suggested that Narsing went to the plaintiffs' shop, or that Devkaran was present or took any active part in the matter. No such suggestion was made to any of the plaintiff's witnesses: nor was it put forward in examination-in-chief. And when the witness was asked whether he ever told his Solicitors or Counsel about it, or whether he was inventing it in the witness-box, he said he did not remember. In my judgment it was an invention made under stress of cross-examination when he was being pressed to explain how according to his story he came to leave it to a mere broker to settle the details of a heavy contract for Rs. 60,000 or so.

8. Under all the circumstances I am also satisfied that after the first delivery of six bales it was agreed through Mohanlal that instead of taking delivery of the remaining bales as they became ready, the defendants should take delivery in one lot of all the remaining bales manufactured up to the end of February 1921. Accordingly in my judgment the terms of the suit contract were varied in this respect. It may, therefore, be that, strictly speaking, this was not a mere withholding of delivery at the request of the purchasers as in Ogle v. Earl Vane (2) and Hickman v. Haynes (2), but amounted to the substitution of a new contract, which in England might have required to be in writing having regard to the Statute of Frauds. No point, however, was made as to this before me, and its materiality would mainly seem to arise in considering the question of Mohanlal's authority.

9. In the result as regards Issue No. 7 I hold that the plaintiffs' letter and delivery order of February 28, 1921, were in time, although not received by the defendants till March 1. As the goods to be taken delivery of under the new arrangement were all those manufactured up to the end of February, it follows, in my opinion, that the plaintiffs would not be obliged to serve notice until February had expired, and the bales actually manufactured had thus been ascertained. My answer, therefore, to issue No. 7 will be: "The defendants were bound to take delivery of the 75 bales offered on March 1st 1921, on the true construction of the suit contract as subsequently varied by the arrangement with Mohanlal." On the facts, therefore, as found by me, I need not consider what would have been the position if the suit contract had not been varied. But I incline to the view that in that event the notice actually given would have been too late, as the schedule to the contract stipulated for delivery "from November to February," and not for manufacture throughout those months. Further, under cl. 1, prior intimation had to be given to the defendants. Consequently to that extent the contract modified the terms of of s. 93 of the Indian Contract Act.

10. I will next consider whether Mohanlal had the requisite authority from the defendants, and this brings me to Issues Nos. 2 and 5.

19. After weighing then all the evidence, my conclusion is that Mohanlal's negotiations with the plaintiffs both before and after the ready contract and the suit contract were all effected with the knowledge and consent of the defendants, and that he was in these transactions their partner or at any rate a fully authorised agent and not a mere broker. I accordingly answer Issue No. 2 "Yes, or else was a fully authorised agent of the defendants to act on their behalf in the manner alleged by the plaintiffs." And Issue No. 5 "Yes."

20. Under the above circumstances I also hold that there was a breach of contract by the defendants, and that accordingly Issue No. 8 must be answered "Yes." This is not a case like that of the Phoenix Mills Ltd. v. Madhavdas Rupchand (3) where nothing at all was done by either party during the contract period. Nor is it like Toyo Menka Kaisha Ltd. v. Chabildas Nathubha (4), where the plaintiffs failed in their attempt to prove that the time for delivery had been extended by mutual consent.

21. I next come to Issues Nos. 9, 10 and 11. The goods having been re-sold by auction, the suit is brought not for the price of the goods but (a) for the difference between the auction and contract prices under cl. 2 of the contract, or (b) alternatively for damages of the same amount or such other sum as the Court may deem fit to award. As regards (a) I am of opinion that the sale by auction whether under cl. 2 of the contract or s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act or otherwise must be within a reasonable time; that the sale on June 27, 1921, was unreasonably late; and that consequently the plaintiffs cannot rely on cl. 2 [see Harichand & Co. v. Gosho Kabushiki Kaisha

Ltd. (5),] nor on s. 107 as justifying this particular sale. The provision in cl. 2 that "the Company is at liberty to keep the said goods or re-sell them...on our account and at our risk" cannot, I think, be construed as a power to keep the goods as long as the Company liked before it re-sold. I accordingly answer Issue No. 10 "No."

22. As regards the alternative claim (b) I think Issue No. 9 raises a question of difficulty as to the date of breach, viz., whether it should be taken to be within a few days of the service of the notice of February 28, 1921, say March 4, or else on or about March 31, when the notice of March 21 (Ex. 2) expired. This depends in the first place on whether I can accept Ratilal's evidence to the effect that after the notice of February 28, 1921, he saw Mohanlal several times, and that Mohanlal promised to take delivery shortly.

26. In the result, I have arrived at the conclusion that Ratilal's evidence should be accepted in its entirety, and that having regard to Mohanlal's promises the plaintiffs showed further forbearance and withheld delivery voluntarily at his request. But this further extension unlike the original extension to the end of February is not proved to have been to a definite agreed date. In this respect accordingly the case resembles Ogle v. Earl Vane (1) and Hickman v. Haynes (2) already cited. The English Law on the point is thus stated in Mayne on Damages, 9th Edition, pages 176-177 :—

> "Where the time for performing a contract of sale has been postponed, at the request either of vendor or purchaser, and the contract is ultimately broken, this has the effect of deferring the period at which the breach takes place, and, therefore, alters the date with reference to which the damages are to be calculated. The old contract continues, but the date of the breach is shifted. The damages for non-delivery or non-acceptance of the goods will be calculated at the market price of such goods on the last day to which the contract was extended if a date was fixed, or at the date when the plaintiff refused to grant further indulgence, or at a reasonable period after his last grant of an indulgence."

27. Under all the circumstances, then I hold that the plaintiffs' notice of March 21 giving a final ten days' time was a reasonable notice to give. I accordinly fix the date of the expiration of that notice, viz., March 31, as the date of the defendants' breach of contract cf. Hickman v. Haynes (2) and Plevins v. Downing (6). The plaintiffs' subsequent letter of April 8 would not, I think, extend the date of breach in the absence of proof of any subsequent negotiations after March 31. I accordingly answer Issue No. 9 "March 31, 1921."

28. I next turn to Issue No. 11 which raises the question of quantum of damages. If the property in the goods did not pass to the defendants, then putting aside cl. 2 of the contract, the measure of damages would normally be the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at the date of breach [see Jamal v. Moola Dawood Sons & Co. (7).] And damages on that basis could be awarded without an amendment of the plaint, even if the plaintiffs had only put forward the auction rate as the correct rate [see Narsinggirji Manufacturing Co. v. Budansaheb (8).] In fact, however, in prayer (b) of the plaint the plaintiffs have claimed alternatively "such other sum" as the Court may deem fit to award as damages. In Jamal's case (7) Lord Wrenbury, in delivering the judgment of the Board, says at page 10* :—

> "The question, therefore, is the general question and may be stated thus: In a contract for sale of negotiable securities, is the measure of damages for breach the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the breach —with an obligation on the part of the seller to mitigate the damages by getting the best price he can at the date of the breach—or is the seller bound to reduce the damages, if he can, by subsequent sales at better prices? If he is, and if the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of subsequent sales, it must also be true that he must bear the burden of subsequent losses. The latter proposition is in their Lordships' opinion impossible, and the former is equally unsound. If the seller retains the shares after the breach, the speculation as to the way the market will subsequently go is the speculation of the seller, not of the buyer; the seller cannot recover from the buyer the loss below the market price at the date of the breach if the market falls, nor is he liable to the purchaser for the profit if the market rises. It is undoubted law that a plaintiff who sues for damages owes the duty of taking all reasonable steps to mitigate the loss consequent upon the breach and cannot claim as damages any sum which is due to his own neglect. But the loss to be ascertained is the loss at the date of the breach. If at that date the plaintiff could do something or did something which mitigated the damage, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of it."

29. Then dealing with ss. 73 and 107 of the Indian Contract Act, his Lordship states as follows at page 11* :—

"The respondents further contend that ss. 73 and 107 of the Indian Contract Act, or one of them, are in their favour. As regards s. 107 their Lordships are unable to see that it has any application in the present case. It deals with cases in which a seller has a lien on goods or has stopped them in transitu. The section follows upon sections dealing with those subject matters. The present case is not one which falls under either of those heads. The seller was and remained the legal holder of the shares. As regards s. 73 it is but declaratory of the right to damages which has been discussed in the course of this judgment...... The seller's loss at the date of the breach was and remained the difference between contract price and market price at that date."

30. That case has been followed recently in Harichand & Co. v. Gosho Kabushiki Kaisha, Ltd. (5) where the Court of Appeal held that the vendors did not exercise their express power of re-sale within a reasonable time, and that consequently the correct measure of damages was the difference between the contract rate and market rate at date of breach and not the market rate at the expiration of a reasonable time in which the re sale should have taken place. In that case delivery of fifty bales of yarn under a contract was to be given within sixty-day of the arrival of a steamer, and in default there was an express power for the sellers "at any time to sell the goods by private sale or public auction." Twenty five bales arrived in Bombay on December 24, 1920, and the remainder on January 21, 1921. The purchasers took delivery of two lots of four bales each on January 14 and March 13, 1921, respectively. They then objected that these bales bore the contract No. 10 instead of the original contract No. 9/5, and so belonged to another contract with some different person. It was admitted that this number had nothing whatever to do with the quality of the goods. The seller's explanation was that it solely related to different numberings adopted by their Bombay branch as compared with their head office in Japan.

31. At the trial the main defence was this question of numbering. I decided this point against the purchasers. I next held that there was a breach of contract by the purchasers in their letter of April 5, 1921, and that the express power of sale must be exercised within a reasonable time thereafter notwithstanding the use of the words "at any time." These particular findings were not challenged in appeal, and I may add that a somewhat similar question as to numbering has now been conclusively determined by the Privy Council in Ramjivan Nevatla v. Bhikaji & Co. (9). It was there held in effect that a first purchaser who is the owner of goods in the hands of a mill-owner can have any reference number he likes put on the bales provided it does not give any warranty or indication of the quality or description to his sub-purchaser or to others.

The next question in Harichand's case (5) was whether the actual sale on May 21 was within a reasonable time. At the trial this point was argued by Counsel briefly without any reference to authorities, and depended on the view taken of the correspondence. Practically throughout April correspondence had passed between the respective Solicitors in which the purchasers maintained their erroneous point about the numbering. On April 26, the sellers wrote demanding payment within two days in default of which the goods would be sold. On May 2, the purchasers replied that they never had the idea of evading their liability and that they would be quite prepared to take the goods provided they related to their contract, and they proposed that they would take the goods provided the sellers admitted they did not appertain to the purchasers' order and would make an allowance in the price on that account. Again, on May 6, the purchasers asked for the production of certain papers and correspondence and said that they had no desire to back out of the contract, and that if the proofs asked for were produced, they would pay for and take delivery of the goods without prejudice to their contention that they were not bound to take delivery as they did not relate to the contract. Subsequently, on May 17, the purchasers withdrew their offer, and the goods were re-sold on May 25.'

33. The view I took of this correspondence was that having regard to the purchasers' letters of May 2 and 6, the sellers were not unreasonable in postponing the sale until the proposals made by those letters had been disposed of. But the view which prevailed in the Appeal Court (see page 928*) was that though in view of the unreasonable nature of the purchasers' objection to accept the goods, sometime might properly be allowed for the vendors endeavouring to get the purchasers to reconsider their refusal, yet that the vendors should have taken steps for a re-sale after receipt of the purchasers' letter of April 21 and that the sale should have taken place at any rate by April 29, i.e., after the expiry of the two days mentioned in the notice of April 26, and that consequently the negotiations made by the purchasers on May 2 and subsequently should be disregarded as they did not materialise, but that otherwise, some time should be allowed for the time taken up in advertising the sale, etc., e. g., a week, such as ensued between the vendors' Solicitors' letter of May 18 and the actual auction on May 25.

34. The case, therefore, in effect depended on the difference of two or three days between April 29 and May 2, and this difference resulted in the vendor being unable to justify his actual re-sale, and being consequently thrown back on his ordinary remedy. Damages were accordingly calculated according to the market rate at date of breach. At pages 928-29* Mr. Justice Fawcett said:—

"The result, in my opinion, is that plaintiffs cannot recover the whole loss resulting from re-sale of May 25 and are thrown back on their remedy of damages on the ordinary basis of the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at the date of breach. This date may be taken to be the day following the defendants' actual refusal in their letter of April 5, i. e., April 6, 1921,...It is true that in Prag Narain v Mul Chand (10) the measure for damages allowed was the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at the expiration of a reasonable time in which the re-sale should have taken place. But I agree with the following criticism of this decision in Remfry's Sale of Goods in British India (page 406) :—'But there seems to be no reason for a departure from the ordinary rule. The right given to the seller includes the right to a reasonable time for effecting a re-sale, but if he does not exercise the power according to the terms of the section, there is no reason why he should obtain any benefit under it, and the due date should be the day on which to ascertain the market value.' The Privy Council decision in Jamal v. Moolla Dawood Sons & Co. (7) in effect says the same thing in Angullia & Co. v. Sassoon & Co. (11) Harington, J , took the same view, and this Court agreed with him in Narsinggirjie Manufacturing Co. v. Budansaheb (8). We, therefore, allow this appeal and declare that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover damages from the defendants on the basis of the difference between the contract rate and the market rate of the goods on April 6, 1921."

35. So, too, at page 933,* Sir Lallubhai Shah said:—

"I do not read the judgment in that case [Jamal's case (7)] as casting any doubt upon the proposition, which has been accepted in several cases to which I have referred, that a clause as to re-sale gives a valid right to the sellers to claim the difference between the contract price and the price realised at the re sale, provided that power has been exercised in accordance with the provisions of the clause But where that power has not been exercised within reasonable time, the only right of the sellers is to claim damages on the footing of the difference between the contract price and the market value of the goods on the date of the breach, without any reference to the price which might be realised by a re sale at any time after the limit of reasonable time has been exceeded. My conclusion is that the defendants committed a breach of the contract on April 5 or 6, that a re-sale should have been effected soon after that—at the latest before the end of April—and that the subsequent negotiations and the subsequent re-sale cannot give the plaintiffs the right to claim damages according to the clause as to re-sale."

36. In both the above cases, however, the property in the goods did not pass to the purchaser. Does it make any difference then in the present case supposing the property did pass? This point was not referred to in the final arguments, which were all based on the assumption that if the auction-sale was bad, the measure of damages would be the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at the date of breach. That assumption appears to me to be correct. On my above findings the plaintiffs cannot rely on s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act as the re-sale was unreasonably late. Consequently, as in Jamals' case (7) s. 107 does not apply, and we are left with s. 73. Accordingly the plaintiffs may sue for damages under s. 73 and prior to the re-sale they would also have had the alternative remedy of suing for the price, although the latter remedy is not mentioned in the Indian Contract Act [see P. R. & Co. v. Bhagvan Das Chaturbhuj (12) and Finlay Muir & Co. v. Radhakissen (13).] The same result would, I think, follow under English Law, as defendant had not actually received the goods. Thus, in Mayne on Damages, 9th Edition at page 168, I find it stated as follows:—

"If the purchaser refuses to accept the goods, and propery has passed to him, the vendor may at his option consider the contract of sale as still unbroken, and recover their entire price in an action for goods bargained and sold, even though they have not been delivered. He may, on the other hand, after the time for acceptance has expired, or any other essential condition has been broken, sue for breach of the contract, even after he has re-sold the goods. In the latter case, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time when the contract ought to have been completed, for the seller may take his goods into the market and obtain the current price for them."

37. Accordingly in the view I take, the measure of damages would be the same in the present case whether the property did or did not pass. But if it is necessary to decide the point, I hold that the property did pass to the defendants. I think it clear that by their letter and delivery order of February 28, 1921, the plaintiffs appropriated these 75 bales to the contract [see Pignatarao v. Gilroy (14).] I am further of opinion that this appropriation was assented to by the defendants within the meaning of s. 83 of the Indian Contract Act, having regard to my above findings that Mohanlal asked for and was given time after the receipt of the plaintiffs' letter and delivery order.

38. I should perhaps add that it was never contended before me that the effect of cl. 2 of the suit contract was that the only remedies open to the vendors were either to keep the goods or to re-sell, and that having elected to re-sell and the re-sale being invalid the vendors could not rely on their alternative remedy. Nor was it contended that if the vendors elected to keep the goods, they were not entitled to damages in addition. In my opinion cl. 2 does not have any such effect, and I only mention the points to shew they have not been overlooked. The contract may be badly drafted, but I do not think that its language forces me to attribute to the parties such an improbable intention as the above.

39. As regards the actual market rates, I have already held in answer to Issue No. 9 that the date of breach is March 31, 1921, being the date on which the plaintiffs' notice of March 21 expired. To save costs, the parties have very sensibly agreed that whereas the contract rate was at Rs. 1-10 6 per lb., the market rates on February 28 and March 1 were Re. 1-8-0, on March 9, Re. 1-6-6, on March 31, Re. 1-6-0 and on April 13, Re. 1-6-3, and that the average rate obtained at the auction-sale on June 21 was Re. 1-6 0. Also that the market rate on any date between March 1 and 9 should be taken to be Re. 1-7-3.

40. But it will be noticed from the passage which I have quoted from Harichand's case (5) that the market was there taken as at April 6 being the date following the purchasers' actual refusal in their letter of April 5. Possibly it was assumed that this letter was not received till the 6th, though this does not appear from the Appeal Paper Book. But I find on looking at the subsequent unreported proceedings that the date finally adopted by the Appeal Court was April 7 and not April 6, as April 6 was a close holiday.

41. Further, in Halsburys' Laws of England, Volume X, page 332, note (g), I find it stated:—

"The difference is more properly that between the contract price and the market price on the day after the breach, for the defendant has the whole of the day fixed for delivery on which to deliver."

Shaw v. Holland (15) is cited in support of this proposition, but in my opinion it does not bear it out. On the contrary as I read the decision the damages were based on the market rate of the last day of a seven days' notice given by a vendor to a purchaser to take delivery. The head-note ends:—

"In an action for the non-delivery of shares on a given day, pursuant to contract, the proper measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price on the day when the contract was broken."

In that case, on March 3, 1845, the plaintiffs gave a notice which ended (page 142)*:

"If those scrips are not delivered to me on or before the 10th instant, I shall buy them in against you, and debit you with the difference."

Then at page 146* Baron Parke said:—

"The question, therefore, is, when it (the contract) was broken. Now the plaintiff by his letter of March 3, gave the defendant until March 10 to deliver the shares; and he is not, therefore, entitled to calculate the damages with reference to any amount the shares might have sold for subsequently to the 10th."

Accordingly the damages awarded in the lower Court were reduced on that basis.

42. In Narsinggirji Manufacturing Co. v. Budansaheb (8) delivery had to be taken by December 31, 1919. In remanding the suit for a re-trial, the Appeal Court framed the following issue: "(2) If the breach of contract was by the defendant and not by the plaintiff, what was the market price of the goods on December 31, 1919 ?" And Sir Norman Macleod added (page 527)† :—

"The Court below has found that the contract time was not extended. If the defendant committed the breach the plaintiff will be entitled to the difference between the contract rate and the market rate as found."

Presumably December 31, 1919, and also January 1, 1920, were close holidays, but in such a case the Court has to arrive at the rate as best it can by considering the rates available for the days nearest to the date of actual breach.

43. In the present case I appreciate that as on my findings the property passed, and the defendants had the whole of March 31 in which to pay, the plaintiffs could not have safely gone into the market and re-sold these bales on March 31. But as I read the authorities already cited, the principle on which the date of the breach is taken is because it is the loss to the plaintiff on that particular date which has to be ascertained. As Lord Wrenbury emphasises in Jamal's case (7) (page 11*): "The sellers' loss at the date of breach was and remained the difference between contract price and market price at that date." That being so, it is really misleading to consider how soon in fact the vendors could reasonably have re-sold after the date of breach. The materiality of that would only arise if the vendors were validly exercising their powers of re-sale under cl. 2 of the suit contract or s. 107 of the Indian Contract Act. In that event a week might well be spent if the sale was to be by auction and advertisements; etc. issued [cf. Narsinggirji Manufacturing Co. v. Budansaheb (8)]

44. But on my findings the vendors did not validly exercise these special powers, and consequently they can now only rely on their ordinary remedy. And one can well see that if some date after the date of breach was adopted, this might lead to disputes and difficulties as to what subsequent date should be adopted in any particular case, and that in a fluctuating market the difference of even a day might lead to serious differences in money. And as regards the mitigation of damages under s. 73, that again is at the date of breach. It is not suggested here that at that date there was anything special which the vendors should have done, but did not do, apart from the exercise of their power of sale which stands on a different footing.

45. Following then what I understand to be the principle laid down in Jamal's case (7) and in Narsinggirji Manufacturing Co. v. Budansaheb (8) I hold that I ought to take the rate of the date of breach, viz., March 31, as the determining rate. This rate, as I have already said, is Re. 1-6-0 per lb. I accordingly answer Issue No. 11 "Yes. The damages should be calculated on the difference between the contract rate of Re. 1-10-6 and the market rate on March 31, 1921, of Re. 1-6 0 with reference to the 75 bales in suit". The aggregate sum representing this difference must be worked out as proper particulars were not given either in the plaint or at the trial, and the sum actually claimed includes interest.

46. As regards Issue No. 12, a question arises about interest. The plaint claims interest prior to the suit, but this cannot, I think, be allowed. As the sum awarded by me represents damages at date of breach, I do not think that cl. 3 of the contract extends to interest on such damages. But interest from date of the suit stands on a different footing. In the subsequent unreported proceedings in Harichand's case (5) interest on damages was awarded by the Appeal Court under s. 34 of the C P. C., from the date of the suit, and Mr. Justice Fawcett stated that in his opinion it was desirable that where a party improperly delayed the ascertainment of damages for three or four years, he should be penalised in this way, and that the main objection advanced by the defendants to take delivery had no substance in it.

47. In the present case the second plaintiffs declared their plaint on November 10, 1921, and filed it on January 19, 1922. So there was no unreasonable delay. Substantially they have been awarded the principal sum they claimed. They themselves paid it to the Mill Company in June and July 1921. They have now been out of their money for over three years, and in my opinion the defendants' main objection as to Mohanlal's want of authority is a dishonest defence. Under all the circumstances I think it fair and so hold that under s. 34 of the C. P. C. the damages awarded should carry interest at 6 per cent. from January 19, 1922, when the plaint was filed down to the date of judgment.

48. In the last issue (viz., No 13) the defendants rely on limitation. This issue was not raised until the second hearing when the Mill Company had been added as a co-plaintiff, and an amended written statement pleading limitation had been put in. It depends primarily on what was the date of breach and that is why I have set out at length my reasons for adopting March 31, for the difference in money values is comparatively small. The material dates are as follows. I have already found that the date of breach was March 31, 1921. My order directing the Mill Company to be added as a co plaintiff was made on March 26, 1924 The amendments to the plaint actually adding them as parties were made on March 28, and the amended plaint was formally re-declared by Ratilal on March 31, 1924. Under these circumstances I hold that the joinder of the Mill Company as plaintiffs was within time, viz., three years of the date of breach, and that accordingly Issue No. 13 should be answered "No."

49. Apart, then, from any question of costs, it is unnecessary for me to decide the points of law which would arise if the date of breach was found to be earlier, say March 4, 1921. But in deference to the able and interesting arguments of Counsel, and as in general it is desirable for a Trial Judge to give his decision on all important disputed points, I will now consider this issue on the assumption that (contrary to the view which I hold) the Mill Company was not added as a co-plaintiff until more than three years had expired from the date of breach. In the first place, I reject the plaintiffs' contention that the suit contract was with the selling agents alone. It may be taken in the plaintiffs' favour—and I so hold—that the contract Ex. A alone should be looked at, and that the other document Ex. A 1 which is not signed by anybody and has no rubber stamp endorsement by the agents is not a duplicate, but is only a copy of part of the original contract.

50. Now Ex. A is a printed from in a contract book which is supplied by the Mill Company to the selling agents. In the printed body of the form no other Company but the Mill Company is referred to. Clauses 3 and 5 expressly refer to the Company's "Mill," and it is not suggested that the agents have any mill. I think, therefore, that in cls. 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6 of Ex A the references to "the Company" are clearly to the Mill Company, and that having regard to the nature of those clauses, it cannot be successfully contended that the Mill Company was merely a third party. For instance, under cl. 2 it was "the Company" who on the purchasers' default had the power either to keep or to re-sell the goods and to recover damages on a re-sale. Under cl. 5 the Company had a conditional power to cancel the contract in which case the purchaser was not to get any compensation from the Company.

51. Plaintiffs' Counsel laid stress on the rubber stamp endorsement bearing the agents' name; and also on the printed statement in the contract that the defendants "have this day agreed to purchase from the Coorla Spinning & Weaving Company Ltd.'s shop (Dookan) for selling cloth situate in the new cloth market the below-mentioned goods..." This is an ambiguous and stupid form, and I hope that at any rate one result of this case will be to ensure that the plaintiffs adopt another form in the future. Strictly speaking you can buy "at" a shop, or "from the proprietors of a shop," but not "from a shop." The distinction is between the place and the persons; but sometimes the word 'shop' is used as including or referring to the goods in a shop. The difficulty here is that although the goods manufactured by the Mill Company are sold at this shop, the proprietors of the shop are the selling agents, and not the Mill Company. Possibly in some bygone days the Mill Company kept their own shop, and this form was in use then and has not since been altered but, this is mere guess work for there is no evidence of it. And if the contract is intended to be with the persons who keep the shop where the Mill Company's goods are sold, then this is inconsistent with the body of the contract which refers to the Mill Company alone unless one treats such persons as contracting agents for the Mill Company.

52. In this respect the rubber endorsement is helpful and shows that the contract was at any rate effected by the aid of the selling agents, just as an application for shares in a Company by a member of the public might bear a banker's or broker's stamp. But although it contains the words "& Co.", I do not think this involves a reference to the selling agents in the body of the contract where the words "the Company" are used. The agents were not a Company in the ordinary sense of the word, and would not, I think, be referred to as such. Ratilal tells us that the reason for the rubber endorsement was to show that the purchasers were to credit the selling agents and not the Mill Company on delivery of the goods, and that they might know that the contract was with the selling agents. All people in the market knew that they were the selling agents of the Coorla Mills, but some outside merchants might not know this. And though the defendants have not put their books in evidence to show whom they gave credit to for the ready bales and the six delivered bales, it seems clear that they transacted all business with the selling agents throughout, and not with the Mill Company. But this observation and also Ratilal's statement may perhaps be open to the objection that it is parol evidence as to the intention of the parties under a written contract (see Bowstead on Agency, 6th Edition, Art. 119, page 405 and I think it safer, therefore, to disregard it.

53. On the whole I think the true view is and I so hold that the contract was with the Mill Company acting by their selling agents. In much the same way a club often executes its contracts by a named agent, e. g, its Secretary. And in effect the view adopted by both parties in the initial correspondence is not very different. In their letter of April 8, 1921, the vendors' Solicitors write: "on behalf of our clients Messrs Keshavji Manekchand & Co., selling agents of the Coorla Mills" In the reply of April 13 the defendants' Solicitor writes: "By the contract referred to...your clients agreed to deliver to ours..." I further hold that under all the circumstances the rubber endorsement had the effect of a signature on the contract by the selling agents as such and acting on behalf of the Mill Company. In this respect it will be borne in mind that but for this rubber endorsement there was no signature by or on behalf of the vendors either in Ex. A or Ex. A-1.

54. Counsel were unable to assist me with any authorities in arriving at this conclusion, but the contract is I hope sui generis, and accordingly one could not expect to find a case in point. The converse case of the personal liability of an agent in various instances has recently been the subject of much litigation in the English Courts, culminating in the decision of the House of Lords in Universal Steam Navigation Co. v. Mckelvie & Co. (16) but the facts are too different from the present case to afford much assistance.

55. Turning again to the suit contract, this signature by the selling agents would not, I think, necessarily allow the selling agents to sue on the contract without joining the Mill Company having regard to the terms of the body of the contract. That being so, I see no reason to alter the opinion which I formed on March 26, 1924, that it was desirable that the Mill Company should be added as a co-plaintiff. I thought the case was one where their "presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit," within the meaning of the second branch of O. I, r. 10 (2). I lay stress on this word 'may.' It should be contrasted with the first branch of the section viz., "any person who ought to have been joined." The effect of the decided cases on this sub-section appears to be that the first branch refers to necessary parties and the second to proper parties.

56. It was next argued on behalf of the defendants that the suit was defective and must have been dismissed unless and until the Mill Company was added. In other words, that the Mill Company were necessary and not merely proper parties. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contended that the selling agents had here a beneficial interest in the completion of the contract, and could accordingly sue in respect of it. This rule extends in England to auctioneers and factors, and is thus expressed in Bowstead on Agency, 7th Edition, page 431 :—

"An agent may sue in his own name on contracts made by him on behalf of his principal in the following case, namely...(b) where, as in the case of factors and auctioneers, he has a special property in, or lien upon, the subject-matter of the contract, or has a beneficial interest in the completion thereof."

Williams v. Millington (17), Robinson v. Rutter (18) and Consolidated Co. v. Curtis (19) may be referred to in this connection.

Similarly in India Sir Arnold White in Subrahmania Pattar v. Narayanan Nayar (20) say as follows (page 135*) :—

"He (Willes, J.), says the proper person to bring the action is the person whose right has been violated. Though there are certain exceptions to the general rule, for instance, in the case of agents, auctioneers or factors, these exceptions are in truth more apparent than real, etc. The real proposition of law, which these and other cases establish, is that where an agent enters into a contract as such, if he has interest in the contract, he may sue in his own name. Unless the contract for the breach of which the action is brought is one made by the agent he has no cause of action because there is no privity between himself and the defendant."

58. It may be that in that particular case this was obiter because it was held on the facts that there was no privity between the plaintiff and defendant (see page 136*), and that accordingly the plaintiffs failed on that ground alone. But the comment on the case in Pollock and Mulla, 4th Edition, page 742, 5th Edition, page 722, is :—

"This is not a real exception to the rule laid down at the beginning of the section, the agent being in such case virtually a principal to the extent of his interest in the contract."

The section in question is s. 230 of the Indian Contract Act which runs :—

"In the absence of any contract to that effect, an agent cannot personally enforce contracts entered into by him on behalf of his principal, nor is he personally bound by them."

Then follow certain specific exceptions which do not apply here.

59. As regards the question of fact whether the selling agents had here a beneficial interest in the completion of the contract, I find that point in favour of the plaintiffs. The details of the agency terms are not perhaps as full as they might be, partly because Mr. Bhagvati very prudently did not cross-examine to bring them out. I think, however, it is sufficiently proved that the terms of business were that the agents were remunerated by commission, but that they took delivery from Mill Company and were debited by the Mill Company with the price of the goods, and that they in their turn delivered the goods to the purchaser and were paid by the purchaser. As the delivery and payment of the six bales were admitted, the details were not gone into, but in the concluding stages of the Trial Counsel for the defendants admitted that the delivery order for the six bales was in the same form as that sent on February 28, 1921 (Ex. C-I), which was signed by the selling agents and addressed to their own godown-keeper. I further find that normally the delivery by the Mill Company to the agents would be at or about the same time as the latter were to deliver the goods to the purchaser. But if the purchaser failed to complete, then I think the loss, if any, would fall on the selling agents in cases where they had once accepted or taken delivery from the Mill Company. For instance, in the present case the Mill Company eventually delivered the bales to the selling agents at the time when the auction-sale took place. On the other hand the selling agents were debited with the suit contract price of the goods and not with the price realised at the auction. Consequently they stood to lose by the amount of the difference between the contract price and the auction price.

60. It was at one time contended that the agents never in fact paid the Company the contract price. But it became clear from the accounts produced that at the date of the auction the selling agents were largely in credit with the Mill Company, and that in fact their account still remained in credit after the contract goods had been debited to them. Accordingly in the concluding stages of the trial it was admitted by the defendants' Counsel that this amounted to payment by the selling agents to the Mill Company. Shortly stated, therefore, I hold that the selling agents were in the position of del credere or guaranteeing agents, and that on the defendants' default they paid their principals, the Mill Company, the amount due by the defendants.

61. I quite appreciate that there is no express assignment here of the Mill Company's right to damages for breach of contract. Even if there had been, the question would still remain whether it would not be wise to add the assignor as a party. I do not wish to go into English practice for there is a difference there between what is made assignable by the Judicature Act and what is assignable in equity. But I may refer to the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Tolhurst v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers 1900 Ltd. (21), where at page 420* he said as follows:—

"It is well settled that as a general rule the benefit of a contract is assignable in equity and may be enforced by the assignee. The assignor ought in ordinary circumstances to be made a party. But I cannot think that this is necessary when the assignor is a mere name, as the Imperial Company is in the present case, without any means and without any executive or Board of Directors, if indeed it has now any corporate existence at all. I am not aware of any authority for this proposition, but it seems to me to be in accordance with the practice in equity, and it is supported by what was said by James, V. C., in Castellen v. Hobson (22)."

In the above case the Imperial Company had sold its undertaking to an amalgamated Company, and then gone into voluntary liquidation, its affairs being wound up and its assets distributed.

62. In the present case the Mill Company is still a going concern, but at the date when the suit was filed, the selling agents, had long since paid to the Mill Company for the contract price of the goods, and so prima facie they would be entitled in equity to an assignment of the Mill Company's rights under the suit contract. And I think they can put their case higher than this. They were in the position of sureties who had paid all they were liable for. Consequently, upon such payment, the selling agents "were invested with all the rights which the creditor had against the principal debtor" and became entitled to the benefit of every security held by the creditor (see ss. 140 and 141 of the Indian Contract Act). I have not been referred to any authority on s. 140, but the words "invested" seems to me a strong one, and coming as it does in a Statute, I do not see why in a case like the present it should not operate as a transfer to the surety of the creditors' rights without the necessity of any written assignment. If so, then one of those rights would be to damages for breach of contract. In that event, there is some authority for holding that even in England if there has been an assignment the surety could sue in his own name (see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XV, page 506, Art. 956), although in general a del credere agent may not be able to do so (see Bowstead on Agency, 6th Edition, page 432).

63. But, however, that may be, it is, I think, clear that at the date of the suit the sole beneficial interest was in the selling agents, and that the Mill Company were only nominal parties, and were in a position resembling that of a bare trustee. On the other hand, it was desirable for the protection of the defendants that the Mill Company should be added so that the defendants should not be exposed to any separate claim by the Mill Company, and that the matter should be adjudicated upon once and for all.

64. Under those circumstances if it had been necessary for me to decide the point, I should have disposed to hold that the Mill Company were proper rather than necessary parties, and that, following the principle of the decisions of this Court in Ravji Appaji v. Mahadev Bapuji (23), and Guruvayya Gouda v. Dattatraya Anant (24), the suit was not barred merely because the Mill Company was not added until after the period of limitation had expired. In the former case it was held that a suit brought originally by a benamidar was not barred on the ground that the person for whom he was a benamidar was not added until after the period of limitation. In the latter case an ejectment suit brought by the manager and one other member of the joint family was held not to be barred merely because other members of the family were added after the period of limitation. Those cases are no doubt distinguishable from the present one, but they show what view our Courts have taken of s. 2: of the Indian Limitation Act, and s. 32 of the C. P. C., and no case exactly in point has been cited to me.

65. In the view, therefore, which I take, the defendants fail in any event in their defence of limitation. But I may add as a word of warning that Bombay Mill Companies and their selling agents would be well advised to see that their selling contracts are free from ambiguity as to who the real vendors are, and that in many cases, to avoid legal difficulties, it may be advisable for both parties to sue as co-plaintiffs, as indeed was the case with the suit brought by the Mathuradas Mills, Ex. K-1. In the other case, Ex. No. 6, the position was clear and the suit was brought by the Sassoon Mills alone.

66. There will accordingly be a decree for the plaintiffs for an amount and interest thereon to be ascertained in accordance with my answers to Issues Nos. 11 and 12. As regards costs, the defendants will pay the plaintiffs' costs of the suit throughout except that the plaintiffs are to pay the costs of adding the Mill Company and the defendants' costs of the hearing on March 26, 1924, and of and occasioned by the adjournment ordered on that day, including their amended written statement, and there will be the usual set-off of costs. There will be interest on judgment at 6 per cent.

Z. K. Suit decreed.

Succession (Property Protection) Act (XIX of 1841), s. 14—Idol, competency of, to make application under Act—Testate succession, application of Act to—Six months' limitation, starting point of.

There is nothing in the Curators Act to show that its application is confined to intestate succession and does not cover cases of testamentary succession. [p. 590, col. 1.]

An idol is a juridical person and is entitled to make an application under the Curators Act. But as an idol must make an application through human agency, an application by a shebait on behalf of idol for possession of property under the Act is competent. [p. 589, col. 2.]

To bring the Curators Act into operation, it is sufficient that the application under the Act be made within six months of the death of the last proprietor, even though the claimant claims succession through an earlier proprietor dead more than six months before the application. [p. 590, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the District Judge, Rungpur, dated the 26th August 1925.

Sir B. C. Mitter and Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta, (with him Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta), for the Petitioner.

Messrs. H. D. Bose and Girijaprasanna Sanyal (with him Babus Mritunjoy Chattapodhyay and Provat Kumar Sen), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was obtained on an application for revision of an order passed by the District Judge of Rungpur, under s. 115 of the C. P. C. The order was passed by the Judge under the provisions of the Succession of Property Protection Act XIX of 1841 directing that the curator appointed under that Act should make over certain properties to one Rai Sundari Dassya.

The facts are these. One Purna Chandra Saha died in 1899. He left a Will under the provisions of which amongst other things it was directed that his widow should remain in possession of the properties for her life. Certain annuities were given to his mother, the opposite party before us, and his grandmother. The widow Sarada Sundari was given authority to adopt a son and it was provided that if she died without making any adoption all the properties left by the testator should vest in two idols and that by the income of the properties the debsheba of the idols should be performed and if there was any surplus left that would be spent for certain charitable and educational purposes. The lady Sarada Sundari died on the 23rd November 1924 and after her death the present petitioner Benode Behary Saha took possession of the properties, moveable and immoveable, left by Sarada Sundari on the allegation that Sarada Sundari had adopted his son Sudhir according to the authority given in the Will of Purna Chandra Saha. Thereupon, the opposite party, the mother of Purna Chandra Saha, Rai Sundari, made an application under Act XIX of 1841 on which the order complained of was made by the District Judge.

The contentions on behalf of the petitioner may be shortly summarised in this way. The opposite party and Purna Chandra belonged to the same family and were agnatic relations. There are two other persons, Bhabani and Banku, who are also descendants from the common ancestor. The idols to whom the property has been left by the testator were established by an ancestor of all these persons. Therefore, all the persons, Purna, the opposite party and the others mentioned above were shebaits of the two idols. Purna used to perform the sheba for 19 days in the month and the other three persons performed the sheba for the remaining 11 days. On this fact, the contention raised is that the mother Rai Sundari who presented the petition describing herself as shebait of the two idols and as such entitled to possession of the properties was not the sole shebait and as the question involved relates to the conflicting claims of shebaits to the custody of the property belonging to the idols the matter does not come within the purview of the Curators Act.

Secondly, the shebait is not one of the persons who are authorised to present an application under that Act.

The third argument is that the dispute does not arise on a question of succession bacause the title of the idols arises for the first time by virtue of the Will and the mother, therefore, cannot claim the properties by succession.

Fourthly, it is urged that there is no finding in the judgment that the applicant was likely to be materially prejudiced if left to the ordinary remedy of a regular suit.

Lastly it is argued that under s. 14 of the Act, this application of Rai Sundari was incompetent as it was not made within six months of the death of Purna Chandra Saha from whom the succession can only be claimed.

With regard to the first point, it may be pointed out that there was no conflicting claim as to the right of shebaitship in the Court below. The question that was raised and which was decided was whether the opposite party was entitled to hold the properties on behalf of his son Sudhir Kumar who was alleged to have been adopted by Sarada Sundari the widow of Purna Chandra. No claim was preferred by Benode Behary, the opposite party, that he was entitled to remain in possession of the properties as one of the joint shebaits and this question has not at all been discussed by the lower Court. This point we cannot allow to be raised for the the first time in revision.

The second point may be answered thus: that the properties were claimed by the idols and that the idols are juridical persons can hardly be disputed. The idols were certainly entitled, therefore, to make the present application under the Curators Act and as is well-known the idols must act through some human agency. The lady Rai Sundari presented the application as shebait of the idols to be put into possession of the properties. There cannot, therefore, be any question of the shebait being the proprietor of the properties; the properties have been ordered to be made over to Rai Sundari only as shebait of the two idols as she describes herself to be.

The third point seems to be somewhat obscure. Although the title of the idols arises from the testamentary provisions of the Will and it is a case of testamentary succession, there is nothing to show that the expression "succession" in the Curators Act must be confined to intestate succession and not apply to testamentary succession. This point also fails.

The next question is with regard to s. 14 of the Act, which lays down. "That this Act shall not be put in force, unless the aforesaid application to the Judge be made within six months of the decease of the proprietor, whose property is claimed by right in succession." Here, the proprietor is said to be the opposite party, Sarada Sundari and she died within six months of the application. The contention on behalf of the petitioner is that succession is not claimed from her as succession is claimed from Purna Chandra who died in 1899. Under the provisions of this section, the application is not maintainable. But as has been observed with regard to a similar contention in the case of Bhimappa v. Khanappa (1) it is not necessary to bring the operation of this Act into play that the succession should be claimed from the last deceased proprietor. The learned Chief Justice in delivering the judgment of the Court in that case observed: "It is, however, admitted that the application was within six months of the death of Basawa, and it is contended on behalf of the opponents that the decease of the proprietor whose property is claimed by right 'in succession' referred to in s. 14, would include the decease of Basawa in the present case, because Basawa was, between the death of her husband and her own decease, the proprietor of the property which is claimed, and it is claimed 'in succession' to her, that is to say, the claimant claims to succeed her in the possession of the property. This view of the section is, we think, correct. The words of the Act appear to have been very carefully chosen. Thus in the beginning of the preamble we find a reference to 'pretended claims of rights by gift or succession.' Here the expression is 'by succession' and is used to express the point of view of the claimant. Then in the second paragraph of the preamble we have 'the circumstance of actual possession when taken upon a succession' that is, regarding the succession from the point of view of the Judge and not from the point of view of an interested party." The learned Chief Justice further observed :—"All that the Judge has to decide is who should be put into possession of the property in succession to the last deceased holder. An application was made to him to come to a decision upon that point within six months of the death of Basawa and we, therefore, think that he acted with jurisdiction in coming to his decision." We agree with this view of the reading of s. 14 of the Curators Act.

With regard to the contention that the District Judge did not come to a finding that the applicant was likely to be materially prejudiced is left to the ordinary remedy of a regular suit, we have to observe that although there is no actual finding in those words, the facts found by the learned Judge sufficiently show that this question was present in his mind, and he expressly refers to the provision of s. 3 of the Act with regard to this application. He has found that the opposite party has taken away all the valuable moveable properties left by the deceased and he claims the properties on behalf of his son. That finding is sufficient to maintain an application under s. 3.

It is unnecessary for us to express any opinion on the question whether Benode Behary would be entitled to the possession of the properties as shebait of the idols or what the rights of parties are under the Will. It is sufficient to say that we do not find that the order of the Judge of the Court below is without jurisdiction or has been made by any irregular exercise of jurisdiction.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs. Hearing-fee five gold mohurs.

moveable property, whether can be offered as security—Time for furnishing security, whether can be extended—Difficulty in procuring cash security, whether sufficient reason.

Order XLI, r. 7 (1) of the C. P. C., requires that the security furnished by an appellant to the Privy Council must be given in cash or Government securities. Under the proviso to the rule the Court may allow some other form of security to be furnished, but an order to this effect must be obtained at the time of granting the certificate. An offer of immoveable property as security at a subsequent stage cannot be accepted.

It is open to the Court to grant an extension of time for furnishing security for cogent reasons, but the mere fact that there is difficulty in furnishing cash security would not be a sufficient cogent reason for extension of time.

Application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the judgment and decree of the High Court, Rangoon, in Civil First Appeal No. 93 of 1921.

Mr. Burjorjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

Carr, J.—Petitioner applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment of a Bench of this Court passed on the 21st January 1924 in Civil First Appeal No. 93 of 1921. Leave was granted on the 26th August, and the certificate issued on the 1st September. Petitioner then had six weeks in which to furnish security, but by reason of the vacation and of certain gazetted holidays she obtained further time to the 12th November. On that day she filed an application offering one Ma E Sein as surety and Ma E Sein also filed a petition stating that she was willing to stand surety in Rs. 4,000 and tendering as security certain immoveable property which she valued at Rs. 6,000. Under r. 61 of the Rules of the Appellate Side of this Court the value of the immoveable property must be at least double the amount of security required. This condition was not fulfilled. Nor is there any statement that the property which is a wooden building is insured. Nor was a draft mortgage-deed annexed. Moreover, O. XLV, r. 7 (1) of the C. P. C., requires that the security shall be given in cash or Government securities, this requirement having been inserted by Act XXVI of 1920. There is a proviso that the Court may allow some form of security to be furnished but this may be done only at the time of granting the certificate. The ffer of immoveable security at this stage was, therefore, inadmissible and petitioner has been called upon to show cause why the certificate should not be withdrawn. Mr. Burjorjee has no real cause to show. He asks for an extension of time within which to furnish security in cash and urges that it is difficult to find cash security. This, however, appears to be an eleventh hour statement and we have no evidence that the petitioner has made any attempt to find cash security or that she has had any difficulty in doing so.

Even were these facts proved it is at least doubtful whether they would be sufficient ground for granting extension of time. The Privy Council has laid down in Burjore v. Bhagana (1) that it is open to the Court to grant an extension of time for cogent reasons. Under the ruling of the Madras High Court in Rangasayi v. Mahalakshmamma (2) a mere difficulty in furnishing cash in time would not be a sufficient cogent reason. I do not, however, think that it is necessary to discuss this latter case. In the case now before us it seems to me that the failure to furnish security within the time allowed is due solely to a mere careless neglect to ascertain what is required by the law and the rules of the Court. I would, therefore, direct that the certificate be cancelled and that the petitioner do pay the costs of respondent. Advocate's fee two gold mohurs.

Maung Gye, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), O. XLVII, r. 7—Review, order granting—Appeal—Grounds of objection.

In view of the provisions contained in r. 1 (w) of O. XLIII of the C. P. C., which permits an appeal against an order granting an application for review, the provisions of r. 7 of O. XLVII of the Code have become superfluous. Even if r. 1 (w) of O. XLIII has to be read with r. 7 of O. XLVII, the only effect of the latter rule is to enumerate certain grounds on which an order granting a review may be objected to and not to restrict the grounds which might be taken in appeal against such order.

Appeal against an order of the First Class Subordinate Judge, at Dharwar, in Miscellaneous Application No. 42 of 1923.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with him R. A. Jahagirdar), for the Appellant.

Mr. Bahadurji (with him Nilkant Atmaram), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—[After stating the facts His Lordship went on:—] The first point taken in the appeal is that the appeal is not competent. Under O. XLIII, r. 1, cl. (w), an appeal lies against an order passed under O. XLVII, r 4, granting an application for review. It was argued, however, that the grounds of appeal are limited by the terms of O. XLVII, r. 7. That r. 7 was s. 629 in the Code of 1882. Under that Code there was no right of appeal against an order granting a review, only as provided for by s. 62—such an order might be objected to on the grounds stated therein. When by the Code of 1908 a right of appeal against an order granting a review was given, it would appear that the provisions of s. 629, which became O. XLVII, r. 7, were not sufficiently reconsidered. Once the right of appeal was given that right could only be restricted by direct prohibition. If O. XLVII, r. 7, had directed that an appeal against an order granting an application for review, which lay by virtue of O. XLIII, r. 1, cl. (w), would not be permitted except on the grounds mentioned in that rule, then the right of appeal already granted would have been restricted. But O. XLVII, r. 7, only says that an order granting an application for review may be objected to on certain grounds. The result of making such an order appealable was that O. XXVII, r. 7, became superfluous. It was no longer necessary to say that an order refusing an application for review was not appealable, while an order granting an application for review had been made an appealable order

In Hari Charan Saha v. Baran Khan (1), the contrary was held. The Judges there said (page. 747*):—

"Order XLVII, r. 7, of the C.P.C., provides that an order rejecting an application for review shall not be appealable, but that an order granting such an application may be objected to on certain grounds None of those grounds can be asserted in this case, and it is quite clear that, in so far as r. 7 of O. XLVII goes, no appeal lies. But it is contended that an appeal lies under O. XLIII, r. 1 cl (w), which provides in general terms for an appeal against 'an order under r. 4 of O. XLVII granting an application for review.' It has, on at least three occasions, been held by this Court that O. XLIII, r. 1, cl. (w), must be read with, and subject to, r 7 of O. XLVII. We refer to the unreported* decisions in Jagana Nath Prasad Singh v. Ramantar Singh (2); Tripura Charan Kul v. Shoroshi Bala (3) and Surendra Nath Talukdar v. Sitanath Das Gupta (4). Following those three decisions, we must hold that this appeal is incompetent and should be dismissed with costs."

In my opinion even if O. XLIII, r. 1, cl. (w), is read with O. XLVII, r. 7, the only effect of that rule is to enumerate certain grounds on which an order granting a review may be objected to. It cannot exclude all other grounds, and as I have pointed ont on a strict construction of the two orders, O. XLVII, r. 7, has become superfluous.

I may add that even assuming that an appeal was not competent the Court would have entertained an application under s. 115 of the Code

Madgavkar, J.—[His Lordship after discussing facts concluded:—] As regards O. XLIII, r. 1, cl. (w), and O. XLVII, r 7, I entirely concur with what has fallen from my Lord the Chief Justice. Order XLIII, r. 1, cl (w), is a new provision, and was perhaps not in the minds of the authors when they reproduced the old s. 629 in the form of O. XLVII, r. 7.

I agree, therefore, with the order proposed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Statement before Police during investigation, use of, at trial—Duty of Judge.

Statements made by any person to a Police Officer in course of an investigation under Ch. XIV, Cr. P. C., cannot be used for any purpose except to contradict a witness at the request of the accused in the manner provided in second paragraph of s. 162 of the Code.

Where a witness supported prosecution in his statement before the Police but resiled from that statement before the Committing Magistrate and Sessions Court, it is the duty of the Judge to withhold from the Jury's knowledge the statement made by the witness to the Police unless it was proved in the manner provided by law at the request of the accused.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Dacca, dated the 4th July 1924.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Jati Mohan Bose, for the Appellants.

Mr. Khundkar, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The two appellants before us have been convicted of constructive murder on a charge framed that they committed an offence punishable under s. 302 read with s. 149, Indian Penal Code. On that conviction they have been sentenced to transportation for life. They were also convicted of rioting but no separate sentence was passed under s. 147, Indian Penal Code.

It is unnecessary to state the facts of the case. It is conceded by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer that he cannot resist one point urged on behalf of the appellants that evidence was admitted that was not admissible under the law. One of the witnesses for the prosecution was a man named Kokari. It is in evidence that this witness before the Police made statements supporting the case for the prosecution. Before the Committing Magistrate he resiled from those statements and his evidence before the Sessions Judge was substantially to the same effect as that given in the Committing Court.

If anything, it was even less favourable to the prosecution. The learned Sessions Judge appears to have overlooked the alteration in the law effected by the recent amendment of s. 162, Cr. P. C. Under that section, as it now stands, statements made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV shall not be used for any purpose except to contradict a witness at the request of the accused in the manner provided in the second paragraph of the section. The admission of this evidence as to the statements made by Kokari to the Police was likely to seriously prejudice the appellants for we find further that though the learned Sessions Judge did not positively draw attention to these statements as evidence against the appellants, he did not, as he should have done, warn the Jury that the statements made by this witness to the Police were no evidence at all in support of the case for the prosecution. Under the present law it was the duty of the Judge to withhold from the Jury's knowledge the statements made by this witness to the Police unless they were proved in the manner provided by law at the request of the accused.

We must accordingly allow this appeal. We set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the appellants and direct that they be re-tried according to law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 476, 476A, 476B—Complaint—Appellate Court, order by—Appeal to High Court, when lies—Discretion of Court—Interference by High Court.

Upon a proper construction of ss. 476, 476A and 476B, Cr. P. C., an appeal would lie to the High Court from an order passed by a District Judge in the following cases:—

(a) where a Munsif has refused an application made to him under s. 476 to make a complaint, there has been an appeal to the District Judge and the District Judge, disagreeing with the Munsif, has made a complaint; [p. 598, col. 1.]

(b) where under s. 476A (the Munsif having taken no action suo motu and not having been asked to take any action) the District Judge, on application to him, makes a complaint or refuses to make a complaint, [ibid.]

In no other case would an appeal lie to the High Court from an order passed by a District Judge as an Appellate Court. [ibid.]

The same procedure would apply to any other chain of three Courts (contemplated by s. 476) of ascending jurisdiction. [ibid.]

The question whether a complaint should be made under s. 476, Cr. P. C., is one of discretion and the High Court is always loath to interfere except in extraordinary cases. [ibid.]

Application against a decision of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 10th July 1925.

Messrs. Yunus, S. N. Bose and R. K. L. Nandkeolyar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This was a matter referred to a Bench by Macpherson, J., on the 2nd September last: it had come before him when sitting as Vacation Judge as a proceeding which purported to be an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Gaya, dated 10th July last. The nature of the matter may be thus summarized.

The respondents to the proceeding now before us brought in 1923 a money suit against the 1st petitioner for a share in certain bhaoli produce rent of some 53 bighas of bakasht land; the 1st petitioner (or appellant here) pleaded payment and in support of this defence referred to certain receipts and papers of account which were produced on his behalf and which were either in part or in whole exhibited in evidence by the petitioners Nos. 2 and 3.

The Munsif (Second Court) of Gaya who tried the suit gave judgment in the respondents' favour for he was (to use his own words) "not satisfied that the signatures on the receipts and the bujhautas were the genuine signatures of these persons" (whose signatures they were alleged to be); the decree was dated 21st July 1924.

The 1st petitioner appealed; the appeal was heard on 5th February, 1925, and was dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge and Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Gaya, who, agreeing with the Munsif that the receipts and bujhautas were not genuine, dismissed the appeal.

Almost immediately after this appeal had been dismissed, the respondents on 16th February 1925, applied under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. to the Munsif, Second Court of Gaya (who was, however, not the same individual as that Munsif who had tried the suit in 1924) requesting him to hear the parties and to make complaint under the provisions of s. 476, Cr. P. C., against the petitioners. They suggested that the petitioners ought to be prosecuted under sections of the Indian Penal Code such as s. 476 (forgery of a receipt) and s. 471 (using as genuine a forged document). This Munsif, however, after hearing the parties refused on 23rd April 1925 to make any complaint as requested. The Munsif seems to have thought that as there was no direct finding of forgery by either the trial or Appellate Courts and as neither of those Courts had thought fit to take any step proprio motu under the provisions of s. 476, he himself should not think it desirable to take any action.

From this decision the respondents, exercising their right under s. 476B of the Cr. P. C. appealed to the District Judge of Gaya who on 10th July, 1925, took a different view to that expressed by the Munsif; he considered (to use his own words) that "a good case for prosecution had been made out and that the prosecution should be sanctioned."

He added

"I, therefore, institute a complaint against Ranjit Singh, Ajodhya Singh and Baggo Singh (the appellants here) for their prosecution under ss. 471 and 193 of the Indian Penal Code or any other section or sections that may apply and forward it to the District Magistrate."

This action was, as a matter of procedure, quite properly taken in accordance with s. 476-B of the Cr. P. C.

From this decision the appellants have purported to appeal to this Court. It was entered as Criminal Appeal No. 133 of 1925. It was admitted as an appeal by Jwala Prasad and Macpherson, JJ., on 24th July 1925. It came, as I have already said, before Macpherson, J. sitting as Vacation Judge; the question was raised before him by the Crown as to whether in a case such as this an appeal lies to this Court and, as there appeared to be some doubt as to this point and some possible conflict of decisions, the learned Judge referred the matter to a Bench.

It may at once be stated that applications to this Court under s. 476-B of the Cr. P. C. have at times been made both as appeals and in revisional jurisdiction: and in other High Courts also. For example in this Court in Criminal Appeal No. 22 of 1925 Gujaram Marwari v. The King-Emperor and Criminal Appeal No. 37 of 1925 Bhuki Sao and Ramdhani Sao v. King-Emperor (which were heard together) the general features of the position were somewhat parallel to those displayed in the matter now under consideration: one Mahabir Sao applied to a Magistrate who had under the provisions of s. 293, Cr. P. C. dismissed a complaint made by another individual asking that that complainant and two others should be ordered by the Magistrate to be prosecuted by virtue of the provisions of s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. The Magistrate refused to make a complaint. Mahabir thereupon appealed to the Sessions Judge who differed from the Magistrate and himself made the complaint requested under s. 476-B, Cr. P. C. The three persons thus ordered to be prosecuted thereupon appealed to this Court; no question was ever raised at any stage of the proceedings as to there being no right or possibility of an appeal. The cases were admitted as appeals by Kulwant Sahay, J., and myself on 4th February, 1925, and were heard as appeals on 16th April, 1925 by Macpherson, J., and myself: the appeal in the case of one appellant was allowed and in the case of the other two rejected.

I need not refer, I think, to cases which have come up as applications in revision: for it is common ground that such have occurred.

In Criminal Appeal No. 115 of 1925 Macpherson, J., apparently decided a case similar in general features to the present one as an appeal: the Magistrate in that case had refused to make a complaint: on appeal under s 476-B the Sessions Judge differed from the Magistrate and himself made the complaint: the person ordered to be prosecuted appealed to this Court: the appeal came before Macpherson, J., sitting as Vacation Judge and the point that no appeal lay was specifically taken. Macpherson, J., then expressed the opinion that, sitting singly, he ought to follow the expression of opinion given by Mullick, J., in Faujdar Rai v Emperor (1) and hold that an appeal did lie: but, whilst expressing this view, he decided to reject the application on its merits, whether it was rightly to be regarded as an appeal or as an application in revisional jurisdiction.

And, in the present case, as has already been observed, the same learned Judge, at a later date (i. e. on 2nd September 1925), the same point being more specifically perhaps raised by the Crown, referred the matter to a Bench. In the Lahore High Court in the case of Mahomed Idris v. Emperor (2) the question as to whether an appeal lies from a decision under s. 476B, Cr. P. C. has been discussed and decided by Martineau and Zafar Ali, JJ. In that case their Lordships held that no appeal lies under s. 476-B of the Cr. P. C. to the High Court from an appellate order of a District Judge making a complaint which the Sub-Judge might himself have made but refused to make. This was a reference to a Bench made by Scott Smith, J., who was doubtful as to whether an appeal lay under such circumstances.

This case, is, of course, directly in point here: but it has been suggested to us that the decision is not legally correct. The judgment is very short and was given on October 24th 1924.

It simply reads thus :—

"The question referred to us in this appeal and in Appeals Nos. 233 and 286 of 1924 is whether an appeal lies to this Court from an appellate order of the District Judge making a complaint which the Subordinate Judge might himself have made under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. Section 476B of the Code gives a right of appeal only when a Court has made or refused to make a complaint under s. 476 or s. 476A, and neither of those sections relates to a complaint made by a Court on appeal from an order of a Subordinate Court refusing to make a complaint. We, therefore, answer the question referred to us in the negative. The appeals will be laid before the Referring Judge for disposal."

In the Calcutta High Court a case similar in features to the present one has been dealt with in revisional jurisdiction and the decision of the Sessions Judge reversed Kalisadhan Addya v. Nani Lal Hazra (3), but the question of the possibility of an appeal did not there arise.

It is, I think, necessary now here to explain the argument which has been well-placed before us upon this question by the learned Counsel who has appeared for the appellants. He draws a distinction in different sets of circumstances between the possibility of an appeal lying from a decision given by an Appellate Court under the provisions of s. 476B He argues that there may be different positions as a result of a proceeding under s. 467B in appeal. The first position is when the original tribunal has made a complaint (i. e. ordered a prosecution under s. 476): the person ordered to be prosecuted has appealed under s. 476B: the Appellate Court has allowed the appeal: in such case he admits that there is no further appeal: though revision by the High Court may be conceivable. This position has been the subject of a decision in the Bombay High Court in the case of a Criminal Appeal, Somabhai Vallavbhai v. Adit Parshottam (4). In that case a Subordinate Judge had on the appeal of one Somabhar under s. 476, Cr. P. C. issued a complaint and directed the prosecution of certain persons, they appealed to a Sessions Judge who allowed the appeal. Somabhar appealed to the High Court, Macleod, C. J. and Shah, J., held that there was no appeal. In their judgment their Lordships state: "We are clearly of opinion that no appeal lies under the provisions of the Code against an order made by the Court to which the Court making a complaint is subordinate." It will be observed that the point raised before us as disclosed by the 4th position (vide infra) was not before the Bombay Court nor decided by it. The 2nd position is when the original tribunal has refused to take action under s. 476: the applicant has appealed under s. 476B; the Appellate Court has dismissed the appeal: he thinks that in this case too there is no futher appeal though again revision by the High Court is conceivable. The 3rd position is when the original tribunal has made a complaint: the person ordered to be prosecuted has appealed: the Appellate Court has dismissed the appeal, he thinks that in this case too there is no further appeal though once more revision by the High Court is possible. The 4th, and, of course, last possible position, is that existing in the present case: the original tribunal has refused to make a complaint: the applicant has appealed and the Appellate Court has itself made a complaint It is argued that in such a case the party ordered to be prosecuted has a right of appeal; and revision also might be possible; except that if an appeal lies revisional jurisdiction would not, it is imagined, be exercised.

This is the position upon which the Lahore High Court has given the decision quoted above: but it seems that a contrary view has been expressed in this Court by Mullick, J., in Faujdar Rai v. Emperor (1).

In that case the circumstances were as follows:—

An application was made, under s. 476, Cr. P. C. to a Sub-Deputy Collector to make a complaint against one Faujdar Rai directing his prosecution for the offences of using a forged document and giving false evidence. The Sub-Deputy Collector, after enquiry, refused to take any action. The complainant appealed to the Collector under s. 476B, Cr. P. C. The Collector disagreed with the Sub-Deputy Collector's view and himself made a complaint. Faujdar Rai thereupon appealed to the Divisional Commissioner who held on 30th March, 1925 that no appeal lay. From the Commissioner's decision Faujdar Rai applied to this Court in revision: not against the Commissioner's decision that no appeal lay but against the Collector's complaint. The first point taken was that the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the Collector's order but Mullick, J., rejected this contention: his Lordship then dealt with the matter in revision and allowed Faujdar's application. But, so far as is here material, the most important matter in the judgment lies in the following observations: the learned Judge writes:

"There is a third point raised, namely, that the learned Commissioner was wrong in declining to hear the appeal preferred by the petitioner. I think the contention must be accepted. Section 476B of the Cr P. C. appears to contemplate that if an Appellate Court sets aside the order of the Original Court, the party prejudicially affected has a right of appeal to the Court to which appeals from that Appellate Court ordinarily lie. In this case, therefore, the Commissioner had jurisdiction to hear the appeal from the order of the Collector and to set it aside, if necessary, and I am asked to direct that the criminal prosecution should not proceed till the Commissioner has disposed of the appeal. In my opinion it is not necessary to make any such order as I think I have jurisdiction to interfere under s. 115, C. P. C., and s. 107 of the Government of India Act."

If this view is correct the same reasoning would apply in the present case and the person against whom the Appellate Court (i. e. the District Judge) has under s. 476B made a complaint could appeal to the High Court.

It is important in endeavouring to come to a correct decision upon this question to examine carefully the provisions of ss. 476, 476A and 476B in order to ascertain what is their proper construction. I may here say that as a result of such investigation as I have been able to make I have not been able to ascertain that in the Report of the Joint Committee on the Bill to make in the Cr. P. C. the amendments now comprised in s. 476B or in the Debates when the Bill was in the Legislature the question now arising was in any way envisaged: and indeed it was hardly likely that it should have been in view of its somewhat involved nature.

Section 476 contemplates that a Court may either of its own motion or on application make a complaint. Section 476A contemplates that an Appellate Court may make a complaint if its Subordinate Court has taken no action under s. 476 suo motu or has not rejected any application made to it to do so. Section 476B gives a right of appeal to an Appellate Court under certain circumstances.

(a) Where the Appellate Court's Subordinate Court has refused on application made to it under s. 476 to make a complaint;

(b) where an Appellate Court has refused on application made to it under s. 476A to make a complaint;

(c) where the Appellate Court's Subordinate Court has made a complaint either suo motu or on application, i. e. included in the words, "or against whom such a complaint has been made;"

(d) where an Appellate Court has itself made a complaint.

In following out the effect of this it will be simplest to illustrate by reference to Munsif, District Judge and High Court as instance of Original, Appellate and Superior Appellate Courts.

It would seem clear that in case,

(a) where a Munsif has refused an application made to him under s. 476 to make a complaint, an appeal lies to the District Judge by the applicant; the position does not fall within s. 476A but within s. 476: at the appeal no complaint has yet been made: the District Judge may take the same view as the Munsif and dismiss the appeal. In such case there is no sort of prescribed procedure for an appeal to the High Court. On the other hand the District Judge may disagree with the Munsif and himself make a complaint and the complaint then is amenable to the provisions of s. 476; that is to say, it is, under s. 476B, subject to appeal to the High Court: for s. 476B reads:

"Any person against whom a complaint under s. 476 has been made by any Court".

In the case mentioned the District Judge is making the complaint under s. 476, the District Judge's Court is subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of s. 195, sub-s. (3) of the Cr. P. C. and, therefore, the appeal lies to the High Court.

As to (b) the Munsif has done nothing and has been asked to do nothing. The District Judge has either suo motu or on application made a complaint. All this is under s. 476A. The complaint is amenable to the provisions of s. 476: clearly the complaint can under the provisions of s. 476B be the subject of appeal to the High Court from the District Judge. For the only complaint is by the District Judge.

As to (c) the Munsif has suo motu or on application made a complaint: clearly there is an appeal to the District Judge under s. 476B. The District Judge may uphold the Munsif's view but in dismissing the appeal he (the District Judge) makes no complaint: and it is only against the complaint that so far as (c) is concerned a right of appeal is given. But the District Judge may direct the withdrawal of the complaint: but even so the District Judge makes no complaint and it will be once more observed that it is only when the District Judge makes the complaint that the provisions of s. 476 apply to it.

Lastly as to (d) the Munsif has done nothing and has never been asked to do anything under s. 476. But the District Judge has made a complaint either suo motu or on application under s. 476A: to this complaint the provisions of s. 476 are applicable: and under s. 476B such a complaint can be the subject of appeal: but to what Court? Obviously only to the High Court because it is from the District Judge.

In my opinion, therefore, upon a proper construction of ss. 476, 476A and 476B and still retaining the illustration of the three ascending Courts as Munsif, District Judge and High Court, there would lie an appeal from the District Judge to the High Court:

(a) Where the Munsif has refused on application made to him under s. 476 to make a complaint, where there has been an appeal to the District Judge and where the District Judge, disagreeing with the Munsif, has made a complaint;

(b) where under s. 476A (the Munsif has taken no action suo motu and has not been asked to take any action) the District Judge has (a) on application to him made a complaint (b) on application to him has refused to make a complaint.

I can see no possibility of an appeal lying under any other of the positions referred to.

The same reasoning would, of course, apply to any other chain of three Courts (contemplated by s. 476) of ascending jurisdiction. Being therefore of opinion that in the present case an appeal does lie, one must, therefore, examine the circumstances under which the District Judge was induced to make the complaint.

I think it is desirable to remark, as is pointed out by Macleod, C. J., and Shah, J., in the case decided in the Bombay High Court that the question whether a complaint should be made under s. 476, Cr. P. C. is almost invariably a matter of discretion: and the High Court is under those circumstances always loath to interfere except in extraordinary cases.

It is necessary, therefore, to look first at the original judgment given by the Munsif in the suit which he decided in July, 1924. The action was brought by the plaintiff for recovery of his share in the produce of certain bakasht lands in possession of the 1st petitioner. The only substantial defence which appears to have been put forward was that the defendant had in fact paid what was due; there were other questions raised one of which was that part of the lands were raiyati lands and part bakasht and that the plaintiff could not sue in one and the same suit for rent for both kinds of lands. This point is only of importance because in support of the plea of payment the defendant produced certain documents of account (bujhautas) in respect of the alleged payment of what was due with regard to the bakasht lands and certain receipts in respect of the raiyati lands. The Munsif undoubtedly held that these bujhautas and eceipts were not genuine. It would not e, I think, right for me to enter in detail upon the reasons why the Munsif came to this opinion (in case it might be thought that I was expressing any view of my own as to the authenticity of these documents) but I may state that, apart from observing that, so far as he could judge from the caligraphy, he was not satisfied that the signatures purporting to have been made on behalf of the plaintiff were genuine, he gave several other grounds in support of that view. For instance with regard to the bujhautas he suggested that they showed a set-off in the defendant's favour, in respect of the alleged share of a 3rd party, for the inclusion of which there appeared to be no sort of justification; again, he thought that under the circumstances, which disclosed litigation still existing between the parties with regard to the lands in question, it was highly improbable that clear receipts and bujhautas would have been, as the defendant alleged, granted to him by the plaintiffs or indeed that the defendant would under such circumstances have in fact paid what was alleged to have been due to the plaintiffs. He concludes his summing up of the case in the following words:—

"Considering all this I disbelieve the defendant's plea of payment and hold the bujhautas and receipts filed by him not to be genuine."

The defendant appealed and it does not appear that the Munsif was then asked or thought fit to take any action under the provisions of s 476 of the Cr. P. C. The appeal was decided by the Additional Sessions Judge and Subordinate Judge of the Third Court of Gaya on the 5th February. The appeal was dismissed. The learned Judge, who again points out that, in view of the disputes which were going on between the parties, it was highly unlikely that the plaintiffs would grant receipts which would have imperilled their position in the other litigation which was principally concerned with a partition suit and who further draws attention to certain intrinsic improbabilities in connection with the genuineness of the bujhautas and receipts, agreed with the Munsif that neither the receipts nor the bujhautas were genuine. As I have mentioned before, very shortly after the appeal had been concluded, application was made by the plaintiffs to the Munsif of the Court before which the original suit had been tried, asking that action should be taken under the provisions of s. 476, Cr. P. C. The Munsif before whom this application came was not the same individual as the Munsif who had tried the case. He seems to have thought in his decision, given on the 23rd April last, refusing to take action, that no prima facie case of forgering or the like had been made out. He observes that neither the Trial nor Appellate Court had specifically found that the documents were forged and comments upon the fact that neither of those Courts had apparently thought fit of their own motion to direct a prosecution I need not point out that such reasoning is not exhaustive, for, if it was always to be left solely to the self-acting motion of the Courts concerned to institute a complaint, much of s. 476 would be surplusage; and, indeed, it is well-known that it is frequently only upon application made to it that a Court either under s. 476 or 476A of the Cr. P. C., takes action. The Munsif proceeds to state that although the Courts expressed the view that the documents were not genuine it does not follow that they were forged; it is again, to my mind, obvious that the questions whether the documents were forged or not by or on behalf of the petitioners or whether they were used in any way by or on behalf of them, they (the petitioners) knowing that they were forged are matters which are to be contemplated as the subject of the prosecution which has now eventually been ordered. The Munsif, however, remarks that the mere fact that neither the Trial nor Appellate Court took any action of their own motion under s. 476, Cr. P. C., proves that the matter was not considered sufficiently serious to justify a prosecution: I have already pointed out that this is fallacious reasoning. The Munsif, lastly, observes that the fact that the plaintiffs asked the Court to issue a complaint shows malice and grudge; but it is hardly to be understood necessarily that such is the case; or otherwise it would be difficult to envisage an instance where any private individual could successfully make an application under the provisions either of s. 476 or 476A of the Cr. P. C. I do not, therefore, think that the reasoning upon which the Munsif bases his refusal to make a complaint can be regarded as sound.

The applicants appealed to the District Judge of Gaya and on the 10th July last the learned Judge differed from the Munsif and instituted a complaint. He points out that both the Trial and the Appellate Courts had clearly found that the receipts and bujhautas were not genuine and he observes that the conclusions at which those Courts had arrived appeared to him to be based upon some good grounds: he also refers to some of those grounds. To my mind it is extremely difficult to see how it is possible for this Court to interfere with the decision to which the District Judge has come; and I may say, indeed, that had I been in the position of the Munsif before whom the application was made I have little doubt but that I should have adopted the view that a complaint ought to have been instituted.

The learned Counsel, who has appeared for the appellants here, has urged against the order of the District Judge instituting a complaint against his clients a variety of circumstances upon which he bases an argument that the reasons which were given by the Trial and Appellate Courts for thinking that the receipts and bujhautas were not genuine were mistaken. He points also to the fact that a second appeal against the appellate decree of the Subordinate Judge preferred to this Court has been admitted. It is true that in their application before the Munsif, asking him to institute a complaint, reference is made to the fact that the Government Examiner of documents had reported upon them in their (the applicants') favour and it would seem that the opinion of the Expert Examiner was before the Munsif, when the application was made to him. The Munsif, however, does not pay much attention to this report as he rightly points out that the Expert has not yet been cross examined. The value of the Expert's opinion, however, and the other matters which have been referred to by the learned Counsel for the appellants here are matters which it seems to me can only properly be gone into during the course of the prosecution proceedings which have been directed. To my mind there was no undue delay in the application to the Munsif. It is impossible for this Court to hold that the District Judge of Gaya has wrongly or unreasonably exercised his discretion. Two Courts have, rightly or wrongly, held that the documents in question are not genuine, and, under those circumstances, if the District Judge thinks that there is a case which ought to form the subject-matter of a prosecution it is not, in my, opinion, an occasion upon which this Court should, unless extraordinary circumstances were visible which do not appear here, interfere with what has been done.

Under those circumstances, in my view, the appeal should be dismissed.

Adami, J.—I agree.

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Case filed in one Court—Trial by another—Jurisdiction to file complaint.

It is the Court trying the case and not the Court in which the complaint was originally filed that is competent to make a complaint under s. 476, Cr. P. C. Jeebun Krista Shaw v. Benoy Krista Shaw, 6 C. W. N. 35 and Putiram Ruidas v. Mahomed Kasem, 3 C. W. N. 33, referred to.

Rule against an order of the Sessions Judge, Backergunge, dated the 3rd August 1925.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar and Ramendra Chandra Roy, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ashraf Ali, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner filed a petition of complaint on the 14th June 1924 in the Court of Mr. Suresh Chandra Sen, Deputy Magistrate, First Class, under ss. 395, 380 and 147, Indian Penal Code. Mr. Sen examined the petitioner on oath and thereafter the case was transferred to the file of Mr. L. C. Guha, Deputy Magistrate, First Class, for disposal. Mr. L. C. Guha held a local enquiry and then dismissed the petitioner's complaint under s. 203, Cr. P. C. He observed, however, that there was no occasion for proceedings against the petitioner under s. 211, Indian Penal Code. Mr. Sen before whom the petition of complaint had been filed thereafter made a complaint under s. 476, Cr. P. C., against the petitioner and sent the complaint to Mr. Das, Deputy Magistrate, for necessary action. After a preliminary enquiry the petitioner was committed to the Court of Session to take his trial under s. 211, Indian Penal Code. He was convicted by the Assistant Sessions Judge and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of one year and a half. An appeal against the said conviction and sentence was summarily dismissed by Mr. Carter, Sessions Judge, on the 3rd August 1925.

It is now contended before us that the petitioner's case having been transferred from the file of Mr. Sen to that of Mr. Guha, Deputy Magistrate, who tried the case on the merits, the former had no jurisdiction to make the complaint under s. 476, Cr. P. C. The matter really depends upon the meaning of the words "which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court" occurring in s. 476, Cr. P. C. It will be noticed that the same words occurred in cl. (b) of sub-s. (1) of s. 195, Cr. P. C. Now, it has been held in cases under the old s. 195, Cr. P. C., that it is the Court trying the case which is the proper authority to grant sanction and not the Court before which proceedings are instituted and by which process is issued [see the cases of Jeebun Krista Shaw v Benoy Krista Shaw (1) and Putiram Ruidas v. Mahomed Kasem (2).] No doubt under the present Code, sanction to prosecute under s. 195 has been done away with and in its place a complaint has to be made in writing under s. 476, Cr. P. C. We think, however, that the ratio of the decisions referred to above applies and that if a complaint had to be made in this case it should have been made by Mr. Guha and not by Mr. Sen. In this view of the matter the contention urged before us succeeds and we make the Rule absolute. The result is that the conviction and sentence are set aside and the petitioner will be discharged from his bail-bonds.

SAYED ALLY—APPLICANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499, Excep. 9—Defamation—Statement made by party to judicial proceeding, whether privileged—Absolute privilege, doctrine of, applicabilily of.

The law of absolute privilege does not apply in India in the case of criminal prosecutions for perjury. In a prosecution for perjury, however, in respect of a statement made by a party to a judicial proceeding, the special position occupied by the party must not be lost sight of. [p. 601, col. 2.]

Parties and witnesses in all judicial proceedings are in a peculiar position and it is necessary, if their interests are to be safe-guarded, that they should be allowed to make statements freely subject to the ordinary law of perjury. Generally speaking, there would be a presumption that what they say is said bona fide in the protection of their own interests, and they would be protected by the provisions of the Ninth Exception to s. 499 of the Penal Code. [ibid.]

Criminal revision being review of an order of the Magistrate, Myaungmya, in Cr. Reg. No. 105 of 1924.

Mr. D. Dutt, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In a civil suit instituted by the petitioner he stated when examined as a witness in answer to a question by his own Advocate: "I cited Abdul Malik, the writer of the promissory note, as my witness. I don't want to examine him now as I heard that he has been bought by the other side." The petitioner was prosecuted for defamation by Abdul Malik, and was convicted under the provisions of s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code. He appealed to the Sessions Judge who confirmed the conviction, but reduced the sentence to a fine of Rs. 100. He has now come to this Court in revision against the conviction. The statement made by him was clearly defamatory, and I agree with the lower Court that he has quite failed to prove that Abdul Malik had been guilty of corrupt practices. In my view of the law, however, it does not necessarily follow that by making this statement the petitioner was guilty of a criminal offence under s. 499.

The contention put forward on his behalf is that the statement made by the petitioner in Court was absolutely privileged, and that he cannot be prosecuted for defamation with regard to it. Under English Law this would be the case, and there is authority for the view that the same law is applicable in India. The High Court of Madras took that view in the case of Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (1) and the High Court of Bombay took the same view in the case of Queen-Empress v. Babaji (2).

But a contrary view has been taken by the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad and a Bench of this Court of which I was a member has held yesterday [McDonnell v. Emperor (3)] that the law of absolute privilege does not apply in India in the case of criminal prosecutions for perjury. The decision in our case had direct reference to the case of an Advocate, but the same principles would apply to the case of parties and witnesses. I must, therefore, hold that the law of absolute privilege is not applicable in India.

But although the law of absolute privilege does not apply in prosecutions of this nature, the special position occupied by witnesses and parties must not be lost sight of. I have been referred to the case of Isuri Prasad Singh v. Umrao Singh (4) where certain accused persons had stated in an application for transfer that the case against them had been falsely instituted at the instance of one Umrao Singh. It was held that having regard to the position in which the accused persons were it could not be held, that there had been a want of good faith. That case can be differentiated from the present case, as the persons in that case were accused of a criminal offence, whereas the petitioner occupied the position of a plaintiff in a civil prooeeding. But the same general principles are applicable in the case of parties and witnesses in all judical proceedings. They are in a peculiar position, and it is necessary, if their interests are to be safeguarded, that they should be allowed to make statements freely subject of course to the ordinary law of perjury. Generally speaking, there would be a presumption that what they said was said bona fide in the protection of their own interests, and that they would, therefore, be protected by the provisions of the Ninth Exception to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code. Both the lower Courts have held that the burden of proving that a statement which is on the face of it defamatory falls within the provision of one of the Exceptions lies on the person accused, and this is no doubt perfectly correct. But the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge in the present case have, I think, overlooked the special position occupied by a person who is a party to or witness in a judicial proceeding, and they have not considered the special presumptions which may fairly be drawn in such cases. The petitioner brought evidence to show that he had reason to believe that money had been offered to the complainant. The Magistrate did hold that the evidence of these witnesses was unreliable but he placed the burden of proof very strictly on the petitioner. The Sessions Judge did not express any opinion on the subject as to whether these witnesses were or were not telling the truth, but held that even if their evidence were accepted as correct that still would not be sufficient. With this finding I am unable to agree. The witness Abdullah says that he was asked by the petitioner to make enquiries about a visit made to the complainant's house, and that he was told that there had been an offer to pay Mallick money. Shwe Babu corroborates this. Abdullah says he told the petitioner what he had heard. It is prefectly correct, as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, that this evidence, even if true, did not justify a statement that money had been accepted. But it would be sufficient to raise alarm in the mind of the petitioner with regard to his litigation and there would in such a case be a justifiable presumption that in saying what he did in Court he was acting bona fide in protection of his own interests in the litigation. It is to be noted that all he said was that he heard that Abdul Malik had been bought by the other side. He was not cross examined on this point at all and he was not asked what exactly it was he had heard. Had Abdullah and Shwe Babu been entirely false witnesses it would have been an easy matter for them to have made their case still stronger, and to have given evidence that would quite clearly have justified the statement of the petitioner. The conviction in this case was, in my opinion, upheld on erroneous grounds by the learned Sessions Judge, and it is by no means clear that the learned Magistrate would have held the petitioner to have been guilty had he had in mind the special position occupied by a person who was a witness and a party to a case. In all the circumstances of the present case I think that there was sufficient material on the record to justify a presumption that the statement was made by the petitioner bona fide in the protection of his own interests. That does not, of course, mean that I hold it proved that the complainant in the case was in any way guilty of improper conduct. The information received by the petitioner may have been incorrect or mistaken, and it is certainly not proved that the complainant took any money at all.

But although the petitioner has not proved that he had any ground for his fears, there is sufficient ground for presuming that the remarks made by him in his special position as a litigant were made by him bona fide in the protection of his own interests. I do not think, therefore, that the conviction under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code wss justified. I set aside the conviction of the petitioner, and direct that he be acquitted and released so far as this case is concerned; the fine, if paid, will be refunded to him.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J.—In the appeal No. 134, the first point taken is that the Jury wrongly convicted the accused of a minor offence under s. 411, which was one triable by the Judge with the aid of Assessors whereas the charge against him under s. 412 was triable by a Jury. I do not think it necessary to discuss this question at any length. The case is one to which the provisions of sub-s. (3) of s. 269 do not apply, inasmuch as no charge was framed against the accused under s. 411. It is certainly the case that the trial was actually one by a Jury; and no application was made (as it might have been, when the question of the possibility of the accused being convicted under s. 411 was discussed in the address of the Assistant Public Prosecutor) to have a separate charge framed under s. 411, so that the provisions of that subsection might apply. There is authority for saying the accused cannot, therefore, now complain of verdict having been given by the Jury and accepted by the Judge: vide the judgment of Chandavarkar, J., in Mavsing Bechar v Emperor (1). Apart from that we have a clear authority of a Divisional Bench of this Court in Changouda Pirgouda v. Emperor (2) for the view that in a case like the present, although there the point arose in a reverse way, the provisions of s. 238 must be regarded as absolutely uncontrolled, so that the Jury had authority to convict the accused of the minor offence under s. 411, and there is nothing invalid in that verdict being accepted by the Judge and the accused sentenced thereon. There are remarks to the same effect in the judgment of Candy, J., which preceded the Full Bench decision in King-Emperor v Parbhushankar (3) and there is authority of one of the Judges in Pattikadan Ummaru v. Emperor (4) to the same effect. It would lead to very great complications if the view put before us that the accused can go into the facts on his appeal in spite of the provisions of s. 418, were accepted. Accordingly, in my opinion, we should only consider the question whether there has been any misdirection or non-direction amounting to misdirection, which prejudiced the accused and which would justify our interference with the unanimous verdict of the Jury convicting him under s. 411. * * * * * *

It seems to me, therefore, that both the appeals fail and should be dismissed.

As regards the question of punishment, dacoities would not be so common, if the dacoits did not find it so easy to dispose of stolen property, and we do not think that the sentences are too severe. We, therefore, decline to interfere with regard to them.

Madgavkar, J.—A charge in the Sessions Division of Poona under s. 412, Indian Penal Code, is triable with the aid of a Jury and a charge under s. 411 with the aid of Assessors. In the present case the only charge against all the appellants was under s. 412, Indian Penal Code, and the trial was, therefore, rightly by a Jury. And under s. 238 of the Cr. P. C., the appellants could clearly be convicted under s. 411, Indian Penal Code. Under these circumstances, according to the Full Bench decision in King-Emperor v. Parbhushankar (3) the provisions of s. 418 of the Cr. P. C. apply, and the present appeal does not lie on facts. The law did not require the Court to frame a separate charge under s. 411, Indian Penal Code, nor did any of the parties so apply. If the view of the appellants, however, is accepted, the result would be that, so long as a Jury is of opinion that the appellants were not guilty of an offence under s. 412, or even under s. 411 they remain a Jury, but immediately they come to the conclusion that they are guilty under s. 411, they become Assessors. This is a view which the law does not permit and it is impossible to accept it.

I agree, therefore, with the view of my learned brother. The appeals must be dismissed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 497—Adultery—Marriage, proof of—Statement of complainant, whether sufficient.

In a prosecution for adultery the marriage must be strictly proved. For the purposes of such a prosecution the marriage cannot be held to have been proved merely by the statement of the complainant.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Second Additional Magistrate, Rangoon, in Cr. Reg. No. 648 of 1924.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, a Gurkha, was convicted of adultery and ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 50, or in default, to suffer two months' rigorous imprisonment.

In the first place, on the evidence, the prosecution have not proved that complainant and Jesuda were married.

Complainant, also a Gurkha, states that he and Jesuda were married according to Hindu rites at Maymyo, five years ago. The ceremony was performed by a Brahmin whose name he has forgotten. Til Bahadur and Sukawala, the parents of Jesuda, were present at the marriage ceremony and gave her in marriage when she was 12 years old. If they were married according to the Hindu rites there must have been witnesses also. Neither the Brahmin, nor the parents, nor any of the witnesses present at the marriage at Maymyo was called to prove the marriage. Jesuda was not called to give evidence till about six months after the case was filed and when complainant was about to be ordered to pay compensation to accused for bringing a false case.

In adultery cases marriage must be strictly proved. As this has not been done, I set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the appellant. The fine if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 386 (1) (a), 488—Order for maintenance charged on joint estate—Sale and attachment of moveable property owned jointly by husband, whether permissible.

Where the amount of maintenance awarded under s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. is made a charge on the joint estate of the husband and his brothers, the order can be enforced by attachment and sale of the husband's share in moveable property owned jointly by the husband and his brothers.

Per Fawcett, J.—The words "moveable property belonging to the offender" in s. 386 (1) (a) of the Cr. P. C. are wide enough to cover the share of the offender in a joint Hindu family estate so far as it consists of moveable property, and an order for maintenance under s. 488 of the Code can, therefore, be enforced by the attachment and sale of such share, although this method of recovery should not ordinarily be resorted to.

Application for revision of an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Hukeri.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J.—In this case one Gurlingava got an order for maintenance against her husband, Basappa, in October 1919 under s. 488, Cr. P. C. Under that order the amount awarded as maintenance to her was Rs. 15 per month and it was expressly declared that that amount was a charge on the joint estate. This refers to the fact that Basappa was a member of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and two brothers, Dundappa and Shivalingappa. In the order with which we are now concerned it is stated by the Magistrate that these three brothers live separate, but their property is still undivided. Gurlingava applied to the Magistrate, First Class, Hukeri, praying that a cloth shop, which it was alleged belonged to the three joint brothers at Sankeshwar, should be attached and that the amount of maintenance due to her should be recovered in that manner. A warrant was issued for attachment of this property of the joint family accordingly, and the Police under this authority attached certain saris of the shop and produced them before the Magistrate. Shivalingappa then put in an application stating that the property attached by the Police was not joint property, but was his own self-acquired property, and asked that the attachment should, therefore, be removed. He further contended that in any case the amount that could be recovered was only Rs. 180 and not Rs. 645, as claimed by Gurlingava. This latter contention was allowed by the Magistrate in view of the amendment of s. 488, under which maintenance for only one year prior to the date of the warrant is recoverable. On the other point, after inquiry he held that the property attached was not the separate property of Shivalingappa but was joint property, and that Shivalingappa was in possession of that property as manager of the joint family. He accordingly held that under the order of 1919 the maintenance chargeable on the joint family estate could be recovered from Shivalingappa in the manner proposed, namely, by attachment and sale of the moveable property in question. From this order Shivalingappa has applied to us in revision.

The main contention of Mr. Desai on his behalf is that, assuming that the property in dispute is joint, as held by the First Class Magistrate, he has no jurisdiction to attach it under s. 488, Cr. P. C., read with s. 386 of the same Code. This contention is based upon the fact that s. 488, sub-s. (3), authorises the Magistrate in case of breach of the order to issue a warrant for levying the amount due in the manner provided for levying fines, that is to say, in the manner provided by s. 386. Under sub-s. (1) of that section the Court can issue a warrant for levy of the amount by attachment and sale of "any moveable property belonging to the offender", and there is a form provided for this particular warrant, namely, No. 37 of Sch. V, and a similar form for a warrant under s. 488, namely, No. 41, in that Schedule. Both these forms use the same language as that in cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 386, namely, moveable property "belonging to" the person against whom an order has been made either for maintenance or fine. The warrant in this particular case was issued accordingly, and we are not now concerned with the question of the issue of a warrant to a Collector of a District to realise the amount by execution under cl. (b) of sub-s. (1) of s. 386. Mr. Desai's contention is that the words "belonging to" mean "belonging exclusively to" the person concerned, and that a share in joint family property is not property belonging to Basappa which can be attached and sold under this particular power. He further refers us to the new sub-ss. (6A) and (6B) inserted in s. 88 of the Cr. P. C. in 1923, under which inquiries can be made into claims preferred or objections made to the attachment of any property attached under that section. He says that this indicates that the Legislature contemplated the possibility of an interest in the property being attached and dealt with under s. 88, and, therefore, has made provison for inquiries into such claims or objections, but that the same does not apply to s. 386 This argument, however, does not seem to me to be very cogent, because sub-s. (2) of s. 386 authorises the Local Government to make rules for the summary determination of any claims made by any person other than the offender in respect of any property attached in execution of a warrant. It, therefore, does at any rate provide machinery by which inquiries can be made into claims and objections in a similar manner to claims and objections under s. 88. The main question, however, still remains whether cl. (a) of s. 386, sub-s. (1), should be construed as referring to property solely belonging to a person, and as excluding any interest in joint family property or the like. There is no doubt authority for Mr. Desai's contention. In Queen-Empress v. Sita Nath Mitra (1) the question was referred to the High Court whether joint moveable property was saleable under s. 386, Cr. P. C., and the High Court in their order stated that "in regard to moveables we think the Magistrate can only attach moveables of which the deceased was sole owner". No reasons, however, are given for that particular ruling, and, therefore, it does not help us very much. There is another ruling to the same effect by the Madras High Court, recorded in Weir's Law of Offences and Criminal Procedure, 4th Edition, Vol. II, page 442. In that case the District Magistrate submitted for orders of the High Court certain proceedings in which a distress warrant had been issued for seizure and sale of moveable property belonging to the offender and two others, members of an undivided family. And the High Court say:—

> "The mode of levying pecuniary penalties must be strictly confined to the provisions of the law that gives the jurisdiction. Section 307 (386) of the Cr. P. C directs that the warrant for the levy of fine 'shall authorise the distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender'. This language denotes things which may be taken by distress and then sold so as by the mere act of sale, to pass the property in them—not mere rights and interests or shares in joint moveables. In case where the fine cannot be levied by the distress and sale of the convict's own property there is the very sufficient remedy of an alternative term of imprisonment."

Now weight must, of course, be attached to that ruling. But it seems to me unduly to limit by Judge-made law the wide words "moveable property belonging to the offender". There are no doubt considerations in favour of the property that is attached ordinarily belonging exclusively to the offender. This clearly obviates disputes which cannot be dealt with by a Criminal Court, so well as by a Civil Court. On the other hand, I think, considerable weight must be attached to the fact that, if it is held that only moveable property solely belonging to the offender can be attached under s. 386, a person who, as a member of a joint Hindu family, has no separate property but a very valuable interest in the joint family property, entirely escapes the ordinary provision made for the recovery of a fine by attachment and sale of moveable property. I think that, before the Court holds that this was really intended by the Legislature, there should be clearer ground than exists at present for taking that view. I am supported in this by the corresponding provisions of the law in regard to recovery of a decretal debt by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's moveable property. The present law is contained in s. 60 of the C. P. C., under which (subject to certain exceptions) the "property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power, which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf", is liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree against him. Thus it will be noted that this section uses the same words "belonging to". But Mr. Desai contends that the addition of the words "over which or the profits of which he has a disposing power", etc., extends the section to the case of a family property, and that the fact that the Legislature did not insert corresponding words in clause (a) of sub-s. (1) of s 386 supports his contention. No doubt that is an argument which would be entitled to consideration, if s. 60 of the C. P. C. was the sole law to be considered in connection with this question.

(1) 20 C. 478; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 323.

The history of the attachability of a judgment-debtor's interest in joint family property goes back to very early times, before even a C. P. C. was enacted. Thus before Act VIII of 1859 was enacted, it had been held by the Sudder Diwani Adalat in this Province that a judgment-debtor's share in joint family property could be taken in execution under a judgment against him obtained by his personal creditor. The rulings to that effect will be found stated in Vasudev Bhat v. Venkatesh Sanbhav (2) and in the elaborate judgment of Westropp, C. J., it was held thus:

"It must be regarded as the settled law of this Presidency, not only that one of several co-parceners in a Hindu family may, before partition, and without the assent of his co-parceners, sell, mortgage, or otherwise alien, for valuable consideration, his share in the undivided family estate, moveable or immoveable, but also that such a share may be taken in execution under a judgment against him at the suit of his personal creditor."

Now the section in Act VIII of 1859 corresponding to s. 60 of the present Code is s. 205, which runs as follows:—

"The following property is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, namely, lands, houses, goods, money, bank-notes...Government securities, bonds, or other securities for money debts, shares in the capital or joint stock of any Railway, banking, or other public company or corporation, and all other property whatsoever, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the defendant, and whether the same be held in his own name or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf."

It will be noticed that the words used are "property belonging to" the defendant, and there are no words about his disposing power, such as are now contained in s. 60 of the present Code.

The Privy Council in Syud Tuffuzzool Hossein Khan v. Rughoonath Prasad (3) considered a case where the appellant had sued upon a chance of success under an award not yet made, which had been put to auction in execution and bought by him. Their Lordships held that, as this s. 205, to which I have just referred, used the word "property," and as a mere right of suit was not "property" but a title to recover future property, the judgment-creditor could not recover the amount he sought by that particular process. But the judgment also deals with the question whether such a share could not be attached and sold in execution under this s. 205. Their Lordships said (page 50*):

"Mr. Leith referred in his argument to the family property of Hindus, and urged that such a share in such property may be attached and sold in execution. No doubt can be entertained that such a share is property and that a decree-holder can reach it. It is specific, existing, and definite; but it is not properly the subject of seizure under this particular process, [that is to say the process by which the decree-holder had tried to get it in that particular case], but rather by process direct against the owner of it, whether by seizure or sequestration, or appointment of a Receiver."

In Kalee Pudo Banerjee v. Choitun Pandah (4) Couch, C. J., refers to this ruling, and suggests that a creditor of a member of a joint Hindu family under this s. 205 has a remedy against the property to which his debtor may be entitled, although it may be undivided property of the family, and it cannot be predicated that he has any definite share of it. That view has been followed at any rate in this Presidency. Therefore it seems to me that there is authority, in regard to the corresponding provisions of the C. P. C., for holding that the words "moveable property belonging to" suffice to cover a share in a joint Hindu family estate, so far as it consists of moveable property. Accordingly I am not prepared to go the length of Mr. Desai's contention and hold that, in no circumstances whatever, will a Magistrate be justified in directing the attachment of joint family property and having it sold.

On the other hand, as I have already said, that is a method of recovery which should not ordinarily be resorted to. But in the present case we have the fact that so long ago as 1919 an order, whether right or wrong, was passed, under which the maintenance was made chargeable on the joint family estate. It seems to me very improbable that the present applicant Shivalingappa, who is the real brother of Basappa, although living separate from him, did not become aware of this order; and certainly, if it had come to his notice, as I think it certainly must have, it was his duty to have moved the Court at that time to have it set aside, if he objected to it. In the present case, in view of that order and his not having set it aside, I do not think that in revision there is sufficient ground for our interfering with the action taken by the Magistrate. I would, therefore, dismiss this application.

Madgavkar, J.—I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother on two grounds:

The first is that there is an order by a competent Magistrate of 1919, directing the amount of maintenance to be a charge on the joint estate. That order has not been disturbed in appeal or in revision. The record and proceedings are not before us and it is impossible to say how far the present petitioner, the brother of the husband of Gurlingava, was or was not a party to that order and how far it was passed with his knowledge and consent. His present application is in revision against an order directing execution under s. 386 against certain saris in the shop which Gurlingava, the wife of Basappa, alleged, were his joint estate within the meaning of s. 488.

Secondly, the defence of the present petitioner before the Magistrate was that the saris which were attached were his own self-acquired property, and not joint property. On this point the Magistrate has recorded evidence and come to the conclusion that the saris were not the self-acquired property of the petitioner. These two grounds suffice, I think, to cause the present application to fail.

The third question argued in this application is whether the joint family property in which the offender has any interest, can or cannot be proceeded against under s. 386 of the Cr. P. C. The question to my mind is not free from doubt. The former prohibition against attachment of immoveable property belonging solely to the defaulter has been removed by the express words of cl. (6A) and (6B) of s. 68, Cr. P. C., as amended, so that the view of this Court under the old Code in Reg v. Lallu Karwar (5) no longer holds good. But as regards joint property, the Legislature, although it had before it the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Queen-Empress v. Sita Nath Mitra (1) and of the Madras High Court in the case in Weir's Law of Offences and Criminal Procedure Code, 4th Edition, Vol. II, page 442, has not in express terms amended the section. The matter is, therefore, arguable; and as it is not to my mind absolutely necessary for the decision of the present application, I reserve my opinion on it.

Per Curiam.—On the application of Mr. Desai, the Government Pleader not objecting, we modify the Magistrate's order in the last paragraph so as to read as follows:—

"The Potgi is chargeable on the joint family estate and Shivalingappa being the manager it should be recovered by attachment and sale of the moveable joint property in his possession, namely, saris that were attached.

Chinese Customary Law—Marriage, proof of—Long cohabitation—Presumption—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488.

For the purpose of determining, in a proceeding under s. 488, Cr. P. C., whether a valid marriage exists between a Burmese woman and a Chinese half-caste who claims to be a Confucian, the Court must find whether the requirements of the Chinese Customary Law have been fulfilled. Under that Law a marriage must be preceded by a betrothal contract and the usual ceremonies and festivities must be performed and celebrated. The Court may, however, draw a presumption of marriage from the intention of the parties, long cohabitation, habit and repute.

Criminal revision being review of an order of the First Additional Magistrate, Rangoon, in Cr. M. No. 86 of 1925.

Mr. Kyaw Htoon, for the Appellant.

Mr. Faung, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case is a typical one showing the deplorable position of the women of Burma. Ma U, a Burmese woman of 33, formed an alliance with Maung Kyin Htat, a Chinese half-caste of 30, who claims to be a Confucian. He is a clerk in the Hong Kong Bank drawing a salary of Rs. 122 a month. But from the evidence of Mg. Kya Wa (P. W. No 4) who works as a clerk in the same Bank it is clear that Mg. Kyin Htat is also a Buddhist. Had he been a Burman Buddhist he and Ma U could have contracted a valid marriage by mutual consent without further ado. Ma U had a mother living and she consented to the union. Ma U states that Kyin Htat had no parents and that statement remains unrebutted.

As the law stands at present Chinese Customary Law is the law to be applied in determining the question whether Ma U is the wife of Kyin Htat so that she can claim maintenance under s. 488 of the Cr. P. C.

According to the family law of the Chinese by Von Mollendorff it is said that the usual ceremonies and festivities are indispensable and needful for the completion of a proper marriage and that such a marriage is to be preceded by a betrothal contract.

According to Alabaster's Notes on Chinese Criminal Law, three conditions are necessary to constitute a valid marriage, viz., (1) consent of the parents; (2) certain formalities and ceremonies; and (3) suitability of the parties in the matter of their respective positions.

However, a Bench of the Chief Court in Ma Thein Shin v. Ah Shein (1) held, "that though Parker in his Essay on Comparative Chinese Family Law mentions six preliminary steps to a first-class marriage, yet explains that they are not indispensable and that the evidence of Chinese elders shows that the customs are not insisted upon in the case of Chinese marriages in Burma and that relaxation is permitted in the case of poor people." The learned Judge in that case gave effect to the intention of the parties and also allowed the presumption of marriage from long co-habitation with habit and repute to prevail.

In the present case not only were there no forms of marriage but proof was meagre as to the repute justifying such a presumption.

So, although it may possibly be a hard case, nothing can be done. The application is dismissed.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Appellant.
Mr. H. V. Divatia, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This case originated in an application to the Subordinate Judge in the matter of the insolvency of one Vyas Purshottam Vithalrai under the provisions of the Bombay Provincial Insolvency Act for an order that the house mentioned in the application should not be sold by the Receiver as belonging to the insolvent's estate. It would appear that the house was the property of the late Sir Chinubhai. We assume for the present purpose that Sir Chinubhai gave possession of the house to the insolvent's father Vithalrai. No document was passed by Sir Chinubhai so as to transfer the title from himself to Vithalrai. But Vithalrai passed a document to Sir Chinubhari which, after reciting that a gift had been made to him of the property, stated that he had been put in possession of the house on certain conditions. He admitted that he and his heirs had no right to mortgage the house or sell or create any charge on it. They had only the right to reside in the house. The insolvent mortgaged the house to one Mahant Jugaldas Laldas, who opposed the application made by the son of Sir Chinubhai to prevent the Receiver from selling the house. The Trial Court held that the insolvent had no saleable right to the house but had the right of occupancy only and, therefore, the Receiver could not put the house in question for sale. The District Judge reversed this order holding that there had been an irrevocable gift of the house by Sir Chinubhai to the father of the insolvent, while the condition in restraint of mortgaging or selling the property was void, so that the title in the house was in the insolvent and not in the heir of Sir Chinubbai. Thelearned Judge said :—

"On all this evidence oral and documentary it appears to me that Sir Chinubhai intended to make a gift of the house to a Brahmin on the occasion of his daughter's death. There is no rent, there is no provision for eviction or re-entry in case of breach and it is impossible, in my opinion, to construe the document as lease. But if it is not a lease it can hardly be anything else but a gift, and a religious gift."

If this document had been executed by Sir Chinubhai in favour of the insolvent's father and contained words sufficient to pass a title in the property to him, then undoubtedly it would have constituted a gift. The question would then arise whether it would be a conditional gift which restrained the power of the donee with regard to mortgaging or selling the property. But this document is only evidence of an oral assignment which had been made between Sir Chinubhai and the insolvent's father. Assuming that Sir Chinubhai intended to make a gift of the property to the insolvent's father, he could not pass the title in the property without complying with the provisions of s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, which says:—"For the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses." Therefore in any event it cannot possibly be said that this document signed by the insolvent's father could have effected a valid gift of the property within the provisions of that section. Although it has been held that the provisions of s. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, which enact how a lease of immoveable property is to be made, are complied with if the lessee signs a document in favour of the owner, I am of opinion that a gift cannot be created by a document signed by the person intended to be benefited by an oral gift in favour of the owner of the property acknowledging the gift. In effect Ex. 31 is merely an admission by the insolvent's father that he was in possession of the house belonging to Sir Chinubhai with the right to reside in it and that he had no right either to mortgage or sell it. Whatever right the insolvent then had in the house so delivered into the possession of his father by Sir Chinubhai, it would be impossible to say that he had any interest in the house which could be put up by the Receiver for sale. Therefore we allow the appeal and restore the order of the Subordinate Judge.

The appellant to get his costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Coyajee, J.—I agree in holding that the insolvent Vyas Purshotam Vithalrai possessed no saleable interest in the property in question. It is contended before us that the document Ex. 31 executed by the insolvent's father Vithalrai in favour of Sir Chinubhai on December 30, 1909 could be regarded as a deed of gift. I find considerable difficulty in accepting that contention. The language of s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act is clear. It requires that for the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor. In this case Ex. 31 does not satisfy that requirement; and there is no evidence in proof of the allegation that Sir Chinubhai had transferred this property to Vithalrai in accordance with law. It was then contended that Ex. 31 is effective as a deed of gift, on the analogy that a kabuliyat signed by the lessee only is effective as a lease. There is no doubt, authority in favour of the view that a lease may be created by a registered instrument signed by the lessee and accepted by the lessor. But the answer to the respondent's contention is that whereas s. 123 requires that the registered instrument must be signed by or on behalf of the donor, s. 107 contains no such express provision.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Scheme, tentative—Removal of trustee—Procedure—Appeal.

A trustee appointed under a tentative scheme, which provided for its modification after a certain time but made no provision for the removal of the trustee, can be removed only by a regular suit under s. 92, C. P. C. Any removal of such a trustee otherwise than in a regular suit is without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside in revision.

Orders of the latter kind removing the trustees are not orders in execution and are, therefore, not appealable.

JUDGMENT.

Waller, J.—In O. S. No. 8 of 1911 a scheme was drawn up for the administration of the Tiruvadandai temple. It consisted of five clauses, the last of which provided that "the scheme shall work tentatively for 3 years and may be modified hereafter by the Court on the motion of the trustees, the sabha or any person interested". Nothing further appears to have been done by any one thereafter and the tentative scheme remained in force till 1920. In that year an application was presented to the Court for modification of the scheme, coupled with a prayer for the removal of the 3rd defendant, from the trusteeship of the temple. In the result, the Court framed an entirely new scheme and granted the prayer for the removal of the 3rd defendant. It is against this last part of the Court's order that she appeals. The original scheme made no provisions for the removal of a trustee and it seems to us clear that the Courts had no power to remove the 3rd defendant except on a suit brought for the express purpose under s. 92, C. P. C. The order of the Subordinate Judge was, therefore, made without jurisdiction. It is, however, argued that no appeal lies against it. It has hitherto been the practice to treat orders of this kind as orders passed in execution and appealable as such. The Privy Council has, in a recent decision ruled that such orders do not come under s. 47, C. P. C.; Sevuk Jeranchod Bhogilal v. Dakore Temple Committee (1). We must hold that the 3rd defendant has no right of appeal. We see no reason why she should not be allowed to convert her appeal into a revision petition and it is converted accordingly. The order removing her was passed without jurisdiction and it is set aside with costs.

The additional Court-fee paid by petitioner will be refunded.

Devadoss, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Suit for possession—Claim for mesne profits not adjudicated upon—Subsequent suit to recover mesne profits, whether barred—Practice—Limitation, plea of, abandoned in Trial Court, whether can be taken in appeal.

It is open to a party to press in appeal a point of limitation, though the issue embodying the plea of limitation may have been abandoned in the Trial Court. [p. 612, col 1.]

In a suit for declaration and recovery of possession there was a prayer that the defendants be ordered to render true and full accounts of all receipts in their hands and expenditure since the estate in dispute had passed into their possession. The Court granted the plaintiffs a decree for declaration and possession and made a note at the end of the judgment to the effect that the relief with regard to the accounts could not be claimed in the suit. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiffs to recover mesne profits arising out of the property which was the subject-matter of the previous suit:

Held, (1) that the prayer for accounts in the previous suit was in substance a prayer for the recovery of mesne profits; [p. 612, col. 2.]

(2) that if the right to recover mesne profits was regarded as a relief arising out of the same cause of action as the right to obtain possession, then the effect of the note made in the judgment in the previous suit was to give leave to the plaintiffs to omit the relief with regard to mesne profits in that suit and to refer them to a separate suit for that purpose; [ibid.]

(3) that if the right to recover mesne profits was regarded as a claim arising out of the same cause of action out of which the right to obtain possession had arisen, the plaintiffs having asserted their claim in that suit and having prayed for a relief in respect of it, it could not be said that the plaintiffs had omitted to sue in respect of the claim or that they had intentionally relinquished it; [ibid.]

(4) that, therefore, the subsequent suit was not barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the C. P. C. [ibid.]

Mr. Ray, for the Appellants.

Mr. Patker, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main point argued in this appeal is whether the larger part of the claim in the suit, out of which this appeal arises is barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the C. P. C. The facts are as follows:—The two respondents before us, Ma Thein Tin and Ma Than Tin, had, in a previous suit, sued the defendants for declaration of their title and for recovery of possession of certain lands. They also prayed for a third relief to which reference will be made later. They claimed as heirs of one Ba U who died a minor. The 1st and 2nd defendants were persons who had obtained Letters of Administration as guardians of Ba U to the estate of his grandfather to whom Ba U was one of the heirs The lands in suit had been taken possession of by them as administrators and guardians of Ba U. The 3rd defendant in that suit, Mg Ba Kin, was a rival claimant to the estate of Ba U. The plaintiffs succeeded in the suit and obtained a decree for the declaration and the possession they wanted.

In the suit now under appeal the same two persons Ma Thein Tin and Ma Than Tin sue the defendants for mesne profits of the lands for the Burmese years of 1281, 1282 and 1283. The 1st and 2nd defendants in the present suit were the 1st and 2nd defendants in the former suit. The remaining defendants are the heirs and legal representatives of one U Shwe Pe who was a surety for the 1st and 2nd defendants when they obtained Letters of Administration. In the written statement of the defendants a point of limitation was raised, viz., that the claim for the mesne profits of the year 1281 was time-barred. At the trial this point of limitation was abandoned by the learned Pleader of the defendants. The learned Advocate for the defendants, who are the appellants before us, tried to raise again in appeal this point of limitation. It is, of course, open to the Advocate for the appellants to press in appeal this point of limitation, though the issue embodying this plea had been abandoned in the Trial Court by their pleader. A comparison of the dates, however, shows that there is no substance in this plea. The Burmese year 1281 began on the 15th April 1919 and ended on the 14th April 1920. The agricultural rents of that year would be received in December 1919, or January 1920, which is the time such rents are paid in this country. Even if the 1st and 2nd defendants be considered to have realised the rents on the 1st December 1919, the suit having been instituted on the 8th of November 1922, is well within time.

Turning now to the more important point raised in appeal it is argued that the claims for the years 1281, and 1282 are barred as they ought to have been included in the earlier suit.

This defence, however, was not pleaded in the written statement and no issue was raised on the point. As, however, the proceedings in the earlier suit are referred to in the plaint in this suit, and as the plaintiffs themselves successfully relied on the judgment in the earlier suit in support of their contention that one of the issues was res judicata, we allowed the Advocate for the appellant to raise and argue the point before us, since the point is one of law.

This question, whether a suit for possession bars a subsequent suit for mesne profits, is one which has given rise to a good deal of conflict of opinion. In the view we take of the question as arising in this particular case, it is not necessary for us to decide the point or make a reference to a Full Bench. In the earlier suit there was a third prayer in the plaint which is as follows:—"The defendants be ordered to render true and full accounts of all receipts in their hands and expenditure since the estate passed into their possession." As the property in suit is lands, the receipts can only refer to rents and profits of that land. This prayer, no doubt, is one for an account and possibly proceeded upon the assumption that there was an accountability on the part of the defendants. In substance, however, it is a prayer for mesne profits. There is no need to mention in such a prayer any particular sum as the amount claimed. It was well within the power of the Judge to treat it as a claim to mesne profits and direct an enquiry into the profits for at least three years prior to the date of the institution of the suit. (See O. XX, r. 12, C. P. C.) The learned Judge, however, did not do so, but at the end of the judgment made a note to the effect that the third relief is one not to be claimed on such a suit.

The right to recover mesne profits, assuming that that right and the right to obtain possession arise out of the same cause of action, may be considered as either a claim arising out of the cause of action, or a relief arising out of it. If the right to mesne profits be considered as a relief, then the effect of the learned Judge's order seems to us to give the plaintiffs leave to omit the relief in the suit and to refer them to a separate suit for that purpose. Such a leave under the new Civil Procedure Code can be given at any stage of the suit and not necessarily before the first hearing. If so, the plaintiffs' present suit cannot be barred. But even if the right to mesne profits be considered as a claim arising out of the cause of action, the suit is not barred. In the earlier case the plaintiffs did assert their claim and prayed for a relief in respect of it. The learned Judge held that that claim could not be enquired into in that suit. It cannot, therefore, be said that the plaintiffs omitted to sue in respect of the claim, or that they intentionally relinquished it. It is only when there is such an omission or intentional relinquishment that a second suit is barred.

For these reasons we hold that the present suit is not barred under the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the C. P. C. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 48, 151, O. XLVII, r. 1—Execution application—Dismissal for no fault of decree-holder — Restoration — Inherent powers—Review—Notice.

Where an execution application is dismissed, by reason of objections on the part of the judgment-debtor or action taken by Court or other cause, for which the decree-holder is not responsible, the right of the decree-holder to the final completion of the proceedings is not necessarily defeated, and further applications of the decree-holder to the Court executing the decree to go on from the point where the execution proceedings are arrested, are regarded as applications merely ancillary to the substantive application and no question of limitation under s. 48, C. P. C., can arise under such circumstances. [p. 614, col. 1.]

Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand, 18 A. 482; A. W. N. (1896) 142; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1028 and Ram Sarup v. Dasrath Tewari, 9 Ind. Cas. 817; 33 A. 517; 8 A. L. J. 412, followed.

Where an Execution Court strikes out execution proceedings in the absence of the decree-holder, on the ground that there is no bidder for the property at the Court-sale, and the decree-holder is not present at the time to ask for further action, it is a case in which the decree-holder is not responsible for dismissal of the proceedings, and the Court has power to revive them under s. 151, C. P. C. But where it purports to act under O. XLVII, r. 1, C. P. C. it is incumbent on it to give notice of the application filed by the decree-holder to the opposite party, and an omission to do so makes the order of restoration of proceedings defective. However, any such defect is cured, if the propriety of the order is not challenged for several months together. [p. 614, cols. 1 & 2.]

Execution second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 21st October 1924.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Ashthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an execution proceeding and the sole question for consideration is whether the application is barred by limitation It appears that a decree was obtained by Ram Charan against Girdhari Lal, the predecessor of the present appellant and certain other persons on the 30th of July 1910. The last application for execution was made on the 30th of July 1921; and in execution of that decree certain ancestral property was ordered to be sold. The proceedings connected with the sale were transferred to the Collector under s. 68 of the C. P. C. The Collector fixed a date for holding the sale; but on that date there was no bidder; and as the decree-holder was not present at the time to ask for further action, he sent the papers back to the Court which had directed the sale. The papers reached the Court on the 24th February 1923 and it passed an order on the same day striking out the execution proceeding for default.

On the 26th of February 1923 the decree-holder made an application stating that he was present on the date the auction was held and had just gone outside for a short time when the sale officer passed an order returning the papers. He prayed that the papers may be sent back to the Collector for proceeding with the sale. The Court thereupon passed an order in terms of the application, directing further proceedings in connection with the sale. While the sale proceedings, re-started by the Collector, were pending, an objection was filed by Musammat Parbati, one of the judgment-debtors that the order re-instating the proceedings was irregular, and that the decree was really barred by time. That objection was unsuccessful; and it was held by the Court, which had passed that decree and before which the execution proceeding was pending, that it had power to revive the previous execution proceeding which had been dismissed for no default of the decree-holder and without his knowledge; and that order was afterwards upheld on appeal. Girdhari Lal, another judgment-debtor, then intervened and filed the objection which has given rise to the present appeal, urging that the application for execution was barred by time and that the order of the Court sending the papers again to the Collector after the Collector had returned them was contrary to law. The Courts below have disallowed that objection, relying on the decisions in Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand (1) and Ram Sarup v. Dasrath Tewari (2). The view taken in these cases was that where an application for execution had been made within the period of limitation and granted, that is, execution had been ordered in accordance with the prayer of the decree-holder, the right of the decree-holder to obtain execution will not necessarily be defeated, if, by reason of objections on the part of the judgment-debtor or action taken by the Court or other cause, for which the decree-holder was not responsible, the final completion of the proceedings in execution initiated by the application could not have been obtained within the period provided by law; and that further applications of the decree-holder to the Court executing the decree to go on from the point where the execution proceedings had been arrested and to complete the execution of his decree would be regarded as applications merely ancillary to the substantive application and no question of limitation under s. 230 of the old C. P. C. would in those circumstances arise.

(1) 18 A. 482, A. W. N. (1896) 142; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1028.

It is urged on behalf of the judgment-debtor-appellant that if the order of 26th of February 1923 was passed under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the C. P. C., it was without jurisdiction, as no notice had been issued to the judgment-debtor before that order was passed. It is further urged that O. IX, r. 13 was inapplicable to an execution proceeding and the Court was not competent to set aside its previous order of the 24th of February 1923 behind the back of the judgment-debtor. The application made by the decree-holder did not recite the provisions under which it was made. It was either an application for review under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the C. P. C., or an application to the Court to rectify its previous order and to revive the proceedings under s. 151 of the C. P. C. When the order of the 24th of February 1923 was passed, no notice appears to have been given to the decree-holder of the report which had been received from the Sale Officer; and no opportunity was granted to him to take further proceedings in the case. Even the Sale Officer had omitted to grant time to the decree-holder to take further proceedings in the matter. The decree-holder was not responsible, if there was no bidder present at the time of the auction, much less could he have been responsible for the alleged default if no notice had been given to him by the Court, before which the execution proceeding was pending of the papers having been received back nor opportunity to take further steps in execution of his decree. The order was passed ex parte as soon as the report of the Sale Officer was received; and it was open to the Court, which passed that order, when the omission was brought to its notice, to set aside its order and to restore or revive the proceeding under s. 151 of the C. P. C. If it purported to act under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the C. P. C., it was incumbent on it to give notice of the application filed by the decree-holder to the opposite party; but after the order was passed no steps appear to have been taken so long by any of the judgment-debtors to challenge the propriety of that order. The first objection was filed by Musammat Parbati on the 9th of July 1923 that is about five months after that order was passed and the last by Girdhari Lal on the 10th of May 1924 that is about fifteen months from the date of that order. No appeal or application in revision was filed to challenge the legality of that order; and it is too late for the judgment-debtor now to question its propriety. The judgment-debtor is obviously seeking by means of this petition to gain time. He and his co-judgment-debtors have succeeded in getting the sale put off from time to time and they have succeeded in that object this time again; and as the Courts below have pointed out his objection is frivolous and has no force. The order reviving or restoring the execution proceeding was not passed without jurisdiction; and even if it was irregular that irregularity was cured by the fact that it remained unchallenged so long and the decree is not barred by time.

It is urged that the judgment-debtor-appellant had no notice of that order, but as the sale proceeding went on before the Sale Officer for over fifteen months after that order was passed, he could hardly have remained ignorant of it.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX,
PUNJAB—RESPONDENT.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss 13, 22 (4), 23 (2), 37—Accounts, production of—Assessment without opportunity to justify accounts—Legality—Procedure of Income Tax Officers—Accounts as basis for assessment—Petty traders, accounts of.

Production by an assessee of his accounts is a substantial compliance with the notice received under s. 22 (4), Income Tax Act, and the Income Tax Officer is not justified in rejecting the return and the accounts and in assessing on a rule of thumb until he has given notice to the assessee under s. 23 (2) of the Act to appear before him and justify his return. [p. 615, col. 2; p. 616, col. 2.]

When a return is furnished and accounts are put in, in support of that return, the accounts should be taken as the basis for assessment. They should not be rejected because they are complicated. Strictly regular accounts are not available particularly in the case of petty traders who very often have only a poor knowledge of accounts. [p. 616, col. 2.]

Section 37 of the Income Tax Act indicates that the procedure of the Income Tax Officers is of a judicial nature and in making assessment they should proceed on judicial principles. If evidence is produced by the assessee in support of his return it should be accepted unless it is rebutted by other admissible evidence and not by mere hearsay. [p. 616, col. 1.]

Petition praying that the Commissioner of Income-Tax, Punjab, be required to state the case under s. 66, cl. (3) of the Income Tax Act.

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is a case stated and referred by the Commissioner of Income-Tax, Punjab, under cl. (3) of s. 66 of the Income Tax Act of 1922. The learned Commissioner prefaces his reference with a suggestion that this Court has no jurisdiction to issue a mandamus in this case on the ground that the Commissioner's own order in review of the appellate order passed by his Assistant was equally with the appellate order of his Assistant incompetent. The learned Government Advocate states that he is unable to support this contention which obviously has no force. The Commissioner's order still subsists and has not been set aside and it would be opposed to all ideas of congruity, legal or other, to hold that an order cannot be challenged on the ground that it should never have been issued.

The disputed assessment, which is confined to an item of Rs. 10,000 in respect of interest, was in respect of the year 1922-23. The return authorised by s. 22 of the Act was made on the 9th September 1922, and that showed an income from interest of only Rs. 866. On the 12th February 1923, in obedience to an order issued under s. 22, cl. (4) the assessee produced his accounts before the Assessing Officer, and on the 23rd February received an assessment order to pay tax on an income of Rs. 30,000. The assessee applied for cancellation of the assessment under s. 27, but the Income Tax Officer rejected it on the 18th April 1923 by the following order:—

"Section 27 does not apply to this case; return was submitted, accounts were seen. The pleas raised are relating to appeal." The assessee then appealed to the Assistant Commissioner who entertained the appeal and remanded the case for fresh enquiry. The appeal was subsequently dismissed and an application made to the Commissioner for review met with the same fate, but on the merits.

Now, the main contention on behalf of the assessee is that he made a return which was recognised as a return. He produced all the books he had and if the Income-Tax Officer was not prepared to accept his accounts he should have acted in a judicial manner, and before proceeding to assess by a rule of thumb should have issued notice under s. 23 (2) to the assessee to appear and answer the criticisms directed against his return and accounts.

The procedure under the Income Tax Act is as follows:—

A return of income is called for from the assessee and must be furnished. If that return is not furnished the assessee places himself at the mercy of the Income Tax Officer who shall then make the assessment to the best of his judgment, and the assessee will have no right of appeal.

If a return is made it is open to the Assessing Officer to accept it and to base the assessment entirely upon it. If he is not prepared to accept it forthwith, he may issue notice to the assessee to appear before him and justify his return by his accounts. If the assessee, although he has furnished the return, fails to produce his accounts in support of that return he is placed in the same position as if he had made no return at all. If, however, he has made a return and has produced his accounts in obedience to an order under s. 22 (4), the Income Tax Officer is not justified in rejecting the return and the accounts and in assessing on a rule of thumb until he has given notice to the assessee under s. 23 (2) of the Act to appear before him and justify his return.

In this case no such notice was issued to the assessee. The Income-Tax Officer rejected his accounts which had been produced in compliance with a notice under s. 22 (4) and proceeded forthwith to make the assessment to the best of his judgment. In this connection we should like to draw the attention of the learned Commissioner to the great laxity which prevails in the office of the Income Tax Officers in the matter of the issue of notices. Probably with the object of avoiding the multiplicity of notice form, a form is used which may be a notice either under s. 22 (4) or under s 23 (2). If the notice is under s. 22 (4) certain erasures are necessary before the notice issues. If the notice is one under s. 23 (2) other portions of the notice must be erased. We find, however, that notices issue without any erasures so that it is not possible for the assessee to know whether he is being summoned under s. 22 (4) or s. 23 (2). Section 37 of the Act indicates that the procedure of Income Tax Officers is of a judicail nature, and in making his assessment the Income Tax Officer should proceed on judicial principles. If evidence is produced by the assessee in support of his return it should be accepted unless it is rebutted by other admissible evidence and not by mere hearsay.

Next, s. 13 is invoked as justifying the assessment by the Income-Tax Officer. That section provides that if no method of accounting had been regularly employed, or if the method employed is such that, in the opinion of the Income Tax Officer, the income, profits and gains cannot properly be deduced therefrom, then the computation shall be made upon such basis and in such manner as the Income Tax Officer may determine. Now, the Income Tax Officer's application of this section was as follows:—"As regards income from interest the Inspector's estimate seems to me a little high. My own estimate is about Rs. 10,000. We do not regard this wholly arbitrary assessment as one justified by s. 13, for the Income Tax Officer does not lay down any basis, nor does he indicate how he arrives at his estimate of Rs. 10,000. Had he found that the sums loaned were a certain figure, and had he calculated a flat rate upon those sums, we should have regarded his action as in conformity with the provisions of the section. But a bare statement that his estimate is so and so we regard as a mere guess without any obvious basis. Had the Income Tax Officer even said 'the income from interest last year was Rs. 10,000 and the assessee has shown me no reason for holding that his income from interest has diminished this year' even that would have shown some appreciation of the limitations placed upon him by s. 13.

When a return is furnished and accounts are put in, in support of that return, the accounts should be taken as the basis for assessment. They should not be rejected because they are complicated. Strictly regular accounts are not available particularly in the case of petty traders who very often have only a poor knowledge accounts.

We accept the view that the production by the petitioner of his accounts was a substantial compliance with the notice received under s. 22 (4) and we hold the assessment illegal inasmuch as he received no opportunity under s. 23 (2) to appear and meet the objections to the return and accounts produced by him. The petitioner shall receive costs of this reference from the respondent.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER NO. 111 OF 1924.

February 18, 1925.

Present:—Sir Lancelot Sanderson, KT., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir George Claus Rankin, KT.

SUDHIR CHANDRA DAS—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Srimati INDUMATI CHAUDHURANI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Widow, powers of—Family arrangement.

A Hindu widow is entitled to protect a right purported to be given to her under her husband's Will, and to make a compromise with a contesting party in defence of that right, provided always that the transaction as a whole is fair and reasonable from the point of view of reversioners. [p. 623, col. 2.]

A Hindu died leaving behind a widow and four married daughters. By a Will left by him, the widow was given authority to adopt a son, and was also appointed executor of the estate. An application being made by the widow for a Probate of the Will, certain objections were raised to it by the daughters, and an administrator pendente lite was appointed thereon. Some sort of family settlement was brought about among the members by the intervention of friends, the objections were withdrawn, and the widow paid a sum of Rs. 30,000 to one of the daughters in pursuance of the settlement. Subsequently, in accordance with the provisions of the Will, the widow adopted a son who about seven years after the settlement brought a suit contesting the payment of Rs. 30,000 to the daughter:

Held, (1) that qua executor it was a breach of trust for the widow to spend the testator's property in buying off disputes about the Will; [p. 623, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that, however, whether the Will was bad or good everything went to the widow herself as a Hindu widow and she was fully entitled to represent the estate, and consequently a payment out of the estate was payment out of the beneficiary interest which at the moment was the widow's; [p. 623, col. 2.]

(3) that the arrangement which was made, was within the powers of the widow, and it was a beneficial and not an improper arrangement; [p. 620, col. 2.]

(4) that the fact of the estate being at the time of making the arrangement in the control of the administrator pendente lite did not affect her powers to make it. [p. 620, col. 2.]

A family arrangement by a Hindu widow, a limited owner, entered into with reversioners, themselves limited owners, cannot cure an act which is otherwise wrong. [p. 623, col. 2.]

There can be no family arrangement in the strict sense of the term, where it is not proved who the parties were to the settlement and what were the terms settled upon. [ibid.]

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose, dated the 12th March 1924.

Messrs. N. Sarkar and S. K. Chakrvarti, for the Appellant.

Sir B. C. Mitter and Mr. S. M. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff Sudhir Chandra Dass against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose which was delivered on the 12th of March 1924.

The facts of this case are, I hope, entirely out of the ordinary at all events, as far as my experience goes, they are unprecedented.

For the purpose of my judgment it is necessary to state the material facts which are as follows:

The question arises with regard to the estate of one Srish Chandra Das. He died on the 12th day of December 1904 leaving a widow whose name was Raseswari Chowdhurani his eldest daughter was Sarojini Chowdhurani, who was married to Bankim Chandra Chowdhury. Sarojini had a son whose name was Nirmal Chandra Chowdhury. This son Nirmal was afterwards, as I shall have to mention, adopted by Raseswari, and he took the name of Sudhir Chandra Dass and he is the plaintiff in this case.

The second daughter of Srish Chandra Das was Indumati Chaudhurani. She was married to Bepin Behary Biswas.

The third daughter was Promila Sundari Chowdhurani who was married to a man called Gnanada Nath Roy Choudhuri and the fourth daughter was Sukumari Chaudhrani who was married to Sudhirendra Nath Roy Chowdhuri.

All the four daughters were married at the time of Srish Chandra Das' death.

Srish Chandra Das made a Will by which he appointed his widow Raseswari executrix and one Rajoni Mohan Das executor of his estate; and, the Will provided that they should be entitled as executors to take out Probate without security.

A further provision in the Will was that the testator gave verbal authority to his wife to take a son in adoption; and, he stated in writing that his wife should be competent to take his first daughter's son Nirmal Chandra Das and failing him any other person in adoption.

The Will provided that the son so adopted should be the proprietor of the estate to be left by the testator, and that a monthly allowance at the rate of Rs. 100, should be paid to the testator's first two daughters and that two houses should be given to them.

This Will is alleged to have been executed on the 11th of December 1904 a day before the testator died.

On the 22nd day of February 1905, the executrix and the executor applied for Probate of the Will; Indumati filed a caveat; and, subsequently administrator pendente lite was appointed.

On the 22nd day of May 1905, certain petitions were presented one by the executrix and the executor another on behalf of Indumati, the third on behalf of Sarojini, the fourth on behalf of Sukumari and another one on behalf of Promila, with the object of withdrawing the objections to the Will which had been raised by Indumati and of Probate being granted to the executors. It is not necessary to refer in detail to the terms of these petitions except in the case of the one which was presented on behalf of Indumati.

In her petition Indumati stated that she had found after enquiry that it was not possible for her to maintain her objection; and it proceeded as follows: "Under these circumstances it will not be good to proceed with the case and be harassed and create disturbance and unpleasant-ness in the family. So, I, Indumati Dasi the objectrix withdraw all objections regarding the Will propounded and filed by the applicants, and acknowledge that the Will filed in the case is the genuine Will of my father and executed by him; and with a view to avoid all costs likely to be incurred in the case and harassment to be subjected to and to establish cordial relationship in the family and as a consideration for this compromise, and in excess of the provisions of the Will the executors have made a proper arrangement by providing for support maintenance and education of my present and future children. It being inconvenient to give me one house in Digbazar under the provision of the Will, the executors in lieu thereof have given me two houses described in Schedule below for my residence which are to be considered as one and they have consented to execute a proper document therefor within two weeks of the estate having come into their hands and they have further agreed to give me my monthly allowance of Rs. 100 according to the provisions of the Will.

The result of these petitions was that on the 24th of May 1905, Probate was granted to the executrix and executor in common form.

The administrator pendente lite was discharged, and, Raseswari the widow of the testator, came into possession of the estate.

In pursuance of the provisions of the Will, Raseswari the widow adopted the plaintiff on the 26th of April 1906; and a monthly allowance was paid to Indumati for a period of about six years; it was not until the 27th of April 1912 that this suit was brought by the plaintiff, the adopted son. The suit was brought among other things for the administration of the estate, and, on the 6th day of May 1913, a preliminary administration decree was made. An advertisement for creditors was issued; and, on the 18th of March 1914, Indumati filed a claim as a creditor of the estate for arrears of the monthly allowance of Rs. 100 and for provision for the payment of the allowance in the future.

A long period elapsed before anything was done with a view to investigating Indumati's claim. We were informed that there was litigation in respect of this Will, which litigation was instituted by a third party, and it was not until June 1921 that Indumati's claim, and the claims of others, were referred to the Assistant Referee for report.

The Assistant Referee held an enquiry which occupied a long time (as to the proceedings before him I shall find it necessary to say a word or two later on) and, on the 25th of April 1922, he made a report, the effect of which was as follows, that Indumati Chowdhurani was entitled to get Rs. 100 a month from the estate since the death of the testator but that she would not be entitled to draw her said annuity from the estate, which was due to her since Chaitra 1318 B. S. unless and until she should make good to the said estate the sum of Rs. 30,000 which was paid to her on the 22nd day of May 1905 out of the said estate.

Indumati filed objections to this report: I need not refer to them in detail they are set out in the paper-book at pages 12, 13 and 14.

Those objections were heard by, my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves; and a point was taken before the learned Judge that it was not open to him in those proceedings to investigate the question whether the alleged payment of Rs. 30,000 was a breach of trust. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the contention was right, and that it was not open to him to come to a decision on that point, with the result that the learned Judge allowed the exceptions and set aside that portion of the report which dealt with the impounding of Indumati's Rs. 100 a month and which purported to establish her liability for the breach of trust with regard to the sum of Rs. 30,000. Then there was an appeal from the decision to this Court, and the Court of Appeal directed that the matter should be remitted for further investigation by a learned Judge on the Original Side and that he should be at liberty to enquire into any of the points which were open to the parties in respect of the Assistant Referee's report.

The matter was then heard by my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose; and he came to the conclusion that Indumati was entitled to the monthly allowance of Rs. 100 without making restitution of the sum of Rs. 30,000 and it is from that judgment that this appeal has been preferred.

It seems to me necessary now to state what was the case of Indumati at different stages of these proceedings:

It was alleged on behalf of the plaintiff that the executrix and the executor had paid to Indumati, or to her husband on her behalf, the sum of Rs. 30,000 for the purpose of inducing Indumati to withdraw the caveat which she had entered against the Will, and it was alleged that such payment was a breach of trust of which Indumati was cognisant and that Indumati could not claim any further payment of the monthly allowance until she repaid the sum of Rs. 30,000.

Indumati's case at the enquiry before the Assistant Referee was that she had not received the sum of Rs. 30,000 and that it had never been paid to her or to any one on her behalf; and there is no doubt that the proceedings before the Assistant Referee were unduly prolonged by reason of the case which Indumati set up.

We were informed that Bankim Chunder who was the chief witness on behalf of the plaintiff had been cross-examined for no less than eight days at the instance of Indumati.

When the case came to this Court on appeal from my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves, the learned Counsel who then appeared for Indumati, admitted that the sum of Rs. 30,000 had been paid to Indumati but he asserted that the sum had not been paid out of the funds belonging to the estate; and, in particular he did not admit that Indumati had signed the receipt for the Rs. 30,000 which will be found at page 270 of the paper-book and which had been put to Indumati in the course of the proceedings before the Assistant Referee. I think it is apparent that the reason for the learned Counsel's refusal to admit that Indumati had signed that receipt was that if it were admitted, it would show that the payment had been made by the executrix and the executor with money out of the estate; for the receipt runs as follows:—

"Sreemati Raseswari Chowdhurani and Srijukta Babu Rajani Mohan Das executor estate of Babu Srish Chandra Das deceased.

"Written by Sreemati Indumati Dassee wife of Babu Bepin Behari Biswas whose receipt this is. You agreed to pay me the sum of Rs. 30,000 on the basis of the settlement arrived at in the Probate Case No. 32/8 of 1905 etc, I grant you this receipt having got payment of the said sum of Rs. 30,000 dated 22nd day of May 1905 corresponding to 8th Jaitha, 1312 B. S."

It purports to be written by Gagan Chandra Ghose, Pleader and to be signed at the side by Indumati.

The effect of the decision of this Court, on appeal from my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves was that the main question which was to be decided by the learned Judge on the further hearing was whether the sum of Rs 30,000 had been paid out of the estate, although any other question which might be available to the parties on the objections to the report could be investigated.

My learned brother Mr. Justice Ghose, found that the money was paid out of the estate. He came to the conclusion that there was a family settlement arrived at, for the purpose of putting an end to possible litigation; that Raseswari was not only the executrix but also the widow of the deceased and that the settlement was within the authority of the widow and that it was a settlement which was arrived at to preserve the harmony, affection and honour of the family and that it was a bona fide and fair compromise.

When the case was argued, on the hearing of this appeal, the learned Counsel who appeared for Indumati, admitted, as he was bound to admit, that the sum of Rs. 30,000 had in fact been paid. He further admitted that the receipt, which had been denied by Indumati at the hearing before the Assistant Referee and which had not been admitted by the learned Counsel when the case first came to the Appeal Court was signed by Indumati. The learned Counsel for Indumati, however, still argued that the money had not been paid out of the estate and he contested the learned Judge's finding to that effect. He further argued that even if the money were paid out of the estate it was a bona fide compromise made for the purpose of putting an end to litigation and it was within the authority of the widow to make it: that many years had elapsed before any proceedings were taken to contest that settlement; that it was made by the widow after consulting people who were competent to advise her; and consequently he argued that the appeal ought not to succeed.

The first question on the merits of the appeal, is whether the money was paid out of the estate.

In my judgment it is clear that the money was paid to Indumati or to her husband on her behalf on the 22nd day of May 1905, that the executrix and the executor had not got sufficient funds of the estate at the time: that it was raised in the manner which is set out in the learned Judge's judgment; that the widow Raseswari had herself advanced Rs. 4,696 that Bankim Chandra Saha through his wife, advanced Rs. 303 odd annas, and that Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 10,000 were raised elsewhere: and, I have no doubt that on or about the 5th of October 1905 the parties, who had advanced the moneys were re-paid out of the moneys of the estate. Whether the money was actually paid in cash or whether the transaction was effected or completed by making entries to the credit of the different parties, against which they were entitled to draw, to my mind is of no importance in this case. I am convinced that the arrangement was that Rs. 30,000 should be paid to Indumati, that she should withdraw her opposition to the Will and that eventually the money should be paid out of the funds of the estate. It is obvious that it was to the interest of Raseswari to be in a position to establish the validity of the Will. It is also obvious that Bankim, whose son was to be adopted by the widow, would naturally be anxious to see the validity of the Will established: on the other hand, Indumati, if the validity of the Will could be impugned, would benefit thereby; because if Srish Chandra Das died intestate, the widow would succeed to a widow's interest in the estate, and after her death the daughters would succeed to the estate; and, under those circumstances I have no doubt that Bankim, the widow, Indumati and her husband and the executor entered into the arrangement to which I have referred. Whether the money was paid out of the estate on the 5th of October 1905 or on some other date, to my mind, is of no importance whatever, having regard to the arrangement which was undoubtedly made on or about the 22nd day of May 1905.

The other part of the case to which it is necessary for me to refer is whether the learned Judge's conclusion as to the arrangement should be upheld.

I have had some doubt as to whether Indumati should be allowed to succeed upon the allegation of the settlement, on the basis that the money was paid out of the funds of the estate, because it is clear from the petition which was filed against the finding of the Assistant Referee, that she was asserting that the money had not been paid out of the estate as for instance, she stated that the Assistant Referee erred in holding that the sum of Rs. 30,000 was paid to her on the 22nd day of May 1905 out of the estate. She further asserted that the Assistant Referee erred in holding that the money was paid out of the estate on behalf of the executors and was paid to buy off her opposition to the Will, whereas he should have held upon a true construction of the petition of compromise that it was a settlement of family disputes amongst the members of the family brought about by friends and relations and for the good of the family and the state, and for the purposes set out in the consent petitions filed by Indumati and by the executors and executrix on the 22nd May 1905.

Therefore, it seems to me that the case which Indumati was asserting was first of all that the money was not paid out of the estate, and, secondly that the money was paid in pursuance of the family settlement irrespective of the funds of the estate.

I have come to the conclusion, however, that this case ought to be decided upon the facts which have been proved in the course of the enquiry.

The question whether Indumati ought to be mulcted in costs or deprived of costs by reason of the false case which she set up is another matter: but for the purposes of doing justice between the parties, in my opinion, we ought to decide the case on the facts as the learned Judge found them and as I think they ought to be found.

I have already stated that I am convinced that the sum of Rs. 30,000 in effect was paid out of the estate. I am also satisfied that the arrangement, which was made, was within the powers of Raseswari, who was the widow of the testator and that it was a beneficial and certainly not an improper arrangement.

It was argued by Mr. Sircar on behalf of the appellant that at the time this arrangement was made, Raseswari had no control over the estate because a caveat had been entered by Indumati and an administrator pendente lite was in control of the estate. That may be. But it seems to me, there are two answers to that argument: in the first place the arrangement may very well have been made by the widow knowing that if it were carried out the administrator pendent lite would be discharged and she and her co-executor would obtain control of the estate. In the second place, even though the administrator pendente lite was in control of the estate on the 22nd day of May 1905 still she, as the widow, was entitled to the whole of the beneficial interest in the estate at the time; and it would be open to her to make the arrangement to have referred.

It is also material to point out that as a result of the arrangement, which was arrived at by the widow and her co-executor, the validity of the Will was, for the time being at all events, established and that the widow was able to adopt the plaintiff as the son of the deceased man. If the validity of the Will had not been established, it might well be that there would have been little or no evidence of any authority vested in the widow to adopt a son. In consequence of this arrangement the validity of the Will was established and the right of the widow to adopt a son was made clear, and, it hardly lies in the mouth of the plaintiff, who becomes entitled to the estate by means of the arrangement, which the widow made to come forward at this late stage and assert that the arrangement was beyond the powers of the widow and was a a breach of trust.

The result is that, in my judgment, on the facts of the case the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

When this matter was before the Appeal Court on the previous occasion, Mr. Justice Richardson and I disposed by our order of the costs of that appeal, but we left it to the learned Judge, who would hear the case on further consideration to decide as to what should be done about the costs of the proceedings before the Assistant Referee and of the proceedings before my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves. But my learned brother Mr. Justice Ghose has not dealt with those costs and we have been asked by the parties, instead of remitting the matter to the learned Judge to deal with their costs in this Court. It is clear that the proceedings before the Assistant Referee were prolonged to an excessive degree in consequence of the false case which Indumati set up and by the course which those representing her took. It would perhaps be strictly proper to direct that she should pay the costs of the issues in respect of which she failed, but it would be difficult for the Taxing Officer to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion on that basis; and, therefore, we are of opinion that the proper order to make with regard to the proceedings before the Assistant Referee is that Indumati should pay half the costs of the plaintiff in respect of those proceedings.

The proceedings in this appeal have been prolonged and the paper-book has been increased in size in consequence of the case put forward by Indumati and the attitude adopted by her advisers before the Assistant Referee; in the proceedings before my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves, Indumati took the point that it was not open to the learned Judge to investigate the question of the alleged breach of trust a point which was given up by her learned Counsel in the Court of Appeal. We are, therefore, of opinion that each party should pay his or her own costs in respect of the proceedings in this appeal and before Mr. Justice Greaves.

We do not interfere with the order of Mr. Justice Ghose as regards the costs of the proceedings before him because the matter was within his direction.

We have been informed that a Receiver, appointed by the Court is in possession of the estate.

The Receiver, therefore, will be at liberty to set off the costs payable by Indumati to the plaintiff against the arrears of allowance due to Indumati.

The Receiver will also be at liberty to proceed to pay the monthly allowance to Indumati as it accrues due.

Rankin, J.—I agree.

This question arises in course of a suit brought in 1912 for the administration of the estate of the deceased Srish who died on the 12th of December 1904. The matter was raised in years which are comparatively recent and a very long time after the actual events had come into question.

The question has been smothered in contentions which, in my judgment, come to nothing: and I propose to state shortly (disregarding the contentions which come to nothing) the position as I see it. When the testator died he had been in an extremely dangerous state for some little time. The learned Judge has made a reference to these matters, and it has been objected that the facts mentioned by him were not properly proved but it turns out that it was brought to the notice of the learned Judge, that the whole question of the validity of this Will was the subject of a litigation which came up to this Court and was disposed of by a judgment which is reported.

I propose to mention only two facts which seem to me to be important.

One is that, although the deceased appears to have given some instructions for the Will in time, at the actual moment when he signed the Will he was unable to do more than sign his initials and he was in such a state of mind that he was not probably able to make a good Will if he had not given his instructions before. The actual proof of those facts it is not, I think necessary to worry about, because there is nothing to be gained by sending this case back in order that the ultimate decision of this Court with regard to this Will might be formally proved. The testator having died at the end of 1904, we know that a violent dispute arose between Raseswari the widow and the daughter Indumati. We know that Indumati entered a caveat and we know that it was only upon her withdrawing the objections that in May 1905 this Will could be proved in common form.

The testator had four daughters, all of them married. Promila and Sukumari appear to have been married to husbands who were comparatively well off. Indumati and Sarojini were not so happily circumstanced and accordingly the testator by his Will gave to each of those two daughters a house and an annuity of Rs. 100 a month. It seems that Indumati's husband Bipin Behari Biswas had been living with the testator who paid all his expenses and generally kept him and his family Indumati when her father died became distinctly objectionable apparently to her mother and distinctly hostile to the Will. The younger daughters had nothing to get from the Will. The eldest daughter Saronji had a son Nirmal who was likely if the Will stood to inherit the whole property, but Indumati and her husband were likely to be much worse off in these circumstances after her father's death than they had been before. It is in evidence apparently that a very objectionable family dispute took place and it is quite clear that Indumati was not minded to let this Will be established if she could help it, and she was prepared apparently to do whatever was possible to prevent her right, after her mother's death, being brought to an end by any adoption.

In these circumstances, the position was this: Raseswari as a Hindu widow, was, in my judgment, certainly entitled to spend what was necessary from the corpus as well as from the income of the estate to defend the right given her by her husband to adopt a son to him. Of that I imagine there can be no doubt. Bankim and his wife Sarojini were plainly very anxious that the Will should be established and that Nirmal should be adopted.

Bankim in giving his evidence before the Assistant Referee professed to have known very little about the settlement to have taken no part in the arranging of the settlement but merely to have had the good fortune to have been present when certain transactions were actually carried out. That is all nonsense. It is perfectly plain from the circumstances of this case that the moving spirits with regard to this compromise were Bankim and Saronji acting on behalf of Nirmal. As a matter of fact, books of account show that a telegraphic draft of Rs. 15,000 was sent in his name to Dacca for the purpose of this settlement. It is equally plain that a small sum of money of Rs. 300 odd that was necessary to make up the Rs. 30,000 was provided, after a some little trouble, by Bankim or on his account. So far as the third daughter was concerned, we know this, that her husband who appears to be a gentleman of some position was one of the many well-wishers of the members of the family who, Bankim admits, were anxious that this matter should be settled by a private arrangement and without litigation.

As regards the fourth daughter all we know is that when the time came, she too presented a petition to facilitate Probate being granted of this Will and presented it, as it happened by the same Pleader, who was acting for Sarojini on the 22nd day of May. It is perfectly clear that Indumati's objection to the Will was notorious to the family, if not to the whole neighbourhood. At no time does it appear that the two younger sisters or any one on their behalf made any objection to what had happened. It is perfectly plain that they would know what happened and would be very anxious indeed to ascertain how these disputes between sisters were to be brought to an end. In these circumstances, we find that on the 22nd day of May, there is in the petition of Indumati a statement that "as a consideration of this compromise, and in excess of the provision of the Will the executors have made a proper arrangement by providing for support, maintenance and education of my present and future children." Then the petition goes on to state that whereas it was inconvenient to give her one house in Digbazar the executors were to give her two houses which should be considered as one.

Now, there was a compromise. It was not necessary to get the approval of the Probate Court for that compromise. It was apparently not thought necessary to be frank in telling the Court what that compromise exactly was; but that there was a compromise is perfectly clear and it is obvious that there would be no use in compromising such a matter with one person unless all the people who were likely to object to this Will could be brought into the compromise. Now, what took place was, in my judgment, this. With the knowledge and at the instigation of all the people certainly of all the daughters and their husbands these executors—the widow and Rajani agreed to find Rs. 30,000 to buy off Indumati's objections. That it was ever dreamt by any one that the Rs. 30,000 should not come out of the estate I do not believe for a moment, in particular for the reason that there was no other fund that it could come out of. That it did come out of the estate is also, I think, clear. But the position was that an administrator pendente lite was in charge of the assets and the compromise took effect the administrator was to clear off, to wind up his management and go. Accordingly, in order that Indumati might not be given a mere promise, the arrangement which appears in the books was made to the effect that money was scraped up from four different sources. One of them was the Calcutta branch of the banking business itself; another was a sum of money lent by a stranger; Raseswari lent some of her own, and Bankim lent the remainder. That having put up and Probate having been granted the books prove to demonstration that the estate before the end of that financial year made records in its books whereby it assumed liability for that Rs. 30,000. So far as it is possible to say, everybody acted upon that assumption at least till 1912.

In these circumstances, there has been much unnecessary dispute about whether this was a settlement on behalf of the estate or a settlement on the personal responsibility of the executors. It is quite clear that qua executors it was a breach of trust for the widow and Rajani to spend the testator's property in buying off disputes about this Will; and, if the matter had ended there, there would be no difficulty. But in this case, whether the Will was bad or whether it was good, everything went to the widow herself as the estate of a Hindu widow. The estate was the widow's. She was fully entitled to represent it and consequently a payment out of the estate necessarily means, as things stood, a payment out of that beneficiary's interest which at the moment was the widow's. There is nothing to be gained in endeavouring to make the distinction as between personal responsibility and whether the money was coming out of the estate.

The next thing is this. The widow had a limited interest. If this were a case in which that limit was got over by showing that the widow had obtained consent of all the nearest reversioners the transaction certainly could not upon this evidence be supported in that way. The reversioners after the widow were the four daughters who, again, were limited owners. You do not come to an unlimited owner until you find out who was the person who on the death of the four daughters, if there was no adoption, would take the succession. If there was anything wrong in the widows's action you cannot cure it in that way. I am not prepared to say that the matter can be put beyond reach of controversy by regarding it as a family settlement in the strict sense of the expression, because who the parties to the settlement were, or what the terms were, I think was not satisfactorily proved: but you have, I think, to examine this matter on the footing that a Hindu widow was entitled to protect the right that her husband had purported to give by his Will that she should make an adoption and to make a compromise in defence of that right provided always that the transaction, as a whole, was fair and reasonable from the point of view of reversioners. Looking at it in that way, the consent of the other members of the family carries one a very long way indeed towards the validity of this compromise. So far as I can see, it was a reasonable compromise which appeared to the members of the family at the time as such. Bankim and Sarojini were most anxious that their son should be adopted. The younger daughters were not in the least anxious to preserve their possible right after their mother's death. Indumat alone was anxious to prevent

Nirmal from becoming the adopted son; and the widow, in these circumstances, having apparently taken all the advice she could by this compromise permitted Rs. 30,000 for the sake of family peace and dignity to come out of the estate which if she chose, would be hers during the whole of her lifetime.

By these means Bankim and Sarojini's son was adopted. He was adopted in 1906 entirely on the strength of this Probate long before anybody ever thought of seeking a revocation; and, time goes on till 1912 when, he being still a minor, a serious dispute in the family arose. Then the Will is attacked; it is set aside and it is proved finally after a great deal of controversy and a very expensive litigation the result of which must for long have been uncertain.

That being the picture which you get from the evidence of the case we are only concerned not with whether Indumati's allowance should be stopped to answer this debt of Rs. 30,000 to the estate. We are not concerned with the rights of the creditors at all. It is a pure question as between the beneficiaries of the estate. The order for administration was not made till 1913 and it is no part of the intention of such an order to rip up all previous transactions or to make people put back money unless it is established that the transaction was invalid. It seems to me, in these circumstances, that for Sudhir who has become the proprietor of the estate and executor of this Will to say in course of this suit that Indumati's Rs. 100 a month should be stopped because the transaction of 1905 was invalid and a breach of trust is a contention which requires better evidence than we have got. The evidence of Bankim has much in it to show that the transaction was perfectly reasonable and fair. He certainly thought it so and the family thought it so, and for many years it was acted upon. In these circumstances, although I am bound to say that Indumati and her advisers by refraining as long as possible from having any dealings with the obvious truth of the matter have placed their case in great jeopardy, I do not hold it proved that she owes Rs. 30,000 to the estate or that her allowance can be set off against the debt. I think, therefore, in the end that that judgment of the learned Judge on this matter should be upheld.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE NO. 87 OF 1923.

JAGESHWAR PRASAD SINGH —PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876), ss. 3 (1), 12—Estate coming under Act—"Bar" of pending proceedings, meaning of—Revival of proceedings—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15.

The real meaning of the word "bar" used with regard to pending proceedings in cl. (1) of s. 3 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act is that they should be stayed so long as the management continues and not that, except in the circumstances laid down in s. 12, the bar shall be absolute. Even if, in cases which do not fall under the purview of s. 12, no revivor of proceedings is allowed, the provisions of s. 15 of the Limitation Act must apply thereto. [p. 626, col. 2.]

Similarly any process, execution or attachment, which became null and void on the publication of an order under s. 2 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, can be revived, after its cancellation, under s. 15 of the Limitation Act, although s. 12 of the Estates Act does not apply thereto. [ibid.]

The provisions of s. 12 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act relating to the revival of barred proceedings and debts should not be strictly construed. [p. 625, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Special Subordinate Judge, Palamau, dated the 16th February 1923.

Mr. Ganga Charan Mukherji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and Hareshwar Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of Rs. 20,705-7-1 as principal and interest due upon a hand-note executed by defendant No. 1 as karta of the family on behalf of himself and his brother defendant No. 2. The hand-note was executed in favour of the father of the plaintiff on the 18th of October 1902 for a sum of Rs. 6,198. The loan was taken for the purpose of meeting the cost of litigation and saving the joint family property. On the 18th of June, 1904, the defendants applied to the Deputy Commissioner for protection under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, and on the 30th of October 1904, an order was passed vesting their estate under a manager under the provisions of the Act. The order was published in the Gazette on the 11th of January 1905. After publication of the order the manager called upon the creditors to submit their claims. The defendants in their application had given a list of their debts and the second item in the schedule is this debt of Rs. 6,198 on the bond of 18th of October 1902. Interest at 1 per cent. per month had risen to Rs. 829-11-0 and the total debt was Rs. 7,027-11-0. The application was signed and verified by both the defendants. The Manager proceeded to determine the claims under s. 8 of Act VI of 1876 and the defendants admitted the claim. The Manager thereafter drew up a scheme for the re-payment of this debt of Rs. 6,198 and interest Rs. 914. That scheme is Ex. 4. The scheme was submitted to the Commissioner under s. 11 of the Act and was approved by him. According to s. 11 a scheme "when approved by the Commissioner shall be carried into effect." I am referring to Act VI of 1876 as it stood before the amending Act, Bihar and Orissa Act VIII of 1922. The Manager, however, failed to carry out the scheme so far as it affected this debt, and no money was received from him by the plaintiffs. On the 21st of June 1921 the estate was released from the operation of the Act by notification under orders from the Board of Revenue. The notification was published in the Gazette on the 13th of July 1921. The notification did not state under what section the release was ordered. It merely stated that the provisions of the Act had ceased to apply to the proprietor of the estate. Thereafter the plaintiff Lalu Jogeshwar Prasad Singh instituted a suit out of which this appeal arises on the 9th of May 1922. The plaintiff claims that the period during which the estate was under protection of the Act should be excluded in computing limitation. The plaint also alleges that the defendants admitted the debt both when they submitted their application for protection and also when the Manager was determining the claims.

The defendants pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation and that there was no legal necessity for the loan in 1902. Defendant No. 1 admitted execution of the hand-note but denied that consideration had passed. He alleged that in 1904, when he was intending to apply for protection under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, knowing that he had a daughter to marry and that it would be hard to obtain money from the Manager, he executed several hand-notes in collusion with and in favour of various relatives, so that those relatives might submit claims to the Manager and get the money from him and make the money over to the defendant so that he could spend it on his necessary expenses. Defendant No. 2 denied that he was any party to the loan, or that defendant No. 1 borrowed the money for family necessity. He alleged that he was separate from defendant No. 1 and was not bound by the hand-note.

The learned Subordinate Judge considered with great care the question whether the period during which the estate was under protection could be excluded when computing the period of limitation. He noticed that the second clause of s. 12 of the Act does not meet the present case, because the estate was released after the Commissioner had given approval, and, therefore, the provisions of the sixth clause to that section could not be applied to the case in their strict interpretation, but he found himself unable to put a strict interpretation upon the section and found that the sixth clause provides in general terms for all cases where the estate is released from management before the debts have been paid off. He held that s. 12 applied to the case and that the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the section. He also found that the provisions of s. 15 of the Limitation Act applied and enabled the plaintiff to exclude the period of protection. He disbelieved the defendant's story about the absence of consideration and also the story about the taking of the money in order to provide for the defendant's daughter's marriage. He held that defendant No. 1 borrowed the money as karta of the joint family for the purposes of the family and that defendant No. 2 was liable. He decreed the plaintiff's suit.

Mr. Ganga Charan Mukherji has argued this appeal with great ability on behalf of the defendants appellants. The main part of his argument has been devoted to the question of limitation. The three questions which arise under this head are: Whether s. 12 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, cl. (6), saves the suit from being barred by limitation, secondly, whether if s. 12, cl. (6) does not apply, s. 15 of the Limitation Act applies, and, thirdly, whether there was such acknowledgment by the defendants as would save the suit from being barred by limitation. Mr. Mukherji has taken us through the sections of the Encumbered Estates Act and his argument is that the first clause of s. 3 of the Act is an absolute bar to all proceedings and suits after the publication of an order under s. 2 of the Act. He points out that the sixth clause of s. 12 refers only to release covered by cl. (2) of the section, that is to say "if the Commissioner, at any time before a scheme has been approved by him under s. 11, thinks that the provisions of this Act should not continue to apply to the case of the holder of the said property or his heir." In the present case the estate was released after approval of the scheme by the Commissioner, and, therefore, the sixth clause cannot apply and there can be no revival of claims. His contention is that the first clause of s. 3 which is the bar to all proceedings still holds good even though the estate has been released because sub-cl. (6) of s. 12 does not apply in the circumstances of this case. There is no doubt, as has been often remarked, that the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876 is inartistic in its drafting. That this has been recognised with regard to such circumstances as we find in the present case is shown by the amendments made by the Legislature by the Bihar and Orissa Act VIII of 1922, whereby in s. 4 the following words have been added to the second clause of s. 12: "Or if after a scheme has been so approved an application is made under s. 11B for the relinquishment of the property." The framers of the Act do not seem to have contemplated that when a scheme has once been approved and has to be carried into effect under s. 11, there could be release under any circumstances other than those mentioned in the first three clauses of s. 12, and, as the Act stood before the amendment of 1922, the strict wording of the Act seems to show that no revivor was contemplated in circumstances other than those mentioned in cl. (2) of s. 12. The learned Subordinate Judge has, I think, taken the right view in holding that too strict interpretation cannot be placed on s. 12.

Section 3, it is true, states that on the publication of order under s. 2 all pending proceedings shall be barred and all processes, executions and attachments for or in respect of debts and liabilities shall become null and void, whereas the second and third clauses are limited in their operation to the period during which such management continues. It is contended that save in the case mentioned in s. 12, cl. (6) the bar shall be absolute and that no process or execution or attachment can, after the publication of an order under s. 2, be served or made. But surely when the order itself is cancelled by a subsequent notification, the effect of the first clause of s. 3 disappears. It could never have been in contemplation of the Legislature that the mere approval by the Commissioner of a scheme should for ever deprive all creditors of redress. But I think it is quite clear that, even were it to be held that as the Act is drafted no revivor of proceedings is allowed, the provision of s. 15 of the Limitation Act must apply. Though the word "bar" is used with regard to pending proceedings in cl. (1) of s. 3, its real meaning is clearly that they should be stayed for cl. (6) of s. 12 shows that in certain circumstances proceedings may be revived. In the present case we have not to do with proceedings which were pending at the time the notification was published; the question is whether any process can issue or any suit be instituted after the order of release. Clause (1) of s. 3 states that processes, executions and attachments shall become null and void on the publication of an order under s. 2, after that order has been cancelled there is no bar to any process, execution or attachment; there has really been merely a stay. The order under s 2 bringing the estate under protection was a vesting order staying all proceedings, and under s. 15 of the Limitation Act I am satisfied that there should be a revivor the period of protection being excluded. I would refer to the case of Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo v. Ranjit Singh (1). It is true that there Das, J., did not consider the difficulty which we have now before us with regard to the wording of cl. (2) of s. 12, but it may be that in that case the point did not arise. The general principles, however, are given as to the right of revivor. I am quite satisfied that the plaintiff is entitled to exclude the time during which he was barred from suing on the debt due to him by reason of the estate being under protection.

Mr. Mukherji has argued that after the Manager had examined the claim and had judicially determined the debt under s. 8 of the Act, the plaintiff could have sued the

(1) 63 Ind. Cas. 743; 6 P. L. J. 328; (1922) Pat. 152; 3 P. L. T. 94; A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 287.

Manager within three years of the determination of the debt; but I think that this contention cannot in any way be upheld for under the wording of clause (1) of s. 3 any such suit would be barred. Secondly, it is contended that when the Manager heard the claims and determined the debt and thereafter drew up a scheme, he was in fact contracting with the plaintiff to pay the debt in a certain manner and within a certain time; and when in 1916, which was the last date of payment under the scheme he had failed to pay to the plaintiff, the plaintiff might have sued him on the contract; but it is clear that in a case like this there was no contract between the Manager and the plaintiff. The Manager determined the scheme without reference to the wishes of the plaintiff.

Thirdly, it is argued that, even if a suit in respect of such determined debt was barred during the period of management, what would revive after release from management would be the debt determined by the Manager and not the original debt. In the present case the Manager determined the original debt to be due but decided that he would pay interest at 6 per cent. and not at 12 per cent. per annum. After the release the whole scheme came to nothing and anything arranged in the scheme would not affect the revival of the original debt at the original rate of interest. Mr. Mukherji would have us hold that the determination of a debt by the Manager is a judicial proceeding and his decision as to what the debt is amounts to a decree. But here the original and determined debts are exactly the same and so the point does not arise I must hold that the plaintiff was entitled to exclude the period of management. It is certainly hard on the defendants that their debts should have been allowed to accumulate for so long a time as 19½ years, but it has to be remembered that through the protection of the Act the defendants' property has been preserved. The plaintiff has also suffered in not being able to obtain re-payment of the debt during so long a period.

The debt would be barred, even if the period of management were excluded, if the defendants had not in 1904 acknowledged their indebtedness. The schedule to their application in 1904 cites and admits the debt. That application is signed and verified by both the defendants. Again when the debt was examined by the Manager under s. 8 the defendants both admitted it, and in his written statement defendant No. 1 acknowledged that he admitted the debt before the Manager. These acknowledgments save the claim from the bar of limitation.

With regard to the passing of consideration the learned Subordinate Judge has, I think, correctly found that consideration passed. The defendant has brought no evidence to show that he gave hand-notes in favour of his relatives for the purpose of obtaining money from the Manager. As to the liability of defendant No. 2, it is clearly shown, I think, that he joined with defendant No. 1 in conducting the litigation. Furthermore he joined with defendant No. 1 in presenting the application for protection and in that application admitted his joint indebtedness. Defendant No. 2 failed to prove that he was separate from defendant No. 1.

With regard to the legal necessity, defendant No. 1 himself says that there was litigation over Lot Chando which continued for a long time. It is argued that there is no evidence that the plaintiff made enquiries as to the necessity of the loan; but it is clear that necessity was pressing, because the litigation was proceeding. I can see no reason to differ from the finding arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge, and I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

Lahore High Court Rules, Vol. V, Ch. XVII, r. 8 —Fees of Counsel—Appeal from order of allotment of properties in partition suit—Power of Court to fix fees.

An appeal from an order allotting certain properties to the respective parties in a suit for partition of immoveable property, after passing of the preliminary but before the final decree, is an appeal from an order in miscellaneous proceedings and the Court has discretion to fix fees of the Counsel as in miscellaneous proceedings.

Petition for review of an order of Mr. Justice Jai Lal, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 113 of 1925, dated the 22nd June 1925.

Lala Mool Chand, R.S., for the Petitioners.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B., and Mr. Shamair Chand and Lala Sardha Ram, R. S., for the Respondent.

ORDER.—A preliminary decree for partition of immovable property was granted against the appellant. Before a final decree was drawn up some proposals were sanctioned by the Senior Subordinate Judge as to the allotment of certain properties to the respective parties. The appellant filed an appeal in this Court from an order passed by the Trial Court sanctioning such an allotment. The value for purposes of jurisdiction was mentioned as Rs. 80,795-10-8. This was the value of the original suit. A Court-fee stamp of Rs. 4 was affixed to the memorandum of appeal. The appeal was expressly stated to be from an order and the prayer was " to set aside the order of the lower Court under s. 47 of the C. P. C." When the appeal came up for hearing on an objection by the respondents that no final decree having been drawn up, the appeal was incompetent, it was withdrawn by the appellant. It was consequently dismissed with costs. On the report of the Office I fixed Rs. 100 as the fees of the respondents. An application was made by the respondents asking me to review my order fixing the fees on the ground that the fees awarded were too low and that I had no jurisdiction to fix the fees. It was contended in the course of arguments that the fee should have been awarded ad valorem as in a regular appeal from decree and that this was not an appeal from an order passed in miscellaneous proceedings. The learned Counsel for the appellant, on the other hand, contended that his appeal was expressly from an order passed under s. 47 of the C. P. C. and was covered by r. 8, of Ch. XVII, on page 42 of the Rules and Orders of this Court, Volume V, and that in any case r. 15 gave me full power to fix the fees. In my opinion the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant is correct.

The appeal was expressly from an order passed in miscellaneous proceedings, it was withdrawn on an objection that the order was not final one and that consequently it was not appealable; it follows, therefore, it was in my discretion to fix the fees of Counsel as in miscellaneous proceedings. That being so the present application does not lie and is hereby dismissed. The parties will bear their own costs.

CIVIL REVISION NO. 276 OF 1924.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Promissory note given in satisfaction of antecedent liability—Suit on pro-note, dismissal of—Suit to enforce antecedent liability, whether barred.

The provisions of r. 2 of O. II of the C. P. C. are directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action and not the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action, even though they arise out of the same transaction. [p. 629, col. 1.]

Where a promissory note is given in satisfaction of an already existing liability, a claim founded on the promissory note and a claim founded on the original liability are based on different causes of action, though they may arise in respect of the same transaction. Where, therefore, in such a case, a suit to recover on the promissory note is dismissed, a subsequent suit to enforce the original liability is not barred by the provisions of r. 2 of O. II of the C. P. C. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Township Court, Tackkyi, in S. C. S. No. 68 of 1924.

JUDGMENT.—One M. K. M. V. Chetty Firm filed a suit against the present respondents for the recovery of Rs. 63 due on a promissory note. The suit was dismissed as the plaintiff failed to prove the execution of the promissory note by the person who was alleged to have executed the same.

The plaintiff now sues for the recovery of Rs. 67-4-0 being the amount lent by the plaintiff to the defendant and for which the defendant had executed the promissory note on which the first suit was filed. The present suit was dismissed by the lower Court under the provisions of ss. 11 and 12 of the C. P. C. The lower Court was wrong in holding that ss. 11 and 12 of the C. P. C., apply to the facts of the case. There is no question of res judicata involved in this case at all. The only point that requires consideration is whether O. II, r. 2 of the C. P. C. applies and whether under that Order the plaintiff is precluded, from filing the present suit. Order II, r. 2 provides that "every action shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; and that the plaintiff cannot afterwards sue for a part of a claim omitted from an action or (without leave) for another remedy for the same cause of action".

The point to be considered is whether the suit on the promissory note and the suit for the original loan are based on the same cause of action or different causes of action. I am of opinion that though the two actions arise out of the same transaction, they are in respect of different causes of action, and, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to file the present suit.

In the case of Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (1) their Lordships make these observations: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the learned Judge took an erroneous view of the object and meaning of this section. It is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action, and not to the inclusion in one and the same action different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transactions. The first part of the clause makes it incumbent on the plaintiff to include the whole of his claim in his action. The second portion makes it incumbent on him to ask for the whole of his remedies. The final paragraph, in their Lordships' opinion, is not intended to be an illustration of the foregoing provisions, but a substantive enactment, making an obligation and a collateral security for its performance (which would otherwise be two independent causes of action) one cause of action for the purposes of the section." These observations are made by their Lordships of the Privy Council with reference to s. 34 of the Ceylon C. P. C., 1889, which is in the same terms as O. II, r. 2 of the Indian C. P. C.

It is clear, therefore, that a claim on the promissory note and a claim founded on the original loan are different causes of action though they may arise out of the same transaction. As long as the promissory note was outstanding, there was no right of action otherwise than upon the note and the plaintiff, therefore could not have included his claim on the original cause of action in his claim on the promissory note.

I, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the case for trial on its merits. The petitioner will get his costs in this Court.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 23rd December 1924, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Delhi, dated the 5th March 1924.

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal, for the Appellants.

Lala Sardha Ram, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken for the respondent that this appeal is time-barred, as, although it was filed on the 31st March 1925, it was not accompanied by a copy of the first Court's judgment, and that copy was not put in till the 17th April, after the expiry of the period of limitation, the 9th April being the last date on which the appeal could have been filed. The appellants had first applied on the 26th February for copies of the lower Appellate Court's judgment and decree, and these were completed on the 4th March and delivered to the appellants by value payable post on the 17th. On the 21st March an application was made by the appellant Amba Parshad's Vakil for an urgent copy of the first Court's judgment. The preparation of the copy was delayed, and it appears that on the 31st March the appellant's Vakil called attention to the matter, but in his reminder spoke of a copy of the decree being required, with the result that on the 3rd April a copy of the decree was supplied to the appellant's Vakil instead of a copy of the judgment. On this coming to the notice of the appellant Amba Parshad he wired to his Vakil to apply again for a copy of the first Court's judgment, and the latter made an application on the 8th April, obtained the copy on the 14th, and filed it in Court on the 17th.

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 228; 41 I. A. 142; 18 C. W. N. 617; 17 New Law Rep. 56; 83 L. J. P. C. 131; (1914) A. C. 618; 110 L. T. 913 (P. C.).

The appellants had a sufficient reason for not applying for a copy of the first Court's judgment until they had obtained a copy of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, which it was necessary for them to see in order to decide whether they should file a second appeal. Their Vakil was no doubt to blame for the mistake in saying on the 31st March that a copy of the first Court's decree was required, but on the other hand the application of the 21st March had been for a copy of the first Court's judgment and not for a copy of the decree. When ultimately a copy of the judgment was obtained on the 14th April, very little time was lost in filing it. We think, taking all the circumstances into consideration, that there was sufficient cause for the copy of the Trial Court's judgment not being filed within the prescribed period of limitation, and the appeal may, therefore, be admitted under s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

The suit out of which the appeal has arisen was one for damages for non-delivery of goods which the defendants had contracted to sell to the plaintiffs. The contract was for the sale of 11 bales of mulls at Rs. 4-15-6 per piece, at Karachi godown, according to the Karachi System November (1916) shipment, 4 lots, 60 days' grace, at 8 annas discount, forwarding charges at 4 annas a piece, delivery of goods to be taken against payment on arrival of Railway receipt. The question involved in the case is one of limitation. It is not disputed that the words "November (1916) shipment, 4 lots" meant that the goods were to be shipped in four monthly lots commencing from November 1916. Allowing two months' grace, four months for the transit of the goods from England to Karachi, and one month for their conveyance from Karachi to Delhi, the Courts below have found that the due date for the first lot of goods was the end of June 1917, and that the suit, which was instituted more than three years after that date, namely. on the 15th July 1920, was barred by limitation so far as the first lot of goods was concerned, but within time as regards the remaining three lots, which were to be delivered in July, August and September respectively. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for Rs. 1,057. The District Judge on appeal enhanced the amount to Rs. 1,150 12 and allowed interest on that amount from the date of his decree at 6 per cent per annum.

In this second appeal, which has been filed by the plaintiffs it is contended on their behalf (i) that it has been shown by the evidence of the salesman of the firm of Ralli Brothers, the importers of the goods, that the first lot of goods, i. e., those of the November shipment, were arriving in India up to September 1917, and that the suit in regard to that lot is consequently within time, and (2) that even if that has not been shown, still the whole suit is within time, as the contract was not an instalment contract, but was an entire contract for the four lots of goods, so that time in respect of all four lots would run from the date when the last lot was due to arrive.

With regard to the first point the evidence of the salesman of Ralli Brothers is not very clear, as, although he has said that the goods of the shipments from November 1916 to February 1917 reached Karachi up to the 8th September 1917, he has not made a statement in regard to the goods of the November shipment in particular. But we think that the second contention is correct, and it is supported by a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court reported in Phul Chand-Fateh Chand v. Chhote Lal-Amba Pershad (1) in which it was held that a contract for the sale of certain goods

(1) 90 Ind. Cas. 654; A. R. 1925 L 513 7 L. L, J, 360.

"November lot 3 grace 60 days" was an indivisible one and that the due date did not arrive until the last shipment under the contract reached Karachi. Mr. Sardha Ram for the respondents points out that it is stated in cl. 7 of the printed form of indent that each shipment is to be treated as a separate contract. But it was only the sold note, executed by the defendants, which was written on that form, the form being the one used by the Hindustani Mercantile Association, and the printed form was not used for the bought note (D-1), which was executed by the plaintiffs. Clause 7 of the printed form of the indent cannot, therefore, be held to be binding on the plaintiffs.

Counsel for the respondents has relied on Bilasiram Thakrsidass v. Ezekiel Abraham Gubbay (2) but that ruling cannot be taken as a guide for the decision of the present case, for there it was a consideration of the particular terms of the contract and of the conduct of the parties and the circumstances which led the Court to the conclusion that delivery of the goods in instalments had been contemplated. Similarly other rulings cited before us in cases relating to contracts in which the goods were to be delivered at particular times or in a particular manner are of no assistance in the present case. In the contract in this case it was not mentioned that the goods were to be delivered on any particular date or dates, and we can see no reason for supposing that the parties intended that each lot was to be delivered separately. The defendants have, in our opinion, failed to show that they could not have tendered the goods of the November shipment at the time when the remaining shipments were due and we hold, therefore, that the whole suit is within time.

The damages have to be calculated with reference to the rate prevailing in September 1917, the last month in which the goods could have been delivered. That rate was Rs. 6-8-6 per piece. The damages work out at more than Rs. 2,057, which is the amount claimed by the plaintiffs.

Nothing has been said in argument in regard to the eleventh ground of appeal.

We accept the appeal and alter the decree to one for Rs. 2,057 with interest thereon at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the lower Appellate Court's decree till realization. The respondents will pay the appellants' costs proportionately in all the Courts.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 3356 OF 1924.

November 11, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Marten.

MAHOMEDALLY EBRAHIMJI LEHERI —PLAINTIFF

versus

Haji ABDULLAH KAZIM—DEFENDANTS.

Landlord and tenant—Monthly tenancy—Notice to quit expiring on last day of tenancy, validity of—Notice expiring with expiration of Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, validity of.

In the case of a monthly tenancy a month's notice to quit expiring on the last day of the tenancy is a valid notice so as to terminate the tenancy. [p. 632, col. 1.]

[Case-law referred to.]

There was nothing in the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act which prevented a landlord from giving a notice to quit expiring with the expiration of that Act.

FACTS.—The plaintiff, a house proprietor in Bombay, served his tenant, the defendant, with one month's notice to quit commencing from the 31st July 1924, when the protection afforded by the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act so far as business premises were concerned came to an end. The defendant having failed to comply with the terms of the notice by the 31st August 1924, the date of expiry of the notice, a suit for ejectment was brought against him by the plaintiff on the 15th September 1924.

Mr. Davar, for the Plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—It is clearly proved here that the plaintiff is the owner of a building known as Leheri Mansion in Sandhurt Road and that the defendant is a monthly tenant of a portion of that property. Under the decree of March 24, 1924, in Suit No. 4017 of 1923, the standard rent of that property has been fixed at Rs. 530 per mensem. I find as a fact that the monthly tenancy runs from the first day of each month to the last day of each month according to the English dates.

On July 31, 1924, the attorneys for the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to quit in the following terms so far as material:—

"We have to call upon you to quit and deliver quiet and peaceful possession of the portion...occupied by you for the purposes of your hotel as our client's monthly tenant at the end of next month (i. e., August 31, 1924). In default our client will file an ejectment suit against you to recover possession of the said premises at your risk as to costs, which please note."

The point is whether a notice to quit on the last day of the month, viz., August 31, 1924, is invalid inasmuch as the tenancy would not expire until the end of the day constituting August 31, 1924. Counsel has pointed out that under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, a notice to quit may be by a notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy, in the absence of any contract or local usage to the contrary. In the present case, I think, having regard to what is said in Bhojabhai v. Hayem Samuel (1), that local custom probably requires a month's notice in the case of property in Bombay like the property in the present case, and that accordingly the fifteen days' notice mentioned in s. 106 would be insufficient.

But there is nothing whatever in the local practice, so far as I am aware, to suggest that a notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy would not be a proper notice in the case of a month's notice as opposed to a fifteen days' notice. On the contrary in Kikabhai v. Kalu (2) a case which was decided by Sir Charles Farran and Mr. Justice Hosking, a notice was given to quit on March 31, 1892, and that was held to be a good notice. That was a case where the tenancy was an annual tenancy and where the notice to be given was a six months' notice. So that case is in effect an authority for the proposition that a notice to quit on the last day of the tenancy is a valid notice.

Then Counsel has been good enough to draw my attention to a recent English case of Simmons v. Crossley (3) where the question was what notice must be given to determine a monthly tenancy. What happened there was that the landlord thinking that the tenancy was a longer than a monthly tenancy gave a six months' notice to determine the tenancy, and notice was given to quit on September 29. That date, it will be observed, is one day short of the actual end of the month, viz., September 30. Accordingly it was argued that the notice to quit was bad inasmuch as it was given for one day short of the end of the month and that it could not be given for any day other than the last day of the month. There Counsel for the tenant contended that the notice must expire either on the last day of one month or on the first day of the next month calculated at the date of its commencement and at no other time.

But the actual decision of the Court was that all that was required was a reasonable notice, and that it can be given for some day other than the last day of a month. But there it will be observed the notice was a very long one. If the length of notice had been under a month, then it would clearly have been invalid, but being so long as six months the Court held that the landlord could fix a different date for the termination than the mere end of a calender month. Many authorities were there cited by the learned Judges, and the importance of the case to us in the present suit is that it was conceded that a notice expiring on the last day of a month would be good.

So, too, in Ismail Khan Mahomed v. Jaigun Bibi (4) the English case of Page v. More (5) was relied on by the tenant as showing that a notice to quit at noon on the last day is bad. But that case was held distinguishable in the Calcutta case where the notice to quit was not at any particular time on the last day of the tenancy but merely before it. I, however, notice that according to page 572 of the report the notice to quit was not "before" the last day but "by" the last day of the particular Chait year.

Then in Harihar Banerjee v. Ramsashi Roy (6) their lordships of the Privy Council have considered this question of notices to quit, and they say:—

"It has not been suggested, and could not, their Lordships think, be successfuly contended, that the principles they lay down are not equally applicable to cases arising in India. They establish that notice to quit, though not strictly accurate or consistent in the statements embodied in them, may still be good and effective in law; that the test of their sufficiency is not what they would mean to a stranger ignorant of all the facts and circumstances touching the holding to which they purport to refer, but what they would mean to tenants presumably conversant with all those facts and circumstances, and further, that they are to be construed not with a desire to find faults in them which would render them defective but to be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat."

On these authorities then I hold that this notice did not mean that the tenant was to give up possession at any definite hour prior to midnight on August 31, 1924, and that accordingly the notice, in my opinion, was a valid notice. It is clear that the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act expired on or before August 31, 1924, and in my opinion there was nothing in that Act which would prevent the landlord from giving notice to quit at the expiration of that Act.

HAKAM RAI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

GANGA RAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Partnership, dissolution of, suit for—Onus as to factum of partnership—Evidence of partnership.

In a suit for dissolution of partnership the onus of proving the factum of partnership is on the plaintiff. Where there is no agreement of the partnership, it is necessary for the plaintiff that the conduct of the parties towards one another, the mode in which they have dealt with one another and the mode in which each has with the knowledge of the other dealt with other people, raises a necessary presumption that a partnership was entered into. As a rule in the absence of direct evidence of partnership the relationship is shown by books of account, by correspondence, by the evidence of employees, by admissions and so forth. [p. 633, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 20th January 1922.

Messrs. M. L. Puri and Bal Kishan, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Lala Jagan Nath Bhandari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT. — Plaintiff-appellant brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for the dissolution of partnership of a firm called Ganga Ram-Gokal Chand. The defendant Ganga Ram is a brother of the appellant and the defendant Gokal Chand is the son of Ganga Ram.

The defence is that the appellant is not and never was a partner in the firm in question. The suit was dismissed on the ground (1) that it was barred by O. II, r. 2, and (2) that the plaintiff had not shown that he was a partner of this firm.

It appears that the parties to the present appeal were partners in certain saltpetre works at Chhapanwali and Gujranwala. The appellant brought a suit for dissolution of partnership in each of these undertakings, but subsequently he admitted that there was only one partnership in respect of the saltpetre works, namely, the Chhapanwali concern, and that Gujranwala undertaking was merely a branch of the Chhapanwali business. A decree has been given for the dissolution of the partnership in the Chappanwali enterprise and it has been agreed that the accounts of the Gujranwala concern shall be taken in that dissolution matter.

The firm of Ganga Ram Gokal Chand was formed for the purpose of carrying on money-lending and real estate business. The onus is upon the appellant to show that he is a partner in this business. There is no written agreement of partnership and, therefore, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that the conduct of the parties towards one another, the mode in which they have dealt with one another, and the mode in which each has with the knowledge of the other dealt with other people, raises a necessary presumption that a partnership was entered into. As a rule, in the absence of direct evidence of partnership the relationship is shown by books of account, by correspondence, by the evidence of employees, by admissions, and so forth. In the present case there is no such evidence and the plaintiff is driven to rely upon two circumstances which he claims show that he supplied capital for the working of this firm and was a sleeping partner in it. One of these circumstances is that Ganga Ram had drawn certain sums from the Chhapanwali business and transferred these sums to the Ganga Ram Gokal Chand firm. The appellant alleges that these sums were portions of the Chhapanwali capital and accordingly is the joint capital of himself and the respondents, and this shows that he has contributed working capital to the Ganga-Ram-Gokal Chand concern. The answer to this, however, is that the sums drawn from the Chhapanwali business were drawn by Ganga Ram himself, debited to himself alone, and placed by him in the Ganga Ram-Gokal Chand concern. The only inference to be drawn from this circumstance is that Ganga Ram was drawing some of his own money out of the Chhapanwali partnership in order to help and finance his other enterprise. There is no evidence that the appellant himself put any money whatsoever into this latter concern.

The other circumstance relied on by the appellant is a vague statement by Gokal Chand made on cross-examination that the Ganga Ram-Gokal Chand firm paid for a number of years some money to the Chhapanwali factory as income-tax. This may mean that the Ganga Ram-Gokal Chand firm were helping the Chhapanwali business by advancing money to discharge a portion of their income-tax liabilities but it is not sufficient as proof that the partners in the one concern are necessarily partners in the other.

These are the only two circumstances which can possibly be relied upon by the appellant as establishing his contention that the Ganga Ram-Gokal Chand enterprise is a branch of the main trading concern at Chhapanwali.

In our opinion this evidence is wholly insufficient to establish the partnership. Agreeing as we do, therefore, with the Trial Court that the appellant has not shown himself to be a partner in the firm of Ganga Ram-Gokal Chand, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Sums misappropriated by father as trustee—Sons, liability of.

Under the Hindu Law a son is liable to account for amounts collected by his father in his capacity as trustee but subsequently misappropriated by him. The fact that the misappropriation amounts to a criminal offence does not affect his liability.

Garudu Sanyasayya v. Nerella Muthemma, 48 Ind. Cas. 740; 85 M. L. J. 661; 9 L. W. 1; 25 M. L. T. 86, followed.

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bapatla, in E. A. No. 1564 of 1921, in O. S. No. 87 of 1918.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Kameswara Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The contention of Mr. Ramadoss in this appeal is that the debt incurred by the father was in the capacity of a trustee and, therefore, he must have been considered to have criminally misappropriated the trust funds and that the son's share cannot be made liable for such a debt.

There is nothing to show that the first defendant misappropriated any amount so as to bring him within the clutches of the Criminal Law and all that was found against him was that certain sums of money for which he was accountable were not accounted for by him and in a scheme suit he was ordered to pay the amount which came into his hands. We do not think that will amount to misappropriation or breach of trust within the meaning of s. 403 or 406 of the Indian Penal Code. If he had been found guilty of breach of trust, he would have been removed from his office of trusteeship. But he has been allowed to continue. Therefore, we cannot hold that he was guilty of breach of trust.

Even if it is found that he misappropriated the amount which came into his hands we do not think the sons can escape the liability to pay their father's debt. Mr. Ramadoss relied strongly upon Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1). That case was considered by the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Iyer in Garudu Sanyasayya v. Nerella Muthemma (2). There they held that "under the Hindu Law, a person was liable to account for amounts collected by his father and grandfather in their capacity as trustees but subsequently misappropriated by them. The fact that the misappropriation amounts to a criminal offence did not affect his liability." We are entirely in accord with the principle of this decision. Therefore, we consider that there is nothing in this contention.

(2) 48 Ind. Cas. 740; 35 M. L. J. 661; 9 L. W. 1; 25 M. L. T. 86.

The next point is that the son, the appellant, was specifically exonerated by the decree. The decree has not been produced before us. There is nothing to show that his share of the family property was exonerated. If there was anything in this point it would have been pressed before the learned Judges who remanded the suit for disposal on the merits.

No doubt this point was raised in the grounds of appeal but it evidently was not pressed. There are no materials before us for holding that the appellant's share was exonerated by the decree passed in the scheme suit.

The next question is one of fact. The contention of the appellant that he was divided from his father was disbelieved by the lower Court. We have been taken through the evidence on his side and we find that the evidence is not only unsatisfactory but even if believed does not go to show that the property attached fell to the share of the appellant on partition. The evidence as to partition is very unsatisfactory and we have no reason to differ from the finding of the learned Judge which we consider to be correct.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 39, 48—Contract, refusal to perform—Other party, remedies of—Rescission of contract—Lahore High Court Rules and Orders, Vol. V, Ch. XX, r. 1—Documents, printing of.

Where a person who has contracted to supply goods to another writes to say that he will not supply the goods, the latter has three courses open to him. He can write back accepting the position and so fulfil the requirements of s. 39 of the Contract Act. He can also act upon the refusal by going to the open market and purchasing the goods therefrom. In either of these cases he can sue for damages. If he does not adopt either of these courses, he can ignore the refusal and treat the contract as still subsisting. But if he does so, it must inure for the benefit of both sides, and s. 48 of the Contract Act will apply. [p. 637, col. 2.]

Therefore, where a person has contracted to supply goods to another throughout the year according to his requirements, the latter, on a refusal by the former to supply the goods, must accept or reject the offer of rescission there and then. It is not possible for him to go on accepting the offer by instalments throughout the year. If he does not take action by word or deed, he cannot keep alive the contract for his own purpose and treat it as rescinded so far as any benefit to the other party is concerned. In other words if he does not adopt either of the alternative courses by which he can put an end to the contract, he must inform the other party of his requirements as they arise, to enable him, if he wishes, to carry out the contract as it affects the remaining instalments. [ibid.]

The party on whom the duty falls for having a document printed is not the party which relies on the document in the sense that he produced it, but the party for whom in appeal the document is necessary and essential, and it is as necessary and essential to an appellant who impugns the correctness of a document or contends that it has not been correctly weighed and interpreted that it should be printed, as that the judgment which he attacks should be printed. [p, 638, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore, dated the 31st May 1921.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B., and Lala Durga Das, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Noad and Ram Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the Secretary of State sued a firm Bhai Jawahar Singh and Sons, claiming damages for the breach of a contract. He was given a decree for the full amount claimed of Rs. 24,328-11-1, and the defendant firm appeals. The facts as stated in the plaint are that the Inspector-General of Prisons invited tenders for the supply of yarn suitable for the manufacture of prisoners' clothing etc., etc. for a period of 12 months. In reply to this letter the defendant firm tendered. The tender was accepted and a formal agreement was executed on the 18th of August 1917. The terms of the agreement were that the defendants were to supply cotton yarn to the various Jails in the Province in accordance with demands to be made by them. Several orders of October and November were not complied with and a letter was written on the 7th of November drawing the attention of the defendant firm to this fact and threatening it that unless the goods were supplied they would be purchased in the open market and the difference would be charged to them. Further defaults were made and on the 6th of December the Inspector-General served a registered notice upon the defendants calling upon them to comply with the demands and pointing out the consequences which would follow upon failure to do so. To this the defendant firm replied by a letter dated the 14th of December 1917 printed at page 62 in which they asserted that the plaintiff had broken the contract by ordering cotton which was not covered by the terms of that contract, demanded their security back and the payment of outstanding bills and recited categorically that under these circumstances they were compelled to rescind the contract. In the following month the Inspector-General issued instructions to the Superintendents of various Jails that, as the firm was unable to supply yarn, purchases might be made in the open market up till the date on which the contract would have terminated. In the present suit the plaintiff claims damages representing the difference between the prices that were actually paid in the open market for the cotton required and the prices at which the defendants had contracted to supply. In their reply, the defendants traversed most of the allegations made by the plaintiff. They contended that the agreement was bad on account of vagueness, that the contention contained in their letter of the 14th of December was quite correct, that it was the plaintiff who had broken the contract by ordering goods not covered by the terms of the contract and by delaying payment for the goods supplied, and that they themselves had committed no breach whatever. They questioned the correctness of the plaintiffs allegation as to the purchase of the goods and the rates paid. In para. 5 of the plaint it had been stated that owing to a rise in the price of cotton yarn the defendants stopped supplying yarn to the Jails. To this the defendants' reply was that "It is not admitted that the rate of yarn rose in the month of October 1917 and that the defendants accordingly stopped supplying goods. The rest of the para. is not denied." This we can only read as meaning that they did stop supplying goods but that the reason was not as given in the plaint. The defendants also took a point regarding what are called half counts, which was definitely dropped in appeal. On the 18th of January 1919 Mr. Mahtab Singh, who was appearing for the plaintiff, stated that the defendants had broken the contract on the 14th of December and refused to carry out the terms of the contract. On these pleadings 15 issues were framed and the Trial Court held that a breach had been committed on the 14th of December which entitled the plaintiff to claim damages, and that the amount of damages was proved by the evidence which consisted of the oral statements of various Jailors and of the documents produced by them. It held that the agreement was not bad for vagueness and that the plaintiff had not committed any breach by ordering cotton for purposes not indicated in the contract.

On appeal the points pressed by Counsel are that the agreement was bad for vagueness, that the plaintiff did commit a breach by ordering goods not covered by the terms, that the defendants did not commit any breach and that this letter dated 14th of December amounted to nothing more than an offer or notice intimating their intention not to carry out the terms of the contract, that this was a nullity until either acted upon or accepted by the plaintiff and as it was not so accepted nor acted upon, it had no effect whatsoever. He further contends that even if damages be decreed against him, the plaintiff has not proved the amount which he is liable to pay. The point regarding the vagueness of the terms of the contract is not seriously pressed. The contract is for an indefinite supply of cotton to be ascertained at subsequent dates. The quantities were subsequently ascertained as the requirement of the various Jails materialized.

So far as the purpose for which the cotton was to be used is concerned, the defendants took their stand on the terms of the letter calling for tenders as recited in the plaint. This stated that cotton yarn was required for prisoners' clothing, etc., etc. In the letter printed at page 62, in which the defendants stated very clearly that they had no intention of carrying out the contract they omitted the words "etc. etc." and said that "the contract was limited to supply of cotton for the manufacture of prisoners' clothing only." This was not the case and the interpretation placed upon the invitation by the defendants themselves may be seen from their tender printed at page 4, the schedule at page 5 signed by them, and the agreement at page 6 in which they make no mention of the purposes for which the cotton was required and merely speak of "the said goods." In the schedule at page 5 one of the descriptions of supplies required is "bump yarn for ropes," and the defendants have been wholly unable to explain how this could be required for prisoners' clothing. It is then urged that the words "etc. etc." must be read as meaning ejusdem generis. The requirements of prisoners, under this head so far as we know, are confined to clothing and woollen blankets, and the words "etc. etc." cannot, therefore, refer to their requirements. It is admitted by the plaintiff that he did order yarn for manufacturing muslins, dusters and other articles, and supplied these manufactured articles not only to other Governments Departments but also to the general public. We are of opinion that the words "etc., etc." cover all purposes for which cotton is required in the Jails whether for the manufacture of good or for internal consumption. It has not been contended that any unreasonable quantity of cotton was demanded nor that the defendants were prejudiced or injured in any way by the nature of the demands and the qualities required being of an unexpected or unprecedented description. We hold that the contract was good and valid. The questions remain of whether the contract has been broken, and if so, who is responsible for the breach.

The position taken by the defendants is that the preliminary stages consisting of their repeated failures to supply the goods ordered and the action taken by the plaintiff in writing to them on the 6th of December 1917 must be ignored as mere preliminaries and that the first step towards the breach was committed by them in writing their letter of the 14th of December 1917, in which they categorically refused to carry out the contract. This, it is pointed out amounted only to a notice or offer under s. 39 and unless it was accepted or acted upon, it was wholly inoperative and void. The plaintiff on the other side contends that, even if this view be taken, he did act upon their letter, in that he stopped sending further demands and did supply his requirements from the open market. He contends that the fact that he did so piecemeal or on various dates throughout the year as requirements arose is wholly immaterial. We have been referred by Counsel to Bilasiram Thakursidass v. Ezekiel Abraham Gubbay (1) Rash Behary Shaha v. Nrittya Gopal Nundy (2) and Manindra Chandra Nanday v. Aswini Kumar Acharyya (3) and we agree with Mr. Moti Sagar that this position, as defined by him, is quite correct so far as the future requirements were concerned presuming always that this letter of the 14th of December amounts to a notice or offer under s. 39.

The plaintiff's claim may be divided into two halves, the first being the damages claimed on account of the high price of the goods purchased to supply the deficit caused by the failure of the defendants to carry out the orders received before the 14th of December, and the second consists of the damages claimed on account of the purchases made at high prices during the remainder of the year and it appears to be that while the plaintiff is entitled to the first he is not entitled to the second. On receiving this letter of the 14th of Decembar the plaintiff had three courses open to him. He could write acknowledging its receipt and accepting the position as there defined, and so fulfil the requirements of s. 39. He could also act upon the letter by going into the open market and purchasing his requirements for the year, and in either case he could sue the defendants for damages, these damages being calculated at the date, i. e., at a future date on which the requirements would arise, this calculation being necessarily a matter of guess work. If he did not adopt either of these alternatives he could ignore the letter and treat the contract as still subsisting. But, if he did so, it must inure for the benefit of both sides, and s. 48 of the Contract Act would apply. It was not possible for him to go on accepting the offer of the 14th of December in instalments throughout the year. The various authorities quoted do not say definitely in so many words that he could not do so, but they make it quite clear, in our opinion; that this is the position. If he does not take action by word or deed he cannot keep the contract alive for his own purpose and treat it as rescinded so far as any benefit, which might accrue to the defendants, is concerned. In other words if he does not adopt either of the alternative courses, whereby he can put an end to the contract, he must inform the defendants of his requirements as they arise so as to enable them if they wish, to repent and to carry out their contract so far as it affects the remaining instalments. We do not wish to be understood to lay down that the purchase must be made as one transaction and that reasonable latitude would not be allowed to the promisee in providing himself with the goods. This latitude would doubtless cover the purchase from several sellers extended over a reasonable time, but in our opinion it could not cover the facts of this case so far as it includes the waiting for the actual amounts to be ascertained and the extension of the purchases over many months.

(3) 60 Ind. Cas. 337; 48 C. 427; 32 C. L. J. 168; 25 C. W. N. 297.

In this case the plaintiff did not adopt any of the three courses open to him in its entirety. He accepted the offer of the 14th of December in so far as he went into the market and supplied his wants represented by the goods he had ordered and which the defendants had failed to supply. He might at the same time have supplied his future wants which would accrue during the rest of the year. But the fact that he did not do so does not, in our opinion, debar him from claiming damages on the amount of goods which he did buy there and then. It was unnecessary for him to communicate the fact of his purchase; his action in making the purchase was sufficient. We, therefore, find that he is entitled to the first part of his claim only.

The ultimate position of the plaintiff is that continued defaults were made which constituted a notice to him of the defendants not to be bound by the contract and not to carry out its provisions. He replied in his letter of the 6th December in which he had accepted the notice and left it open to the defendants to withdraw it by carrying out their part of the bargain. As explained in Bilasiram Thakursidas v. Ezekeil Abraham Gubbay (1) this letter is not sufficiently definite by itself to terminate the contract, and even though the defendants by their reply of the 14th December, definitely refused to accept the opportunity given them that refusal cannot be treated as dating back in such a way as to render the unconditional acceptance contained in the letter of the 6th December an unconditional and absolute acceptance except to the extent described above. There is, therefore, in our opinion, no such definite acceptance and no such definite act on the part of the plaintiff, as is required by s. 39. The contract was, therefore, kept alive so far as the late requirements are concerned.

As regards the measure of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled it is contended by Counsel that the plaintiff is entitled to none as he has not followed the procedure laid down in the agreement and called upon the Superintendents of the various Jails to assess the damages, and after their doing so he has not allowed one month to the defendants in which to appeal against their decision to the Inspector-General. He relies on para. 4 of the contract. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention. It is not a question of a reference to arbitration. The Superintendents of the Jails or any other subordinates of the Secretary of State could only sue for damages in accordance with s. 74 of the Contract Act, and it is these damages which the plaintiff claimed.

Regarding the actual amount and the rates, etc., the defendants contend that their appeal must succeed because the respondent has failed to print all the documents on which he relies, and quotes Kartar Singh v. Labh Singh (4) in support of this view. In our opinion this ruling does not place the interpretation, which they wish, on the rules regarding printing. In that case it is clearly stated that the District Judge considered one document only and rested his decision thereon. The Judges of this Court took a different view of the value of that document and thus finally decided the case. The respondent wished to rely upon other documents which he had not asked to have printed and some of which were apparently named but not considered by the District Judge. In this case it is not a question of mere reference to the documents for the Trial Court has clearly relied upon them and considered them in its judgment and based its decision upon them, and, therefore, we are of opinion that under r. 1, Ch. XX of the Rules and Orders of the High Court, Volume V, it was the duty of the appellant to print these documents. In the second place the portion of this ruling which follows the decision regarding the one document is, in our opinion, an obiter dictum. The old rule was very clear and the recent amendment of 1922 runs as follows:—"(1) (a) Plaint and Pleas (b). Such documents either referred to in the plaint as forming the basis of the suit or considered by the lower Court in its judgment as may be specified by either party in response to a notice within the period of 30 days etc.."

And the party on whom the duty falls is not the party, which relies on the document in the sense that he produced it, but the party for whose case in appeal the document is necessary and essential, and it is as necessary and essential to an appellant who impugns the correctness of a document or contends that it has not been correctly weighed and interpreted that it should be printed as that the judgment, which he attacks, should be printed. The test is whether the appeal can proceed and can be argued without it, and whether the appeal is self-contained. What the appellant does in this case is to contend that the lower Court was wrong and must be held to have given a wrong decision, because the respondent did not have certain documents printed. If in addition to the documents considered by the lower Court in its judgment or referred to in the plaint other documents are required by the other side, it is for that side, which requires them, to have them printed, Counsel points to r. 5 (1), the last two lines of which seem to contain a mistake. Whether they do or do not, the earlier part of the Chapter is, in our opinion, quite clear. The defendants-appellants have not seen fit to have any of the documents printed which they wish to attack, and cannot, therefore, refer to them, and they are unable to show that the damages awarded by the Trial Court have not been correctly calculated.

(4) 74 Ind. Cas. 685; 5 L. L J. 190; A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 355.

The only question remaining is up to what purchases or rather damages on purchases of goods indented for before the 14th December are to be allowed. Counsel for the defendants has suggested that if the various pleas of vagueness, etc., are not successful purchases up to the 31st December should be allowed. We do not consider this would give a reasonable opportunity for the purchase of the goods and we take the 31st January 1918, as the last day on which the plaintiff was entitled to act and render the defendants liable. Before the 14th December the plaintiff had made good the defaults of the defendants and acted upon their refusal to the extent of purchasing goods for which he had to pay Rs. 619-13 more than the contract rates. Between the 14th December and the 31st January he similarly purchased goods for which he had to pay Rs. 3,428-14 more than the contract price. While keeping in mind that the purchases are not to be allowed to exceed the indents we have not confined the purchases strictly to the identical Jails and have allowed a purchase of the same amount as a previous indent even if shown against another Jail. The final result is, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to Rs. 4,048-11. We accept the appeal of the defendants in so far as to reduce the amount of damages to Rs. 4,048-11.

The defendants have succeeded on a highly technical point and the equities are entirely with the plaintiff, whose suit has failed to the extent of 5/6ths because he did not observe the very strict and very technical requirements of the law. We leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 197 OF 1923.
October 7, 1925.
Present:—Justice Sir Charles Gordon Spencer, KT.

MYLAVARAPPA RANGAPPA NAIDU—
DEFENDANT NO. 1—APPELLANT

BASANNA SIMON AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS NOS. 1 TO 4—RESPONDENTS.

Estoppel—Transfer as guardian of minor—Subsequent transfer as owner—Subsequent transferee, whether estopped—Mortgage—Redemption before time—Cause of action—Suit for possession—Premature suit for redemption—Period expiring during pendency of suit—Decree, whether can be granted—Procedure.

Where a Hindu widow, as guardian of her alleged adopted son, mortgages certain property as belonging to the son, and subsequently transfers the same property in her own right as a Hindu widow, the transferee from the widow is not estopped from asserting his vendor's title. In fact there is no question of estoppel in such a case. [p. 640, col. 2.]

A mortgagor cannot be allowed to redeem the mortgage before the expiry of the term mentioned in the mortgage-deed, unless there is a contract to the contrary in favour of the mortgagor. [p. 641, col. 2.]

Especially in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to insist on his full term of enjoyment where there are no clear words in the mortgage-deed permitting the mortgagor to redeem before the expiry of the period. [p. 642, col. 1.]

A party suing for possession must show that on the date of the suit he is entitled to the relief. [p. 642, col. 2.]

A suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage, which is premature, cannot be decreed on the period of mortgage expiring during pendency of the suit. In such a case the only course is to dismiss the suit with liberty to bring a fresh one on a proper cause of action. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 19 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Vizagapatam, in O. S. No. 243 of 1919.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and K. Kameswara Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and P. Bapiraju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for redemption. The plaintiffs obtained a decree for redemption in the Court of the District Munsif of Vizagapatam and the decision was confirmed on appeal. The defendants, who represent the mortgagees, contend that the plaintiffs' suit is not maintainable, first, because the plaintiffs have no locus standi to maintain the suit as they are estopped from asserting that their vendor had any title to convey to them; and secondly, because the term of the mortgage has not expired and the suit is premature.

The lands in dispute were the property of one Anga Narasimhulu who died in 1901 leaving a widow Rangamma and two daughters. After his death the widow put forward Anga Ramaswami as having been adopted to her deceased husband. On 6th April 1902 she executed a usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 1,000 in favour of the first defendant. The mortgagor under this document was her adopted son Ramaswami represented by his guardian the adoptive mother. On 2nd May 1906, another usufructuary mortgage was executed by the widow as guardian of her adopted son for Rs. 1,400. In this mortgage the prior mortgage of 6th April 1902 was merged. This mortgage, Ex. B, is sought to be redeemed in the present suit. On 2nd July 1910 Rangamma sold the suit property to the plaintiffs' father. On 6th July 1910 the adopted son who also had attained majority, sold the property to Vaddadi Ramaswami, who in his turn on 11th January 1912 sold the same property to Mylavarappa Venkata Rao. The plaintiffs' father brought a suit in 1910, O. S. No. 61 of 1910 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, to eject the present appellants after declaring the mortgage in their favour to be invalid. That suit was dismissed, the plaintiff's right to redeem the mortgage being left open and he being given liberty to bring another suit. In 1912 the two daughters instituted a suit O. S. No. 18 of 1912 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam to declare the adoption of Anga Ramaswami invalid. It was held that the adoption was not proved, and this decision was confirmed by the High Court on appeal. One other fact requires to be mentioned, namely, that Rangamma executed a Will on 3rd April 1902 bequeathing all her properties in favour of her adopted son and two daughters one-third to him and two-thirds to the daughters. As Rangamma is still alive, though not a party to the present suit, it is unnecessary to consider the effect of this testamentary disposition.

On the first point the appellant's Vakil argues that the mortgage having been given in the name of the adopted son, the plaintiffs who claim by purchase from the widow have no equity of redemption in their favour, and the adopted son having sold the property to Vaddadi Ramaswami who again conveyed it to Mylavarapu Venkata Rao, it is suggested that, if any one has the equity of redemption, it must be Mylavarapu Venkata Rao. Again he contends that the widow, having executed the plaint mortgage-deed as guardian of her adopted son, would be estopped from claiming any right of redemption in herself and that the plaintiffs, being representatives of the interest of the widow, are similarly estopped.

In my opinion, there is no estoppel in this case. The plaintiffs' father purchased the property under Ex. A from the widow who sold it in her own right and not as guardian of her adopted son. In fact she would have had no right to sell the property on his behalf if the adoption was a valid one as by that time he had attained his majority. The validity of the adoption was the subject of O. S. No. 18 of 1912. It has not been put in issue in this suit although the Subordinate Judge in his judgment states that there was in fact no adoption. The appellants who claim to set up jus tertii in Venkata Rao as a defence to plaintiffs' suit do not themselves claim under Venkata Rao. The plaintiffs have never made any representation as to the ownership of the property conflicting with their case in the present suit and defendants have not been misled by their conduct. Their father purchased the widow's interest in the suit property under Ex. A and as possessing that interest, they certainly have the right to redeem the property from any encumbrances upon it, as they are persons having an interest within the meaning of s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. The defendants could only defeat the plaintiffs' right to redeem by showing that at the date of the plaintiffs' father's purchase the widow had no interest to convey. This they have not done, as they have not attempted to show that Anga Ramaswami was validly adopted.

I now pass on to the second question whether the suit is premature. The mortgage-deed, Ex. B, is a peculiar document. It provides that the rent of the land should go towards the interest due upon the principal and that the mortgagee should keep the surplus as a deposit with him. As the rate of interest was 6 per cent. and the amount of the principal was Rs. 1,400, Rs.84 out of the rent of Rs. 147 went towards interest and the balance of Rs. 63 was to be kept by the mortgagee towards the discharge of the principal. Then there is a provision that the principal shall be discharged by seven instalments of not less than Rs. 200 each within 15 years' time. Finally the mortgagor contracts to take back the land and the bond at the end of the mortgage (thanahaakarna) which does not appear to mean upon the mortgage amount being cleared off (thanakathirina). The time for the payment of the instalments is not specified. Apparently the mortgagor was at liberty to pay off the instalments at any short intervals at his pleasure provided that not less than Rs. 200 were paid at a time. There is no express provision in Ex. B that on payment of the whole of the mortgage amount at any time before the expiry of 15 years, the mortgagor can recover the land. It is conceivable that the parties intended this, but failed to express their intention in proper language. As such a term gives an advantage to the mortgagor, it was necessary that it should be clearly expressed. The mortgage-deed being dated 2nd May 1906, the term of the mortgage did not expire till 2nd May 1921 and this suit, having been instituted on 23rd April 1919 is prima facie premature. In the plaint the cause of action is stated to have arisen on the date when the mortgagor gave notice of his intention to redeem, which is obviously wrong.

In Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (1) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee quote the judgment of the Allahabad High Court to this effect.

" Ordinarily, a mortgagor cannot, before the time limited for payment to the mortgagee expires, take proceedings to redeem. The reason for this is, that it was the agreement of the parties that the mortgage should, during the intervening time, remain as security for the money advanced and, therefore, it is not competent for either party to disturb that relation."

They go on to observe in their own words:—

" But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Such a provision is usually to the advantage of the mortgagor."

In Bir Mohamed Rowther v. Nagoor Rowther (2) a Bench of this Court, following the Privy Council ruling, held that a mortgagor could not be allowed to redeem the mortgage before the expiry of the term mentioned in the mortgage-deed, unless there was a contract to the contrary in favour of the mortgagor. In Vadju v. Vadju (3) it was held that the mere use of the word " within" was not sufficient indication that the mortgagor might redeem before the expiration of the term. Westropp, C. J., stated the general principle to be that the right to redeem and the right to foreclose must ordinarily be regarded as co-extensive. He remarked that if there was an intention to make the mortgagor's position more favourable than the mortgagee's, some stronger expression should have been used in the document than the Marathi word "ant" which signifies "within a certain date." In Rose Ammal v. Rajarathnam Ammal (4) Shephard, J., observed that the rule of mutuality is not an inflexible and universal one and that if the parties intend that redemption should take place only at the end of the given term, they should indicate that intention in the words of the deed. This seems to put the onus on the wrong shoulders, as the learned Judge was dealing with an exception to a general rule. In Chandu v Kozhi Poojari (5) Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Iyer, J., referred to the mortgagor's right to redeem before the end of the period and to the Privy Council decision in Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (1) and they allowed redemption to be made in view of the provision in the mortgage before them providing for payment by the mortgagor on or before a certain date. In Dronamraju Lakshmi v. Immani Seshayya (6) Devadoss, J., allowed a mortgagor to redeem before the expiry of the term, as an equitable remedy called for in the circumstances of that case.

(4) 23 M. 33; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 418.

(5) 30 Ind. Cas. 370; 29 M. L. J. 86.

In the document before me there are no clear words which permit the mortgagor to pay the whole of the principal on or before the expiry of the mortgage term and to obtain possession of the land. As it is a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to insist on the term which provides for 15 years' enjoyment (see Shephard and Brown's Commentary on s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, page 260 of 7th Edition). The mortgagee under the terms, of this document, could not enforce his rights until the full 15 years were over. There must be mutuality in such an agreement. It is provided that the profit or loss arising from the yield of the mortgage land should be borne by the mortgagee. He may have been unwilling to take a mortgage for less than 15 years, and he may fairly have expected the losses in unfavourable years to be made good by gains in more favourable years. I think that I am bound to follow the decision in Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (1) and the decision of a Bench of this Court in Bir Mohamed Rowther v. Nagoor Rowther (2).

The respondents' Vakil has pointed out that although the cause of action for redemption may not have arisen at the date of the plaint, more than 15 years had elapsed at the date of the hearing at the first and the second appeals. The Subordinate Judge has also relied on this circumstance. Subbaraya Chetty v. Nachiar Ammal (7) a Bench of this Court under special circumstances granted a decree where the cause of action arose subsequent to the date of the suit. That case is inconsistent with the decision in Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Servai (8) where the rule of procedure that a party suing for possession must show that on the date of the suit he was entitled to relief is followed. Suits for possession are exceptions to the general rule. In Doraisami Pillai v. Chinnia Goundan (9) it was held that a suit for redemption was liable to be dismissed on the pleadings in the plaint, and the plaintiff during the pending of the suit obtained a conveyance which cured his want of title and he was allowed to amend his plaint and obtain a decree for redemption. In that case the flaw in the plaintiffs' right to redeem was not that his suit was premature in point of time but that he had not got title from the true owner. The case is not an authority for the proposition that if a suit is premature at the date of institution, a decree can nevertheless be granted. In my opinion the only course where the plaintiff brings his suit before the cause of action arises, is to dismiss the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit upon a proper cause of action.

The second appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit will be dismissed with costs throughout.

THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE, HIGH COURT, MADRAS AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 101—Party aggrieved—Order of Court confirming sale of insolvent's property by Official Assignee—Appeal.

An insolvent has, after adjudication, no legal interest in his estate and has no right to interfere in the realisation of that estate and cannot be treated as aggrieved by any order passed in the course of such realisation.

The insolvent, therefore, has no right of appeal against an order by Court confirming a sale of part of the estate which was originally his and subsequently vested in the Official Assignee.

Sakhawat Ali v. Rada Mohan, 49 Ind. Cas. 816; 41 A. 243, followed.

Ex parte Sheffield, (1879) 10 Ch. D. 434; 40 L. T. 15; 27 W. R. 622 and In re Leadbitter & Harvey, (1879) 10 Ch. D. 388; 48 L. J. Ch. 242; 39 L. T. 286; 27 W. R. 267, relied on.

Observations of Oldfield, J., in Sivasubramania Pillai v. Theethiappa Pillai, 75 Ind. Cas. 572; 45 M. L. J. 166; 18 L. W. 636; (1923) M. W. N. 895; A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 163; 47 M. 120, dissented from.

Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Waller, dated the 4th March 1924, passed in the exercise of its order and issuing judgment of the High Court in Insolvency Petition No. 218 of 1922.

This Original Side Appeal coming on for hearing on the 7th October 1925, upon reading the grounds of appeal, the said order in I. P. No. 218 of 1922 and the material papers in the case and upon hearing Mr. M. S. Venkatarama Iyer, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 4, and Messrs. P. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar and A. Rajagopala Aiyangar, for the Appellant, on the preliminary objection raised by the said Vakil for Respondents Nos. 2 and 4 that the appellant-insolvent has no right to appeal, and Respondents Nos. 1 and 3 not appearing in person or by Pleader the Court (Coutts Trotter, C. J. and Mr. Visvanatha Sastri, J.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

We refer the following question to a Full Bench:—

"Whether the decision in Sivasubramania Pillai v. Theethiappa Pillai (1) is correct or whether the decision in Sakhawat Ali v. Radha Mohan (2) should be followed."

Messrs. P. R. Srinivasa Iyenger and A. Rajagopala Iyenger, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—The question raised here is whether the insolvent has a right of appeal against an order confirming a sale of part of the estate which was originally his and subsequently vested in the Official Assignee, an order which he sought to oppose. The matter was referred to a Full Bench in view of what were represented to be the directly conflicting decision of this Court in Siva Subramania Pillai v. Theethiappa Pillai (1) and of the Allahabad High Court in Sakhawat Ali v. Radha Mohan (2). We observe that the English decisions on the subject were not cited so far as appears from the report of the Madras Court. We have examined those decisions and come to the conclusion that they ought to be followed.

The only ground on which the insolvent's right to appeal can be based is that he is a person aggrieved because his estate having vested in the Official Assignee, he is nevertheless entitled to say that, if all the claims of the creditors who had proved were set aside or discharged, by payment he would have an interest in the surplus which might be left over. The leading English cases, Ex parte Sheffield (3) and In re Leadbitter & Harvey (4) have disposed of this contention on grounds which we think, are unanswerable. The insolvent has no legal interest but has merely a hope of expectation and as James, L. J, pointed out, the mischief of allowing a bankrupt on the contingent chance of his ultimately acquiring title to some surplus which might never be realised to interfere with and embarrass the administration of the estate would be immeasurable. We are of opinion that the insolvent has no right of appeal which will, therefore, stand dismissed. The question referred to us was perhaps not rightly framed, and I say so with more freedom because I drafted it myself. I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment about to be delivered by Krishnan, J., and I see that we can follow the ruling in the case of Sakhawat Ali v. Radha Mohan (2) without necessity of saying that Sivasubramania Pillai v. Theethiappa Pillai (1) was wrongly decided. The right claimed by the insolvent in the latter case was to object to a creditor's proof and that is not directly before us.

Beasley, J.—I concur.

Krishnan, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice that we should follow the view expressed in Sakhawat Ali v. Radha Mohan (2) which is in accordance with the view taken in the English cases cited to us Ex parte Sheffield (3) and In re Leadbeater Harvey (4). As pointed out in those rulings, the insolvent has after adjudication no legal interest in his estate which has vested in the Official Assignee and he had, therefore, no legal right to interfere in the realisation of that estate and he cannot be treated as aggrieved by any order passed in the course of such realisation. It is true that if any surplus remains after the creditors are paid in full, such amount will be paid over to the insolvent and it is also true that if a certain proportion of his debt is paid from his assets, he will be entitled to a discharge. But these are merely expectations as pointed out in the English cases which may or may not be realised. They do not give any legal right to the insolvent to interfere in the realisation of his property which is entirely left to the Official Assignee. The reasoning to the contrary in the judgment of Oldfield, J., in Sivasubramania Pillai v. Theethiappa Pillai (1) cannot be supported. That case itself was, however, one of an appeal by the insolvent against an order admitting proof of a creditor to which he had objected. The question whether the insolvent is a person aggrieved in such circumstances does not arise in the present case and I express no opinion on the point.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 7—Suit for damages against Railway Company—Loss of goods—Failure to put padlocks on waggons—Wilful neglect.

A Railway Company cannot be held guilty of wilful neglect by not putting on padlocks on the waggons immediately on hearing that thefts were frequent between two Railway Sattions on running trains.

Bengal & North Western Railway Co. v. Haji Mutsaddi, 7 Ind. Cas. 160; 7 A. L. J. 833, distinguished.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Gonda, dated the 6th July 1923, preferred against that of the Munsif, Tarabganj, dated the 19th September 1922.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath, for the Appellants.
Mr. G. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A bale of cloth was consigned at the Victoria Terminus Railway Station for delivery at Nawabganj on the B. N. W. Railway. The evidence produced by the G. I. P. Railway Co., consisted of the statements of two officials, a Guard of a goods train and a transhipment clerk posted at Bhusawal Railway Station. The Guard deposed that the seals of the waggon in which this particular bale was contained were intact at the Pichaura Railway Station at 1-33 A. M., but were found to be broken when the train arrived at Bhusawal at 3-25 A. M. According to him the waggon was detached so that its contents may be checked and a watchman re-sealed the doors. Next day at 8 A. M. the transhipment clerk took over the custody of the waggon and checked the contents at 12-45 P. M. when this particular bale was found short. It was argued that the servants of the Railway Company were negligent. The testimony of the two Raliway servants does not give rise to any such conclusion. The transhipment clerk first said that the doors of the waggon were open but afterwards corrected himself and stated that they were not open when he took charge of the waggon. It would not be possible to check the contents at night. The waggon was re-sealed and a watchman deputed to keep watch. There is no reason to suspect that this bale disappeared or was stolen while the waggon stood in the Bhusawal stationyard. The lower Appellate Court was correct in holding that the loss was not due to theft by or to the wilful neglect of the servants of the G. I. P. Railway Company.

The next allegation was that the Railway Administration was guilty of wilful neglect. It appears that at the time of this loss there were frequent thefts on running trains between Pichaura and Bhusawal. It was argued that seals were not sufficient protection under those circumstances and padlocks ought to have been put on waggons. It must, however, be remembered that a large number of padlocks could not suddenly appear as if by magic. Steps had to be taken to supply padlocks for a contingency like this and the Guard stated that the padlocks were subsequently supplied. I do not think that the Company could be held guilty of wilful neglect by not putting on padlocks immediately on hearing that thefts were frequent between two Railway Stations on running trains. The case reported as Bengal & North Western Railway Co. v. Haji Mutsaddi (1) was quoted on behalf of the appellant. There, however, the Subordinate Courts had held the Company to be guilty of wilful neglect and the High Court refused to interfere when it was found that seals instead of padlocks were used to safeguard the contents of the waggons. In the present case the finding is against the appellant and this Court is called upon to reverse it. The considerations, therefore, would be different here from those before the High Court in the case quoted above. No wilful neglect of the Railway Administration is, therefore, proved.

When the appellant has failed to prove wilful neglect, the point is not reached of inquiry whether the loss was occasioned by theft or by robbery from a running train.

It is, therefore, not necessary to inquire whether the word "robbery" in the Risk Note included theft or not.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Execution of decree—Stay of execution—Executing Court staying execution on furnishing surety for interest—Appellate Court subsequently staying execution on payment of security—Effect on previous surety.

Where a judgment-debtor obtains a stay order from the Executing Court pending the decision of appeal on his furnishing a surety for the payment of interest from the date of the decree upto a particular time, an order by the Appellate Court for stay of execution on judgment-debtor's furnishing security for a particular sum puts an end to the future liability for interest of the previous surety from the date of such order.

First appeal against the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in Darkhast No. 508 of 1924.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises an interesting question regarding the liability of persons who pass surety bonds on behalf of appellants who come to this Court asking for a rule for stay of proceedings on what are called the usual terms. On the application by the appellant that the sale of his house in execution of a decree against him might be stayed pending the disposal of an appeal in this Court, it was ordered that the attachment should continue and that on the applicant undertaking not to alienate the property in question and to furnish security to the First Class Subordinate Judge for interest on the decretal amount from the date of decree till end of June 1924, the sale should be stayed until the hearning of the said appeal by this Court, unless the opposite party showed cause why execution by sale of the attached house should not be stayed within one month from the service of notice. Thereafter the present appellant passed a bond whereby he bound himself and his heirs and executors that whatever decree or order finally binding would be passed would be accepted by him and fulfilled. If he neglected to do that, then he the obligor, his heirs and executors, gave a binding to pay the sum up to Rs. 1,100 as might be fixed by the Court in respect of interest from the date of the decree of the Court up to June 1924. On August 9, 1923, the rule came on for argument. An order was made that the sale of the appellant's house should be stayed on the applicant giving security to the extent of Rs. 5,000 and if he failed to give that security, the execution should proceed. That is an entirely different order, and, in our opinion, put an end to the obligation of the present appellant, as he in effect bound himself to pay, if the judgment-debtor made default, such interest as would fall due from the date of the decree till the question, whether the debtor's property should be sold, came before the Court. A date was mentioned, no doubt, in the bond, viz., June 1924, but that date would clearly be subordinate to any order which would be made by the Court in the matter of the stay application. The result must be that the appeal will be allowed to this extent that the surety will only be liable for interest up to August 9, 1923, and not until September 17, 1923, as held by the First Class Subordinate Judge.

The cross-objections will be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 25th May 1925, reversing that of the Second Class Sub-Judge, Amritsar, dated the 15th March 1924.

Mr. Lal Chand Mehra, for the Appellant.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A suit was pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, between Anant Ram and Gauri Mal. During the pendency of the suit, the parties took action under para. 1 of the Second Schedule to the C. P. C. of 1908, and the dispute between them was duly referred to arbitration. An award followed to which objection was taken. The objection was set aside and judgment pronounced according to the award as required by para. 16 (1). A decree followed upon that judgment so pronounced.

Gauri Mal thereupon preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge attacking the judgment pronounced under para. 16 (1). Objection was taken to the hearing of the appeal on the ground, that it was improperly stamped. This objection was given effect to by the Additional District Judge and the appellant was directed to make good the necessary Court-fee. This he refused to do and the appeal was rejected. Gauri Mal has now come up to this Court through Mr. Lal Chand Mehra, and I have heard Mr. Badri Das for the respondent.

It was argued by Mr. Mehra that inasmuch as the order filing the award was appealable under s 104 (f) of the C. P. C., such an appeal would lie with a Court-fee of Re. 1. As a matter of fact there are authorities which lay down that although an appeal under s. 104 (f) is competent notwithstanding the fact that an award though filed has been the basis of a decree in its terms, nevertheless the Court-fee payable on such an appeal would be ad valorem: see in this connection Lala Dharam Das v. Ajudhia Pershad (1) and Hari Mohan Singh v. Kali Prosad Chaliba (2). It is, however, not necessary for me to discuss this matter any further inasmuch as the view taken by the District Judge is correct in this particular case. Mr. Lal Chand Mehra claimed to be entitled to appeal under s. 104 (f), C. P. C. A reference to that section, however, shows that it relates to an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court. In the present case, the arbitration was made under the provisions of para. 1 of the Second Schedule and that being the case there was no order necessary nor was one passed within the meaning of s. 104 (f).

In the present case the proceedings were governed by para. 16, and Mr. Lal Chand has been unable to show me under what law he is entitled to appeal against the judgment pronounced under para. 16. Whether or not an appeal against the decree was competent, the Court-fee, undoubtedly, should have been paid as calculated by the learned District Judge.

This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 12—Set-off—Court-fee not paid—District Judge, power of, in appeal—Document admitted without Court-fee—Party's right to object.

It is open to an Appellate Court to direct a defendant, who has obtained a set-off in the Trial Court without paying Court-fee on his written statement, to pay the Court-fee before allowance of the set-off.

Where once a document, such as an unstamped written statement of a defendant claiming a set-off, has been admitted in the Trial Court without objection, it is not for the plaintiff to say in appeal that the document should be struck off from the record; the Court is entitled to allow the defendant on payment of proper fee, to rely upon the set-off.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 523 of 1924, summarily dismissing the appeal from the decision of the Joint Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 1038 of 1923.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued on a writing to recover Rs. 1,000 with interest at nine per cent. from September 24, 1920. The defendant claimed that, after he executed that writing, there were share dealings between himself and the plaintiff, with the result that the plaintiff became indebted to the defendant to the extent of Rs. 971-14-0. The Judge allowed the defendant to set-off his claim, holding that the plaintiff's claim for interest during the period of two years was improper, and found that nothing was due to the plaintiff, and dismissed the suit.

In appeal the District Judge dealt with the contention of the plaintiff that the set-off was wrongly allowed, as no Court-fees were paid by pointing out that the provisions of the Court Fees Act were not to be made the means of harassing an opponent. He refers to some decision of the Privy Council without giving the exact reference. It is quite true that the objection as to Court-fees should have been taken in the lower Court. But it is open to the District Judge under s. 12 of the Court Fees Act, to direct the defendant to pay the Court-fees on his written statement before the set-off could be allowed. As a matter of fact in a case of this nature, when once a document is admitted by the lower Court, it is not for the plaintiff to say that the document should be struck off from the record; the Court is entitled to allow the defendant, on payment of the proper fee, to rely upon the set-off.

We dismiss the appeal with costs therefore, but direct that the respondent should pay the proper Court-fee on his written statement within a week after the record reaches the lower Court.

Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), s. 1, applicability of —Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 73—Payment made by plaintiff on behalf of defendant—Interest, whether can be allowed.

The Interest Act forbids nothing. It permits the Court to allow interest in certain circumstances, but does not limit the allowance of interest to those circumstances. [p. 648, col. 1.]

It is hard to imagine a case in which the Court is permitted to allow interest by the Interest Act, which it is not expressly permitted to allow by some later Act, so that the Act as it contains nothing prohibitory is now obsolete unless such a case exists. [p. 648, col. 2.]

Where one person makes a payment on behalf of another under the mistaken impression shared by both of them that he is bound to make the payment, he is entitled to recover the amount of the payment from the person on whose behalf it was paid together with interest. [p. 648, col. 1.]

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. F. C. Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The village, in respect of which the decree in this suit orders payment by a co-sharer of the remuneration of a lambardar to the plaintiff-respondent, has been divided into pattis since he was appointed to that office for the whole mahal and no further appointments have been made. The plaintiff, therefore, is not the lambardar of the defendant's patti; when the partition was made he ceased to be the nominal lambardar even of his own patti, though for that patti only he remained so for all practical purposes, as was explained in Ramakrishna Puri v. Tanba (1). He cannot, therefore, claim the remuneration of a lambardar in respect of the defendant's patti.

On his behalf it is urged that the plea of his not being the lambardar was never raised in the Courts below, where it was impliedly admitted that he was, in the plea that he had agreed to forego the remuneration. It was certainly never pleaded that he was not the nominal lambardar of the defendant's patti and of the others that made up the whole mahal, but it was very clearly pleaded that he performed none of the duties of that office and had none of the responsibilities of it in respect of the defendant's patti. The plaintiff is certainly not entitled to any remuneration as lambardar of that patti, even if he could be so entitled in the absence of a fixation of the rate of remuneration by the Deputy Commissioner, which is doubtful.

(1) 71 Ind. Cas. 777; 19 N. L. R. 59; A. I. R. 1923 Nag. 153; 6 N. L. J. 85.

It is admitted for the defendant-appellant that he is bound to re-pay to the plaintiff the sums the latter paid on his behalf, although he paid them under the mistaken impression, shared by the defendant, that he was bound to do so as lambardar. It is, however, contended that no interest should have been awarded for the period before the suit, and reliance is placed on the provisions of the Interest Act of 1839 as explained by the Madras High Court in Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera Levvai Rowthen (2).

The learned Judges held in that case that though s. 73 of the Contract Act, especially in the light of illustration (n) attached to it, undoubtedly applies to contracts or obligations resembling those created by contract to pay money, yet "to construe the section as giving a right to interest even in those cases in which it could not be awarded according to the provisions of Act XXXII of 1839, would be to hold that the latter enactment was virtually repealed by the former", which is "totally opposed to the maxim generalia specialibus non derogant."

In respect for the learned Judges I have made a very anxious examination and comparison of the single section of the Interest Act and s. 73 of the Contract Act, but I can find no conflict of any kind between them. If there were any conflict, then I would say that at least an equally possible interpretation of the Latin maxim mentioned is that the very general provisions of the Interest Act cannot detract from the special provision made in s. 73 of the Contract Act. The Interest Act forbids nothing. It permits the Court to allow interest in certain circumstances, but does not limit the allowance of interest to those circumstances; indeed it expressly provides in its concluding words "that interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is not payable by law".

The ruling was followed by the same Court without comment and apparently on the principle of stare decisis in Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (3) but in the Bombay High Court Chandavarkar and Pratt, JJ., mentioned it, in Saunadanappa v. Shivbasawa (4) and took the contrary view, for reasons with which I am in respectful agreement. I find it hard to imagine a case in which the Court is permitted to allow interest by Act XXXII of 1839 which it is not expressly permitted to allow by some later Act, so that, as it contains nothing prohibitory, it is now obsolete unless such a case exists.

The only other contention raised for the appellant is that he ought not in any case to be made to pay interest on a sum of Rs. 30 which he sent to the respondent by money order on the 25th of February 1920, five days after it was due to be paid into the treasury. It appears that this money order was taken to the respondent's house, but he was away at that time, and the money was returned to the appellant by the Post Office. In the circumstances the appellant could only assume that the respondent had refused to accept the money as he has done not infrequently. The respondent, on the other hand, knew that the money had been brought to his house in his absence and returned in circumstances which were bound to lead the appellant to believe that he had refused to accept it, but he did nothing to correct that impression. I think, therefore, that he was not entitled to interest on the amount, nor to his costs in respect of it.

In the result then there will be a reduction in the amount decreed of Rs. 86-4 for the lambardar's remuneration, on which no interest was allowed, and of Rs. 8-5-3 as the interest on the sum of Rs. 30 which has been mentioned, making a total of Rs. 94-9 3. It has already been held that the plaintiff is not to get his costs in respect of a further sum of Rs. 30. The sum claimed in the lower Courts was Rs. 358 11-6. The total costs in those Courts will, therefore, be paid in the proportion of one by the plaintiff and three by the defendant. In this Court the defendant claimed a reduction of Rs. 135 in the decretal amount and the costs. The reduction granted is one of Rs 94-9-3 and the costs in respect of the claim for Rs. 30, which amount to a couple of annas more than Rs. 5. Costs in this Court will, therefore, be paid in the proportion of one by the appellant and three by the respondent.

Bombay Regulation XVI of 1827, s. 20, construction of—Grantee from Deshpande, alienation by—Restriction.

Section 20 of the Bombay Regulation XVI of 1827 must be strictly construed. The section covers the case of an alienation of watan lands by an incumbent of the hereditary office of Deshpande and not an alienation by any grantee of that incumbent. [p. 650, col. 1.]

Therefore, sale of a land forming part of a Deshpande watan granted by the Deshpande thereof to a mutalik as remuneration for services as a mutalik, in execution of a decree against the mutalik, is permissible.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class, Subordinate Judge at Dharwar, in Civil Suit No. 368 of 1920.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J.—The main facts underlying this litigation are as follows :—

The Deshpande of the Karadgi Mahal granted certain lands to the plaintiffs' ancestor, on condition that he should enjoy the same as remuneration for his services as a mutalik (i. e., deputy) of the Deshpande. The lands came into the possession of Narso Venkaji, who was the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 4, 5 and 8, and in execution of a decree passed against Narso the lands were sold to one Bashetappa at a Court auction in 1869. Bashetappa sold the lands to one Mahantappa, who in turn sold them to Balvant, the father of the defendant No. 4. The sale to Bashetappa was subject to a mortgage, and in 1881 the father of defendant No. 3 brought a suit against the mortgagees in possession of the lands. He obtained a decree, in execution of which he got possession of the lands in suit, and the defendants have been in possession ever since. Narso died on September 30, 1916, and the plaintiffs sued to recover the lands on the allegation that the alienation of the lands was only valid for Narso's lifetime, so that upon his death they became entitled to them.

The lower Court has held that the plaint lands were service watan lands of the Deshpandes of Mahal Karadgi, that the plaintiffs are the hereditary mutaliks of these Deshpandes, that the plaint lands were assigned to the plaintiffs' family for the performance of the duties of this mutalikship, and that the plaintiffs are watandars in respect of those lands. But, on the other hand, it has held that Narso was the absolute owner of these lands in 1869; and that the Court sale in that year was a valid sale of such absolute ownership. The learned First Class Subordinate Judge holds that, in the circumstances, the sale is not affected by s. 20 of Regulation XVI of 1827, and that accordingly the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the lands. He dismissed their suit with costs.

The main question, therefore, in this appeal is whether the alienation of 1869 is one which falls within the prohibition contained is s. 20 of the Regulation of 1827. This section must be read with the preceding s. 19, which prescribes that the Collector shall keep a book recording the lands and allowances attached to hereditary District or village offices, and that record shall specify the allowances, whether from land, ready money, fees or other perquisites, etc., received for such offices. Then s. 20. clause first, says:—

"The allowances so derived by a sole proprietor or occupant of an hereditary District or village revenue office, shall in future be considered strictly as the official remuneration of the person filling the office, and as such shall not be subject to alienation by any incumbent."

It has been held by this Court in Ravlojirav v. Balvantrav Venkatesh (1) and by the Privy Council in Padapa v. Swamirao

(1) 5 B. 437; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 288,

Shrinivas (2) that an alienation which contravenes these provisions is void ab initio as against the heir of the alienor. But the question on which the appellant has to satisfy us is that these lands are allowances attached to the office of mutalik, which come within the benefit of the prohibition against alienation. On this point I find no error in the reasoning of the Subordinate Judge, who has discussed the question after hearing full arguments upon it. It is quite clear that the Collector's books have all along shown these lands not as part of the allowance attached to the mutalikship, but as an allowance attached to the office of Deshpande. This is, for instance, shown by the statement in the judgment of 1842, Ex. 77, that these lands were Chavrat lands of Deshpande. Again in the sale certificate of 1869 the lands are described as standing in the khata of the Deshpandes Rangrao and Shamrao. In the judgment in the suit of 1870, Ex. 80, it is stated that the land in suit is one of the Deshpandes' inam lands and has been entered in the account in their names. The Alienation Register under the Bombay Land Revenue Code similarly shows it as part of the Deshpande land, while the sanad given to the plaintiffs is only in respect of a cash allowance and shows no service lands as attached to the office of mutalik Deshpande. On the other hand, the lands do appear in the sanad which has been issued to the Deshpande. Accordingly, it seems to me, that s. 20 only covers the case of an alienation of these lands by an incumbent of the hereditary office of Deshpande, and not an alienation by any grantee of that incumbent. Being a section which is opposed to the ordinary right of the subject to transfer lands without restriction, it must be construed strictly, and I think the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that it does not cover the alienation of 1869. Nor do I think that assistance is given to the plaintiffs by the provisions of Bombay Act III of 1874. First of all; those provisions, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, cannot have retrospective operation so as to affect an alienation made prior to the Act coming into force, unless there is some clear provision in the Act to the contrary. There is nothing in that Act, which operates to bring the case under the terms of s. 5 (1) (a) of the Act, and no authority for holding that s. 5 (1) (a) applies has been cited to us. The Act clearly differentiates between alienations prior to the date of the Act coming into force and alienations subsequent to that date. Thus s. 10 does not render it obligatory on the Collector to declare an alienation made prior to the Act's commencement null and void whereas under s. 11 he is required in the case of an alienation made after the Act has come into force to declare such alienation null and void. Action has been taken accordingly in this case by the Revenue Authorities who have, on the ground that the alienation was prior to the Act coming into force, refused to interfere. There certainly seems no proper ground for the Civil Courts to take a different view, having regard to the provisions of s. 20 of the Regulation, to which I have already referred.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Madgavkar, J.—I agree. The appellants are watandars but mutalik watandars under the Deshpande watandars. The land in suit is watan land appertaining not to the mutalik watan but to the Deshpande watan. The incumbent within the meaning of s. 20 of the Regulation XVI of 1827 is the Deshpande and not the mutalik, as is clear from the sanad of 1864. From the sanad of 1864 to the mutalik Deshpande and the view of the Collector and Commissioner from 1883 onwards, it follows that whether it is or is not open to a Deshpande to question the alienation by his predecessor, a Despande watandar in respect of this land it is not so open to the appellants, because they are watandars of a watan other than the one to which these lands appertain, and because they obtained the grant of these lands from the Deshpande.

The appeal, in my opinion, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

In a suit for rendition of accounts, the option or discretion of the plaintiff in fixing his valuation is not confined to those cases where the value of the relief cannot be ascertained at the time the plaint is presented.

Second appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 1st July 1925, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Amritsar, dated the 27th January 1925.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B., and Lala Har Prashad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Pandit Rikhi Kesh of Amritsar brought a suit against Mela Ram, his brother, for rendition of accounts, and valued his relief at Rs. 100. The defendant Mela Ram objected that the suit did not lie in this form and the Trial Court held that this was so, and passed an order to the effect that the plaint be returned for amendment. On appeal the Senior Subordinate Judge held that the suit for rendition of accounts did lie, and to this extent he accepted the appeal. He further held, however, that the valuation should have been Rs. 3,800 on the strength of an application made in a partition suit pending at the time between the same parties, and he directed the stamp to be made up to this figure.

From this order an appeal has been presented and Counsel relies on Barru v. Lachhman (1) and Manna Lal v. Samandu (2). The wording of the section is perfectly clear and I do not think there is any force in the contention on the other side that the option or discretion of the plaintiff in fixing his valuation is confined to those cases where the value of the relief cannot be ascertained at the time the plaint is presented, though possibly combined with other circumstances the fact that such relief can be ascertained might be a reason for holding that the suit for accounts does not lie. The decision here, against which no appeal has been presented, is that the suit does lie in this form, and, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to exercise the privilege of valuing his relief at any figure he chooses, and the stamp will have to be made up subsequently if relief of greater value be granted to him.

I accept the appeal and direct that this suit proceed on the original stamp. The costs of the appellant will be paid by the respondent.

Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874), ss. 4, 5—Mortgagee or lessee from watandar, whether watandar—Alienation of watan land—Period of operation.

Legal possession within the lifetime of the mortgagor or lessor watandar is clearly not equivalent to the legal acquisition of title to the land which is contemplated in the definition of watandar. Therefore, a mortgagee or lessee from a watandar is not himself a watandar. [p. 652, col. 1.]

An alienation of a watan land remains in force only during the natural life of the alienor. [p. 652, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Satara, in Appeal No. 18 of 1921, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Islampur, in Civil Suit No. 687 of 1918.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. Velinker, (with him Mr. K. N. Koyajee), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Madgavkar, J.—The question in this case is whether the plaintiff-appellant Ganpatrao is entitled to obtain possession of Survey No. 140, which is admittedly watan land, from the defendants-respondents. That survey number was mortgaged by his grandfather Vithalrav to the predecessor-in-title of the respondents. In the redemption suit of 1883, the Civil Court ordered Vithalrav to redeem within a certain period. Vithalrav failed to do so, and he forfeited his right to redeem. He then applied to the Deputy Collector for restoration of the lands and succeeded. In appeal by the mortgagee-decree-holder the order was set aside by the Collector and the mortgagee re-instated. On the death of Vithalrav, the appellant's father Bhavanrao passed a permanent lease in favour of the respondents, for three survey numbers. The respondents' father obtained possession of one survey number only—No. 140. The appellant accordingly sues for possession of No 140 and a declaration in respect of the other two Survey Nos. 220 and 225.

The two main issues when the parties went to trial were: firstly, whether the lease was operative after the life of Bhavanrao, and secondly, whether the suit was barred by limitation. The appellants succeeded on both the issues in the Trial Court and the respondents in first appeal.

The first issue depends on whether the respondents are watandars of the same watan within the meaning of s. 5 of the Hereditary Offices Act III of 1874. It is argued for the appellant that they are not. It is contended for the respondents that they are holding watan property, legally acquired as laid down in the definition of watandar in s. 4 of the Act by reason of the order of the Civil Court and of the Collector, which, it is said, binds the heirs of the mortgagor.

With that contention we cannot agree. The decree of the Civil Court could not, by reason of s. 5 of the Act, operate beyond the lifetime of Vithalrav. The same may be said of the order of the Collector, and of the fact that on the death of Vithalrav, his son Bhavanrav chose not to challenge the respondents' possession under s. 5 but created a permanent grant. The lease to the respondents cannot affect the rights of the present appellant to set aside his father's lease after his father's death. Legal possession within the lifetime of the mortgagor or lessor watandar is clearly not equivalent to the legal acquisition of title to the land, which is contemplated in the definition of "watandar" in s. 4. We, therefore, agree with the conclusion of the Trial Court, though not with its reasoning, that the respondents are not persons holding watan property legally acquired. They are not, therefore, watandars of the watan within the meaning of s. 5. No question of taksim or share arises and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the law in that respect. It follows that the appellant is entitled to the possession of Survey No. 140. The Trial Court has held that he has failed to prove any cause of action as regards Survey Nos. 220 and 225 and refused the injunction.

On the question of adverse possession and limitation, the respondents seek to challenge the correctness of the date of the death of the appellant's father. They do not, however, set up any alternative date. The lower Courts held on the meagre evidence before them that the appellant's date was correct. The respondents' possession under the lease by Bhavanrao in the lifetime of Bhavanrao cannot be said to be adverse to the appellant nor their possession in the lifetime of appellant's grandfather Vithalrav adverse to the mortgagor prior to the date of redemption or to the order of the Collector.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal should succeed, the order of the lower Appellate Court be set aside, and the order of the Trial Court restored, with costs throughout against the respondents.

Fawcett, J.—I agree. As to the point of limitation, the lower Appellate Court is clearly wrong in holding that there had been adverse possession, which would bar the plaintiff's suit. As authority, reference may be made to the recent Privy Council case of Madhavrao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venkatesh Desphande (1). On the main question the first thing to notice is that cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 5 clearly applies to the present case. Under sub-s. (2) of that section this cl. (a) applies to a watan in respect of which a service commutation settlement has been effected, unless the right of alienating the watan without the sanction of Government has been conferred upon the watandars by the terms of such settlement. The Gordon Settlement did not confer any such right of alienation, as has been held in Appaji v. Kashav (2) and other cases including Balku Sidu Kumbhar v. Vyankatesh Vaman Deshpande (3). Therefore, we think, there is a direct prohibition against the alienation, which is relied upon by the defendants as constituting them watandars of the same watan. The prohibition is as to any transfer of interest beyond the natural life of the alienor. The Civil Court's decree is, in the circumstances, one which is liable to be set aside, so far as it might otherwise effect an alienation beyond Vithalrav's lifetime. It is hardly necessary to cite authorities on this point, but I may refer to Shivram Narsingrao v. Mahadev Narayan (4), where watan land was sold in execution of a decree and bought by the defendant, and it was held that he took merely the right, title and interest, of his judgment-debtor, and on the death of the latter his right under the Court sale ceased. So here, any rights of the defendants, which they had under the decree, must be deemed to have ceased upon Vithalrav's death. As to the Collector's order, that order merely decided that the alienation was not null and void ab initio, as had been held by the Deputy Collector. It cannot properly be extended to a declaration that the alienation would be valid after Vithalrav's death; and even if the order had meant this it would be directly against the enactment contained in s. 5 (1) (a). Consequently, I think, it is clear that the defendants are not persons, who can be held to have "legally acquired" this watan property, within the meaning of definition of watandar. It is not necessary to say what class of cases might be covered by this part of the definition of "watandars"; but I may instance of the case of a person to whom an alienation is made with the sanction of Government.

SAHAI SINGH and others—Plaintiffs—Appellants
SURAJPAL SINGH—Defendant—Respondent.

Custom—Succession—Wajib-ul-arz, construction of—Widow succeeding as malik kamil—Absolute estate—Use of future tense in recording of custom—Interpretation.

The words "malik kamil" convey the idea of absolute ownership.

Where the widow of a childless proprietor succeeds to him as malik kamil as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz she inherits an absolute estate, particularly where no line of devolution of the estate after the death of the widow is indicated in the entry.

Sartaj Koer v. Mahadeo Bux, 92 Ind. Cas. 657, followed.

Prima facie an entry in a wajib-ul-arz is intended to be a record of custom and not a record of the expression of wishes of the proprietors of the village, and use of the future tense does not in any sense negative the existence of the custom but it only denotes that the pre-existing custom shall be applicable to cases which arise thereafter.

Second appeal against the decree and judgment of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 7th April 1925, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 31st May 1924.

Mr. Ram Bharose Lal for Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Radha Krishna Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiffs' appeal in a suit for possession of certain shares in four villages, in a house and for the recovery of Rs. 250 as the price of certain ornaments. The suit has failed in both the lower Courts except as to Rs. 40 as the price of some ornaments.

Sahai Singh plaintiff No. 1 claimed title to a half share in the villages and in the house as the nearest reversioner with the defendant, Surajpal Singh, to the estate of one Bakhtawar Singh, the succession to which opened on the death of Musammat Gulab Kuar in November 1922. Musammat Gulab Kuar was the widow of Bakhtawar Singh. There were originally two other plaintiffs to the suit, Nageshar Singh and Chhatar Pal Singh. They were the purchasers of a portion of the interests of Sahai Singh plaintiff No. 1. Nageshar Singh died after the decree of the lower Appellate Court. His five sons and Sahai Singh and Chhatarpal Singh are the appellants in this Court.

In proof of the relationship of Sahai Singh plaintiff and Surajpal Singh defendant with Bakhtawar Singh a pedigree was produced. This was admitted. The chief defence to the suit, however, was that under a family custom Musammat Gulab Kuar held her husband's estate as an absolute proprietor and that in the exercise of her powers as such she had made a gift of the zemindari shares and of the house in favour of the defendant, Surajpal Singh, so far back as the year 1884 and the defendant had been in possession thereof since. Both the Courts below have upheld the plea of custom and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on that ground in respect of the immoveable property.

Apart from other evidence the defendant relied upon four wajib-ul-araez of the four villages in suit in proof of the plea of custom. The entry as to custom in each of these wajib-ul-araez is to my mind perfectly clear. It invests the widow of a deceased childless proprietor with complete ownership of the estate of her deceased husband. The words used are "malik kamil" and no line of devolution of the estate after the death of the widow is indicated in the entry. The interpretation which the Courts below have placed on the entry and with which I agree is wholly covered by a recent decision of this Court in the case of Sartaj Koer v. Mahadeo Bux (1) to which I was a party, and I have heard nothing at the hearing of this appeal which would induce me to interpret the present wajib-ul-araez in any different sense.

Three of the wajib-ul-araez used future tense in respect of the devolution and distribution of the estate of a deceased proprietor. On this ground the learned Pleader for the appellants argues that the entry connotes the wishes of the proprietors to be observed in future and is not a record of a pre existing custom. I am unable to accept this argument as a sound argument. The entry was prima facie intended to be a record of custom and not a record of the expression of wishes of the proprietors of the village. The use of the future tense does not in any sense negative the existence of the custom but it only denotes that the pre-existing custom shall be applicable to cases which arise thereafter. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

SEVADASJI CHANDRADASJI—APPELLANT

versus

THE MUNICIPAL CORPORATION FOR THE CITY OF BOMBAY—RESPONDENT.

Bombay High Court Original Side Rules, r. 736—Appeal—Security for costs, additional, when may be demanded.

Additional security for the costs of the respondent may be required from an appellant in an exceptional case where it appears that the appellant has failed to pay the costs incurred by the respondent at the trial, that he is not possessed of sufficient funds out of which the costs can be recovered and that he has not been able to make the necessary deposit with his attorneys for advances for costs.

FACTS.—The plaintiff was the mohant of a certain temple in Bombay. The defendant had a tank lying close to the temple filled up in 1906, and began to enclose a wall round the site in 1923. The plaintiff brought a suit claiming the land for the temple and sought for an injunction and damages against defendant. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court. The plaintiff appealed from the decree, but he being unable to make necessary deposit for advances for costs, his attorneys got themselves discharged. The defendant took out a notice calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why he should not be ordered to give security for costs of the original suit and appeal alleging that the plaintiff was a sadhu and a celebate who usually live by begging and have not funds and that they would be unable to realise costs from the defendant. The plaintiff admitted that he was a sadhu and a celebate but denied that he had no funds, that he was the manager of a temple which had good income from the offerings of its followers.

Mr. Kania, for the Appellant.

Mr. Coltman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that this is an exceptional case such as is contemplated in the judgment in Ahmad v. Shaik Essa (1).

There will be an order on the motion that the appellant should deposit within one month security to the extent of Rs. 5,000, in addition to the security already deposited for the respondent's costs. Costs will be costs in the appeal.

Z. K. Order accordingly.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52—Lis pendens—Applicability to surrenders of tenancy holdings—Specific performance—Agreement to surrender—C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), s. 12—Occupancy holding—Transfer to distant heirs—Legality.

A surrender of tenancy holding during the pendency of suit for possession by a purchaser is void against him. An agreement to surrender tenancy land at some future time cannot be specifically enforced. [p. 655, col. 2.]

Under s. 12 of the C. P. Tenancy Act an occupancy tenant is entitled to transfer his holding to any distant heir even during the lifetime of other nearer heirs, provided the transferee is a person to whom the right is likely to go by inheritance to the transferring tenant in the absence of any nearer heirs entitled to succeed under the Tenancy Act. [p. 656, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decision of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 205 of 1922, dated the 2nd February 1923.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. C. Dutt Choudhary, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant purchased an occupancy holding of his cousins Ramdayal and Jadu by a registered sale-deed dated 10th April 1922 (Ex. P-4). Subsequent to this sale the vendor executed a registered surrender-deed dated 10th July 1922 (Ex. D-2) in respect of the field in favour of the defendant-respondent Bodhan malguzar, as a prior surrender deed dated 28th February 1921 (Ex. D-1) was unregistered and could not operate as against the land.

Mohan instituted the present suit on 26th February 1922 against the malguzar for possession, and obtained a decree in the first Court, on the ground that the unregistered surrender Ex. D-1 was inoperative, and the subsequent surrender though evidenced by a registered-deed Ex. D-2 was made at a time when the surrendering tenants no longer had any title to the land, and that the plaintiff's title on the basis of the registered sale-deed Ex. P-4 held good and was enforceable. The defendant appealed to the District Judge, Raipur, who held that the sale to plaintiff was in contravention of the provisions of s. 12 of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920 and that his sale-deed Ex. P-4 was not validly registered and he had no cause of action against the defendant who held possession under a valid surrender dated 10th July 1922 although he had originally taken possession of the land under the unregistered surrender deed dated the 28th February 1921, which being unregistered was invalid in view of the imperative provisions of s. 89 (2) of the new Tenancy Act of 1920. In this view of the case the plaintiff's claim was dismissed with costs. The plaintiff, therefore, appeals contending that his transfer was valid under the new Tenancy Act.

This suit was instituted on 26th February 1922, whereas the malguzar's registered surrender-deed is dated 10th July 1922, i.e., it was executed during the pendency of the suit. Such a surrender is void on the principle underlying the doctrine of lis pendens. It was of no effect as against the plaintiff for the simple reason that the defendant could not defeat the suit by the acquisition of a new right during its pendency, when his rights were non-existent at the date of the suit. It was contended by the respondent that if his title under Ex. D-2 failed, he could resist the plaintiff's claim and maintain his own possession apart from the title derived under his registered surrender-deed Ex. D-2, on the basis of the unregistered surrender-deed Ex. D-1 as he could treat it as an agreement to surrender and defeat the suit for ejectment. But in view of the rulings in Seth Umedsingh v. Tarachand (1) and Balideo v. Sania (2) an agreement to surrender tenancy land at some future time could not be specifically enforced, and this position would be untenable and the surrender-deed Ex. D-1 could not serve as an answer to the suit. The defence based on the surrender-deeds dated 28th February 1921 and 10th July 1922 (Exs. D-1 and D-2), therefore, fails.

The lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the plaintiff's sale-deed Ex. P-4 contravened the provisions of s. 12 of the new Tenancy Act of 1920, and that consequently its registration was void under s. 12, cl. (4) thereof. The sole question now left to be considered is whether s. 12 permits a transfer in favour of the next heir only as the lower Appellate Court seems to think, or even a distant heir can become a transferee under sub-cl. (ii) of sub-s. (1) of the said section. The words of s. 12 (1) (ii) so far as they are relevant to this case are as follows:—

(1) 9 C. P. L. R. 83.

"An occupancy tenant may transfer... any right in his holding to any......person who, if he survived the tenant without nearer heirs, would inherit his right."

What I have to see is, is plaintiff a person who if he survived the transferring tenants without nearer heirs would inherit their right, and is the transfer in his favour valid and the registration of his sale-deed also valid? If he is not, it follows that the transfer cannot but be in contravention of s. 12 of the Act, and the document would also necessarily contravene the said section.

I may mention here that in s. 6 (1) (a) also of the said Act which deals with the absolute occupancy tenant's right to transfer his holding to his possible heirs similar words are to be found. There was a debate in the Legislative Counsel over an amendment moved by the Hon'ble Mr. M. K. Golwalkar to the above clause in s. 6, the amendment was to the following effect:—

"He may transfer to any person who will be entitled to inherit the right in the holding if he then died."

Mr. Golwalkar meant by this amendment to give to the absolute occupancy tenant a right to transfer his holding only to the next heir and not to a distant heir. The Hon'ble R. B. N. K. Kelkar and the Hon'ble Mr. H. A. Crump pointed out that the intention was not to curtail but to enlarge the right of transfer so as to make it possible for the tenant to transfer his holding or any right therein to any person who might be entitled to inherit as an heir under the new Tenancy Act and not to the nearest heirs only. The amendment of Mr. Golwalkar was put to vote and lost. It follows from this that the intention of the Legislature was to clothe an occupancy tenant with a power to transfer his right in the holding to any distant heir even during the lifetime of other nearer heirs provided the transferee is a person to whom the right is likely to go by inheritance to the transferring tenant, in the absence of nearer heirs entitled to succeed under the new Tenancy Act.

These very words used in s. 47 (1) of the old Tenancy Act of 1898 had been interpreted by the Revenue Authorities as upholding the right of a distant heir to apply to be placed in possession of the holding under that section, even when nearer heirs were in existence. In the revenue-case of Basahu v. Nilkanth (3) a distant heir was placed in possession of the holding as the nearer heirs had not expressed their desire to take up the holding. Even under the new Tenancy Act of 1920, a case has gone up to the Court of the Revenue Member, Central Provinces and Berar, in which these very words as used in s. 12 (1) (ii) of the new Tenancy Act had been interpreted as supporting a transfer in favour of a distant heir; the Revenue Member held that it was sufficiently clear from the perusal of the two Acts (Tenancy Acts of 1898 and of 1920), that in using the words 'without nearer heirs' in the said section it was intended to give to an occupancy tenant a wider right of transfer, and that this intention was made absolutely clear by the remarks of the Hon'ble Mr. Crump when the bill was passing through the Council: Gajanan v. Jaideo & Harba (4). For all these reasons I hold that the view taken by the District Judge that a sale by an occupancy tenant to a distant heir is in contravention of s. 12 (1) (ii), C. P. Tenancy Act, is incorrect and that the registration of such a sale-deed does not contravene the provisions of that section merely because the transfer is not in favour of the next heir.

I, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court and direct that the plaintiff's costs be paid by the defendant who will bear his own throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—A partition decree was passed in Suit No. 306 of 1911 on April 8, 1914. By that decree it was declared that plaintiff along with defendants Nos. 4 and 5 was entitled to one-sixth share in the whole of the property at Gokaran, other than the house—site situate in Survey No. 27, to, one sixth share in Survey Nos. 1 and 43 in addition to Survey Nos. 51 and 54, to one acre in Survey No. 52 and two acres and two gunthas in Survey No. 36 all situate in the village of Kadoked. The lands were to be got partitioned through the Collector, and the house was to be got partitioned through the Commissioner.

The Collector endeavoured to carry out the terms of the decree, but he seems to have found some difficulty in doing so, with the result that he has not followed the direction in the decree. For instance, he allowed the plaintiffs four acres and twelve gunthas in Survey No. 1 in Kadekod, although the whole area was five acres and one guntha and plaintiffs were held to be entitled to one-sixth only.

We can only gather that the Collector was reading the decree together with the judgment, and thought that the judgment was right and that the decree was wrong.

The present appellants, defendants Nos. 28 to 30 in the Trial Court raised objections, and asked the Subordinate Judge to re-open the partition. An objection was taken that once the Collector had effected a partition the Court could not send the case back to him for re-partition. But it seems to me that the case referred to, Bhimangauda Konapgauda Patil v. Hanmant Rangappa Patil (1) merely decided that if the Collector carries out the terms of the decree and divides the property, a party who is not satisfied with the division cannot ask the Court to interfere with the partition effected by the Collector. But if the Collector disregards the terms of the decree and divides the property in contravention of its terms, clearly the Court is entitled to interfere. We think then that the Subordinate Judge was right in referring the case back to the Collector to partition the property in accordance with the terms of the decree. It may be that the decree does not conform to the judgment. If that is the case, it is very strange that although the decree was passed in 1914, and although an appeal was filed against that decree, it should not have been discovered until the present time that corrections were required in the decree. At present we have no application before us to amend the decree, and we can only lay it down as a correct principle that the Collector, when asked to partition lands in accordance with a decree, must follow the terms of the decree, and he is not at liberty to read the decree together with judgment so that he partitions the lands in a manner which is not contemplated by the decree We allow the appeal and restore the decision of the Subordinate Judge with costs throughout.

NANURAM PODDAR—DEFENDANT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Part-payment—Payment sent through messenger by agent of debtor—Person making payment, who is.

Where an agent of the debtor sends a sum of money through a messenger to the creditor with a slip signed by himself asking that the sum be credited to the debtor, the payment made is by the agent within the meaning of s. 20, Limitation Act. [p. 658, col. 2.]

Messrs. S.N. Banerjee and R.N. Banerjee, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. B. Basu, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought to recover money lent. The munim gomastha of the plaintiff firm gave evidence in support of the claim, but no evidence was adduced by the defendant in rebuttal. I am satisfied that the sums claimed as having been lent by the plaintiffs to the defendant were lent as alleged. The claim, however, is barred by limitation unless a payment of Rs. 1,000 alleged to have been made on behalf of the defendant on the 3rd October 1921 amounts to a part-payment within s. 20 of the Limitation Act, 1908, of the moneys due by the defendant to the plaintiffs in respect of the sums which had been lent. The munim gomastha of the plaintiffs stated that one Naitram Jajodia, who was a friend and purported to act as the agent of the defendant, sent this sum of Rs. 1,000 by a messenger who handed the money to the plaintiffs, and at the same time delivered to the plaintiffs a slip in the following form:—

"To Ramkumar Sewchand Roy,

"Please accept compliments of Naitramjee. I send one piece note for Rs. 1,000 through my man. Please credit same to Nanuramjee Poddar, Miti Aswin Sudi, 2nd, Sambat 1978."

The munim gomastha further stated that this slip was in the handwriting of Naitram and that after the money had been paid he had several interviews with the defendant who enquired on each occasion if the Rs. 1,000 which he had sent had been paid and asked for a statement showing the state of the account for money lent to him by the plaintiffs. Having regard to the evidence I come to the conclusion that this sum of Rs. 1,000 was paid by Naitram on behalf of Nanuram to be placed to the credit of the debt for moneys lent to, and owing by, the defendant, and that Naitram was duly authorised by the defendant to make this payment. In these circumstances if the slip on which the fact of payment is stated in the handwriting of Naitram can be said to be in the handwriting of "the person making the payment", then, in my opinion, the plaintiffs' suit is not barred. I am clearly of opinion that Naitram was the person who made the payment within s. 20 of the Limitation Act. The intention of the Legislature in enacting s. 20 of the Limitation Act appears to have been that a debtor should not be bound by the payment of part of the debt unless in substance, though perhaps made the payment has stated in that such payment had been made. Now, who "makes the payment" within s. 20? Is it the man who physically hands over the money, which apparently was the view held by the Bombay High Court in Joshi Bhaishankar v. Bai Parvati (1)? In my opinion that need not necessarily be the case. For instance, where a duly authorised agent sends a cheque or notes by post the person actually making the payment and physically handing over the notes or the cheque is the postman, or again, the money may have been sent by a duly authorised agent through peon, and in that case it is the peon who physically hands over the money. But, in my opinion, neither the peon nor the postman "makes the payment" within s. 20 of the Limitation Act, for the postman or the peon is merely a conduit pipe through which the money passes to the creditor, the duly authorised agent who sent the notes or cheque being regarded as the person who made the payment. That appears to me to be the clear meaning of s. 20 of the Limitation Act; Sarajubala Debi v. Saradanath Bhattacharjee (2).

In my opinion, therefore, the suit is not barred by limitation, and there will be a decree for the plaintiffs for Rs. 3,172-3-0. Interest on judgment at 6 per cent. Costs on scale No. 2.

An alienation by an agriculturist must comply with the provisions of s. 63-A, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, whether the alienation is effected by him personally or through a person holding his power-of-attorney. [p. 659, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Assistant Judge, A. P., at Satara, in Appeal No. 439 of 1923, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge at Islampur, in Civil Suit No. 255 of 1922.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the plaint property alleging that it belonged to one Dadu Govinda who took Rs. 500 from the plaintiff and sold it to him on June 12, 1920. Plaintiff alleged that he got possession according to the terms of the deed but defendant thereafter wrongfully deprived him of possession. With regard to possession both Courts have found that the plaintiff could not get possession, although he got a sale-deed in his favour. Being out of possession then he must rely upon the title which he sets up under his sale-deed.

Now Dadu Govinda did not execute the sale-deed himself. At that time he had been found guilty of the offence of murder and had been sentenced to death. In order to raise money to enable him to appeal against the sentence of death to the High Court, he, while in Satara Jail, gave a power-of attorney to his mother to sell his property. That power-of-attorney was cancelled and he gave a fresh power-of-attorney to one Tukaram while he was in Yervada Jail. This power authorised Tukaram to sell the plaint land, if required. Accordingly, Tukaram sold the land to plaintiff for Rs. 500. Eventually the sentence of death was commuted by the High Court to transportation for life.

The defendant, the mother of the convict, challenges the sale-deed as being invalid under ss. 57 and 63-A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. It does not appear that s. 57 has any application, but under s. 63A :—

"When an agriculturist intends to execute any instrument required by s. 17 of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, (it should now be 1908) to be registered under that Act, he shall appear before the Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district the whole or some portion of the property to which the instrument is to relate is situate, and the Sub-Registrar shall write the instrument, or cause it to be written, and require it to be executed, and attest it and, if the executant is unable to read the instrument, cause it to be further attested, and otherwise act in accordance with the procedure prescribed for a Village-Registrar by ss. 57 and 59 of this Act, and shall then register the instrument in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1877."

By sub-cl. (2) :—

"An instrument to which sub-s. (1) applies shall not be effectual for any purpose referred to in s. 49 of the Act last-mentioned unless it has been written, executed and attested in the manner provided in that sub-section."

The Trial Court held that by virtue of s. 63A an agriculturist, who wants to execute a document which requires registration, has himself to appear before the Sub-Registrar. He is not allowed to execute a document through an agent. Accordingly he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

In appeal the learned District Judge set aside that order and decreed the plaintiff's claim. It is difficult to follow the somewhat involved argument of the Judge, but it seems to me that s. 63A was enacted in order to provide protection to agriculturists intending to execute an instrument required by s. 17 of the Indian Registration Act to be registered. If it had been intended that this section should not apply in the case of documents executed by an agriculturist through an attorney, then it would have been so stated in the section. It must be remembered that when a party executes a power-of-attorney enabling the attorney to deal with his property and execute conveyances on his behalf, he is still the executing party. Section 63A clearly applies to agriculturists who intend to sell or mortgage their properties, and the fact that an agriculturist gives a power-of-attorney to another person to execute a conveyance or mortgage on his behalf cannot prevent the application of the section.

A very simple test will show that this reading of the section is correct. An agriculturist owning property and intending to sell or mortgage it might give a power-of-attorney to a non-agriculturist to execute a sale-deed or a mortgage on his behalf. Then, if the argument of the respondent were to prevail, the agriculturist's attorney would be able to execute the document on his behalf without complying with the provisions of s. 63A, although the agriculturist is in law the executing party.

I think, therefore, that the plaintiff cannot rely on his sale-deed as entitling him to possession of the property, but if the defendant resists the plaintiff's claim to possession on this ground, she is bound in equity to return the money which was paid by the plaintiff when he obtained the sale-deed.

There will be a decree, therefore, in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 500 with interest at six per cent. from June 12, 1920, to date. There will be no order as to costs. Plaintiff to be given a charge on the property to secure what is payable to him under the decree.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 4th July 1925.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is closely connected with Appeal No. 2374 of 1925. In this case a house and shop were sold by the Receiver in insolvency as belonging to the insolvents, Munshi and Musammat Sardhi. Certain collaterals, Chiranji Lal, etc., came before the District Judge and claimed that the property was theirs, having been purchased by them from one Tirkha Jat. They relied upon an entry in a bahi which was not produced. The District Judge disbelieved the evidence and dismissed the application. Against this decision Chiranji Lal, etc., have appealed and have joined as respondents the two insolvents, Rughnath, a creditor and the auction purchaser, and Girdhari one of the other creditors. The Official Receiver and the other creditors have not been made parties. For reasons given in my judgment in the connected suit the appeal must be dismissed with costs as incompetent as the Official Receiver who represents the insolvents' estate has not been made a party to it. Without him there can be no final adjudication of the matter as the insolvents' estate is vested in him and the money is with him.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), s. 22—Election petition—District Judge acting under Municipal Act, whether Court—Revision.

A District Judge acting under s. 22, Bombay District Municipal Act, is not a Court within the meaning of the word in s. 115, C. P. C. Therefore, an order by the District Judge refusing to entertain an objection petition in election on the ground of improper presentation is not open to revision by the High Court. [p. 661, col. 1.]

Revision application against an order of the Assistant Judge, Dharwar.

Messrs. Nilkanth Atmaram and R. A. Jahagirdar, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner filed a petition in the District Court at Dharwar praying for a declaration that the election of opponents Nos. 1 to 4 as Councillors of the Hubli Municipality, was illegal and void on account of the corrupt practices described in the petition and further that he and opponent No. 5 should be declared as validly elected members of the Hubli Municipality. Opponents Nos. 1, 2 and 4, resisted the application on the grounds set out in their written statement. They denied the corrupt practices attributed to them, and contended that the petition, not having been legally and properly presented to the District Judge, was barred by time.

The first issue was whether the petition was or was not legally and properly presented to the District Judge within the prescribed time. The petition was as a matter of fact presented to the Clerk of the Court of the District Judge within ten days of the declaration of the results of the elections for the Hubli Municipality. The question then was, whether such a presentation amounted in the eye of the law to its presentation to the District Judge, as required by cl. (1) of s. 22 of the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901.

The Assistant Judge held that the representation of the application to the clerk of the Court of the District Judge was not a presentation of the application to the District Judge, and accordingly the application was rejected.

The petitioner now applies to this Court, under s. 115 of the C. P. C., to set aside the order of the Assistant Judge, and he is met with the objection that the District Judge acting under s. 22 of the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901, as further amended, was not a Court within the meaning of the word in s. 115. A similar point arose in Balaji Sakharam v. Merwanji Nowroji (1) under the Bombay District Municipal Act II of 1884, s. 23, and it was held by this Court that the District Judge was not a Court within the meaning of s. 622 of the Code of 1882 so that this Court had no jurisdiction to revise the order refusing to set aside an election.

But it has been urged before us, as a ground for admitting this application, that in this case as the District Judge, or the Assistant Judge acting for the District Judge, has refused to entertain the application on the ground stated in the judgment, that enables this Court to interfere. But the District Judge remains a persona designata whether he hears the petition and makes an order thereon, or whether he refuses to entertain the application, because it has not been presented to him in time.

If it seems desirable that the High Court should have powers of superintendence over the Distrtict Judge acting under s. 22 of the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901, then that is a matter for the Legislature to consider. As the law stands at present we cannot entertain this application.

Where a kabuliyat has been accepted and acted upon by the lessors, third parties claiming under the lessors are, equally with the lessors, estopped from denying the validity of the lease. [p. 662, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 21st of May 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court of that place, dated the 29th of September 1921.

Babu Makunda Behari Mullick, for the Appellants.

Babu Bhudhar Halder, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiffs sued for recovery of khas possession of some 4 bighas of land from the possession of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. Their case was that they executed a kabuliyat in favour of defendants Nos. 6 to 9 in July 1919 and this kabuliyat was accepted by the landlords defendants Nos. 6 to 9 and they were put in possession and that after being in possession for one year they were evicted by defendants Nos. 1 to 9. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 contested the suit contending that this land formed part of their ancestral jama held under defendants Nos. 6 to 9. The first Court held that the lease to the plaintiffs contravened the provisions of s. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as he held that defendants Nos. 6 to 9 were occupancy raiyats. He, therefore, held the lease void and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Court and the learned Subordinate Judge held that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 claiming as they did under the defendants Nos. 6 to 9 were estopped from pleading that the lease granted by defendants Nos. 6 to 9 contravened the provisions of s. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He also held that defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had obtained no title to this land by the kabuliyat of 1305. He also found that so far as the share of defendant No. 5 was concerned, namely, 2 annas and 8 pies this share had not been leased out to the plaintiffs. He, therefore, granted the plaintiffs a decree to the extent of 13 annas and 4 pies share of the land.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have appealed to this Court and their contention is that the kabuliyat executed by the plaintiffs is not to be used in their favour and, therefore, this kabuliyat does not estop the lessors of the plaintiffs from denying their title. Their argument being that the kabuliyat was executed by the plaintiffs and not by their lessors and that, therefore, the statement contained in it does not bind the lessors. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the lessors accepted and acted upon the kabuliyat and hence they would be clearly bound by the statement contained in it. If, therefore, the lessors of the plaintiffs could not be heard to say that the lease granted to the plaintiffs contravenes the provisions of s. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it would not be open to defendants Nos. 1 to 4 who claim under the defendants Nos. 6 to 9 to question the validity of the lease granted by defendants Nos. 6 to 9. They would be equally estopped with defendants Nos. 6 to 9 the lessors of the plaintiffs claiming as they do under these defendants from denying the validity of the lease.

The result is the appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 3 (16), 68, 83, 217—Alienated village, introduction of Survey Settlement in—Tenant's rights, variation in—Liability to enhanced rent.

Introduction of Survey Settlement into an alienated village does not confer on an ordinary tenant the rights which belong to an "occupant" in an unalienated village. Such a tenant, therefore, is not immune from enhancement of rent.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 32 of 1923, confirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge at Wai, in Civil Suit No. 446 of 1922.

Mr. D. C. Virkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff as an inamdar brought a suit No. 36 of 1918 in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Wai for possession against the defendant on the ground that he was a yearly tenant and was liable to be evicted on being given a proper notice. The final decision of the High Court in that case was to the effect that defendant was a permanent tenant under s. 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and the point as to enhancement of rent was then left untouched as it was not originally claimed in the plaint.

The plaintiff has now brought this suit for enhancement of the rent at the rate of Rs. 125 a year together with Rs. 22 as unpaid rent for two years before suit. It was urged that the notice by the plaintiff to the defendant to enhance the rent was not according to law, but the Judge held that the notice was legal and proper. He also found that having regard to the usage and custom prevailing in the locality the plaintiff was entitled to ask for the enhancement of rent. And on a consideration of the evidence he directed the defendant to pay enhanced rent at the rate of Rs. 25 a year as well as the rent due for the previous two years before suit. It appears to have been urged before the Judge that the defendant was entitled to the rights of an occupant in an alienated village by virtue of s. 217 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. It is not easy to follow the argument which is constantly being put forward in the Court.

The same point was urged in appeal before the District Judge who, after referring to the amendment in 1913 of s. 217 of the Land Revenue Code, said:—

"Since the amendment one cannot rely on these decisions [Nanabhai Bajibhai v. Collector of Kaira (1) and Dadoo Bhaoo v. Dinkar Vishnu Aphte (2)] because the words 'holders of land' have been substituted for 'occupants' The result of the amendment is that holders in general have the same rights in alienated villages after a settlement as they have in unalienated villages. A holder may be a mere tenant. If so, he has merely a tenant's rights. It is admitted that the present appellant is a tenant, the origin of whose tenancy owing to antiquity cannot be determined. He is not the khatedar. He has rightly been held not to be an 'occupant'."

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 949; 34 B. 686; 12 Bom. L. R. 707.

We think that this reasoning is correct. The defendant was a holder of land, for under s. 3 (11) to be a "holder" of land means to be lawfully in possession of land, whether such possession is actual or not. Consequently, when the Survey Settlement was introduced into the suit village, the defendant had the same rights and was affected by the same responsibilities in respect of the lands in his occupation as holders of land in unalienated villages. If the village had been unalienated he would still have been a tenant and not an occupant. Under s. 3 (16) of the Act an occupant means a holder in actual possession of unalienated land, other than a tenant. It cannot be suggested that the defendant was an occupant. He was a tenant with neither fixity of tenure nor fixity of rent, until the Court decided in the suit I have referred to that he was entitled to the presumption arising under s. 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. The decree in that suit was his title, but the title so granted was subject to the right of the landlord if he had the same either by virtue of agreement, usage or otherwise; to enhance the rent payable or services renderable by the tenant. So that the defendant cannot rely upon the provisions of s. 217 as protecting him from any attempt the landlord may make to prove that he is entitled to enhance the rent.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Cross-objections also dismissed with costs.

Coyajee, J.—In this case the Survey Settlement was first introduced into this village with the consent of the inamdar in the year 1901. And it is found by both the Courts that the land in suit has ever since then stood in the khata not of the defendant but of the inamdar, and also that during all these years the defendant has not been paying assessment, but rent slightly in excess of the assessment fixed at the survey.

The defendant relies on the provisions of s. 217 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and contends that by reason of the introduction of the Survey Settlement into this village, he has acquired, in respect of the lands in his occupation, all the rights which belong to holders of land in unalienated villages. It may be conceded that the defendant is a holder of lands in an alienated village to which the Survey Settlement extends; for, "to be a holder of land means to be lawfully in possession of land, whether such possession is actual or not" (s. 3, cl. 11, Land Revenue Code). In order to ascertain what rights belong to holders of land in unalienated villages, it is necessary to refer to s. 68, read with s. 3, cl. 16, of the Land Revenue Code. The material portion of s. 68 runs thus: "An occupant is entitled to the use and occupation of his land for the period, if any, to which his tenure is limited, or if the period is unlimited, or a Survey Settlement has been extended to the land, in perpetuity, conditionally on the payment of the amounts due on account of the land revenue for the same, according to the provisions of this Act or of any rules made under this Act." The defendant claims that by reason of the introduction of the Survey Settlement into this village he has become entitled to hold the lands which are in his possession in perpetuity on the payment of the assessment fixed at the Survey Settlement. But these rights belong to an "occupant." Section 3, cl. 16, defines an "occupant" as meaning "a holder in actual possession of unalienated land, other than a tenant; provided that where the holder in actual possession is a tenant, the landlord or superior landlord, as the case may be, shall be deemed to be the occupant." According to the findings of the lower Courts the defendant is in possession of the suit land as a tenant of the plaintiff. He is, therefore, not an occupant within the meaning of that word in s. 68. The learned Pleader on behalf of the appellant has invited our attention to the decision of this Court in Nanabhai Bajibhai v. Collector of Kaira (1). But, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, after the date of that decision s. 217 was amended, and the words "holders of land" were substituted for the original word "occupants" by Bombay Act IV of 1913. That being so, it is clear that the introduction of the Survey Settlement into this village does not confer on the appellant the rights which belong to an "occupant" in an unalienated village.

For these reasons I agree in affirming the decree of the lower Court.

But if the money was lent by the manager in his personal capacity the discharge can be given by a person holding the heirship cetrificate.

Second appeal against a decree of the Joint Judge, Sukkur.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by one Shakarkhan and his brother against the finding of the learned Joint Judge of Sukkur dismissing an appeal against the order of the learned Joint Sub-Judge, Shikarpur. The suit was a mortgage suit.

In the second appeal only two points are raised: First, that the Court should have held that the appellants were agriculturists and applied the ordinary procedure under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act in respect of the mortgage; and secondly, that credit should be given to the appellants in respect of a certain sum of money alleged by them to have been paid to the children of the original mortgagee.

As regards the first point there seems to be perhaps a certain amount of confusion in the mind of the lower Appellate Court. But it is to be observed that the appellants themselves never raised the point that they were at the time of transaction agriculturists. It is to be noted that under s. 2 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act the term "agriculturists" included a person who was an agriculturist at the time of the transaction and it is obvious that this must be so. But, whatever the status of the defendants might have been at the time of action, it seems clear that they were never really agriculturists. They are Pathans by caste and were employed on salaried labour and it is on that that all along their principal maintenance has depended. We are not sure that we should be competent to go into the question of their status because it does not appear that the point was really absent from the mind of the Joint Judge. It is true that his judgment chiefly devotes itself to the consideration of the status of the appellants at the time of suit and thereafter but he had accepted and ratified the finding of the Joint Sub-Judge as to the status at the time of liability. We do not think, therefore, that these people are entitled to be treated as agriculturists.

The second point also is one which cannot avail the appellants. They had borrowed this money from Kodumal and they must pay it back either to Kodumal or some person who has stepped into Kodumal's shoes. Kodumal being dead, they could only pay to the person entitled to recover moneys from the estate of Kodumal or for the family which Kodumal represented. If the money loaned was private property of Kodumal they should have paid the person possessing an heirship certificate in respect of the estate of Kodumal. If the property was joint family property as it undoubtedly was, they should have paid not to the sons of Kodumal but the person who was then representing Kodumal in his capacity as manager of such joint family. If the joint family were so torn by faction that it had no manager they should have not paid at all. In neither case has the alleged payment to the two sons discharged them from their liability to pay the mortgage amount to the person who is really entitled to payment, that is the joint family by its manager.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 5 OF 1924.

September 30, 1924.

Present:—Sir Lallubhai Shah, KT., Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Kincaid.

BHIKUBAI YESHWANTRAO MEHER— PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

HARIBA SAWALARAM MEHER— DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance—Unchastity, effect of—Reversion to moral life, effect of—Bare maintenance.

The right of a Hindu widow to maintenance is dependent upon her continuing to be chaste. In case her incontinence is proved she forfeits that right. [p. 667, col. 1.]

Where a Hindu widow, who has been unchaste, is proved to have given up the life of unchastity she is entitled to bare maintenance which should ordinarily be fixed by a rough and ready reference to the general condition of the family as disclosed in the evidence. The amount of maintenance should be the bare minimum which is necessary in order to enable the widow to live. [p. 670, cols. 1 & 2.]

[Case-law and texts discussed.]

FACTS.—On the death of her husband, a man owning a considerable amount of property, Musammat Bhikubai, the plaintiff, entered into an agreement with her husband's collaterals whereby the latter undertook to pay her Rs. 100 per mensem and provide her free quarters on the condition that she led a chaste life, and would neither live separately nor adopt anyone.

The widow, however, began to live an impure life with one Shankar, and although as alleged by her, she afterwards reverted back to a purer life since the time her paramour married another woman, she adopted one Tuka Ram. A few months after the adoption, the defendants stopped payments of the monthly maintenance allowance.

She filed a suit to recover maintenance at an enhanced rate and for arrears at the same rate.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with him Messrs. Munshi and S. G. Joshi), for the Appellant.

Mr. M. C. Setalvad, (with him Messrs. Kanga and B. J. Desai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Shah, A. C. J.—[His Lordship, holding that the illicit connection between the plaintiff and Shankar did not amount to a marriage, as contended by the defendants, went on:—]

The next question of fact to be determined is whether the finding that she has reverted to a moral life is correct. Its correctness has been challenged by Mr. Setalvad. It appears from the evidence that Shankar married one Jijibai at Dehu in December 1918. The case for the plaintiff is that ever since that marriage there is nothing to show that Shankar has been living on terms of improper intimacy with Bhikubai. It appears from the various receipts of money-orders sent by the defendant to Bhuikubai at Dehu and Junnar that Shankar signed for Bhikubai, and that his association with her has not ceased. There are other letters in the case, which it is not necessary to refer to, that the apparent association of Shankar with Bhikubai, who has been living apparently since 1918 at Junnar and Dehu, has continued. When once we find that the relations between Shankar and Bhikubai had reached the stage of improper familiarity, and when we find that the apparent association of Shankar with Bhikubai has not ceased, it is not easy to draw the inference that after his marriage with Jijibai, the improper connection with Bhikubai has ceased. At the same time we have the evidence of Jijibai which goes to show that such improper relations did not exist—at any rate not to her knowledge. While I am prepared to give due weight to the evidence of Jijibai, speaking for myself I do not find it easy to hold it proved that the improper relations between Bhikubai and Shankar have ceased. The learned Trial Judge was prepared to draw that inference in favour of Bhikubai, and my learned brother is also prepared to draw that inference in her favour on the evidence of Jijibai.

As I consider that that inference is a reasonably possible inference under the circumstances, in spite of the difficulty which I feel in accepting it, I am not prepared to differ from the conclusion that for some time prior to the date of the suit Bhikubai had given up her life of incontinence.

On these facts, the question arises whether Bhikubai has forfeited her claim to maintenance altogether, or whether she is entitled to bare maintenance, as the learned Trial Judge has held. It is argued on her behalf that in view of the observations of Chandavarkar, J., in Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (1) she is entitled to full maintenance as a widow living a chaste life would get, as she has given up the life of incontinence.

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 960; 34 B. 278; 12 Bom. L. R. 196.

I shall, therefore, first deal with the question as to whether she has lost her right to maintenance generally speaking, and shall deal with the question of her right to bare maintenance separately.

It has been argued on behalf of the respondents that in view of the terms of the agreement, Ex. A, she has lost all right to maintenance. The material clause in the agreement is as follows:

" By the aforesaid deed or agreement I Bhikubai widow of Yeshwantrao Sawlaram pass in writing as follows. I will always live with my mother-in-law Jenabai wife of Sawlaram Dhondiba Meher and will always lead a moral life and behave according to the duties of female (i. e.) lead a virtuous life. If I fail to lead a moral life and to behave according to the duties of female I shall not claim the right of food and clothing (i. e. maintenance) referred to above; similarly I will not live independently. (1) (i. e. by myself alone)."

It is urged that as her incontinence is proved, under this clause she has lost all right to maintenance. It is true that she has lost the right to maintenance referred to in the agreement. But I do not think that this clause can be read as meaning that if she has any right under the law in spite of incontinence, that right is affected. The question of her right to maintenance must be determined according to Hindu Law on the facts found, and it cannot be held to be affected in any way by this clause in the agreement, as contended on behalf of the respondents.

As regards the consequences of unchastity on the right of a Hindu widow to maintenance, there can be no doubt. The text of Narada, which is referred to in Ch. 2, s. 1, pl. 7, of the Mitakshara, makes the position clear. I shall refer to the translation of this text, as given in Gharpure's Translation of the Mitakshara, Vyavahara Adhyaya, page 230:—

"Among brothers, if any one die without issue, or enter a religious order, let the rest of the brothers divide his property excepting the stridhana (of his wife). They should make provision for the maintenance of his wives till their death, provided they preserve unsullied the bed of their Lord. They may, however, cut it off in the case of those who behave otherwise."

The original word for "cut off" or "resume" used in other translations is * * (Achchindyuh). This word clearly indicates that they may cut off or forfeit if the widow does not lead a chaste life, or, to use the words in the translation, "if the widow does not preserve unsullied the bed of her lord." Yajnavalkya's Verse No. 142 and Vijnanesvara's commentary thereon as translated in plactia 14 and 15 in Ch. 2, s. 10, of Colebrooke's Translation of the Mitakshara, which need not be quoted here would show that the sonless wives of disqualified heirs were to be maintained so long as they conducted themselves aright, but were liable to be expelled if they were unchaste. This is consistent with Narada's view as to the obligation on the part of a widow to lead a chaste life in order to be entitled to maintenance.

In the Vyavahara Mayukha also this text of Narada is quoted with approval (see page 78, Mandlik's Hindu Law).

The decisions of this Court are consistent on this point. In Valu v. Ganga (2) the question has been considered and the conclusion reached is that she forfeits her right to maintenance.

In the earlier decision in Honamma v. Timmannabhat (3) which was dissented from in the above case, it was observed that "the observations [in Rajah Pirthee Singh v. Ranee Raj Kower (4)] as to loss of maintenance in consequence of unchastity,...referred to maintenance as a dives, not to a starving maintenance, as a bare maintenance has been sometime denominated." (page 561*). In Yashvantrav v. Kashibai (5) Nanabhai Haridas, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, sitting with Sargent, C. J., referred to this rule in these words: " The wives and widows of disqualified coparceners are entitled to maintenance, but only on condition of their continuing chaste," 1 Strange 175; 2 Cole. Dig, 438 (page 28†).

The point for decision in that case was different, but I refer to this statement as showing that Nanabhai Haridas, J., who was a party to the decision in Honamma v. Timmannabhat (3) described the right of maintenance of widows as being subject to the condition of their continuing to be chaste.

Therefore, it is clear that if the incontinence of Bhikubai is proved, under this rule she would forfeit her right to be maintained by the co-parceners of her deceased husband. Mr. Thakor, however, has relied upon the observations of Chandavarkar, J., in Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (1). I do not think that Chandavarkar, J., meant to question in any sense the well-settled rule that the right of the widow to maintenance was dependent upon her continuing to be chaste, and that in case her incontinence was proved, she forfeited that right. The opinion of Apararka, referred to by Chandavarkar, J., cannot be read as modifying this view: and even if it means what Mr. Thakor contends it does mean, it cannot be accepted as against the opinions of Vijnanesvara and Nilakantha on this point and the uniform current of decisions. The opinion of Madhavacharya, referred to by Chandavarkar, J., does not in any sense support the contention that even an incontinent widow may retain her right to full maintenance if she has reverted to the path of morality. I am quite clear that the observations of Chandavarkar, J., are directed to the point of bare maintenance, as to which there was an apparent conflict between Honamma v, Timmannabhat (3) and Valu v. Ganga (2). The lower Court was, therefore, right in disallowing the plaintiff's claim for maintenance generally. She claimed in this suit increased maintenance in spite of the agreement which was entered into between her and her husband's relations. But, on account of her proved incontinence, that right is forfeited, and the defendants are entitled to refuse to maintain her.

The next question is whether she is entitled even to bare maintenance in view of her having given up the path of unchastity. On this point apparently there is a conflict between the two decisions of this Court to which I have referred. With reference to this apparent conflict Chandavarkar, J., has examined the texts of Hindu Law, and has expressed the opinion that those texts would seem to support the decision of this Court in Honamma v. Timmannabhat (3). It is quite true that those observations were not essential for the decision of the case. As the point was argued in that case he examined the texts and expressed his opinion. The question that we have to consider is whether there is really any conflict between the two decisions, and if there is no necessary conflict, as to whether the widow can be allowed bare maintenance under the circumstances of this case.

It appears from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in Valu v. Ganga (2) that the authorities which were referred to in Honamma v. Timmannabhat (3) were considered, and after quoting a passage from Strange's Hindu Law, at page 90 it is pointed out that:—

"In the absence of any text distinctly imposing this obligation or of any expression qualifying the right which is reserved by so many texts to those who take the husband's property, of withdrawing maintenance from an unchaste widow, it cannot (except perhaps in the case of a son) be regarded as a legal liability to be enforced in a Civil Court."

It does not appear from the judgment that the passages in the Achara and Prayaschitta Adhyayas in the Mitakshara, to which I shall presently refer, were before the Court. If any text which would support the view taken in Honamma's case (3) had been brought to the notice of the learned Judges, it is permissible to think that they might not have expressed their dissent in an unqualified form. It does not appear from the facts of the case in Valu v. Ganga (2) that the question whether the widow would be entitled to bare maintenance if she had given up the life of incontinence arose for decision in that case.

The decision in Vishnu Shambhog v. Manjamma (6) does not carry the apparent conflict between the two views any further. In that case the necessary facts which would raise the question of allowing bare maintenance to the widow were not alleged, and the decision proceeds upon the general ground as to whether on account of unchastity the right of the widow to maintenance is lost, even though it may have been decreed before.

I have considered the authorities which have been mentioned by Chandavarkar, J., in Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (1) and I do not consider it necessary to refer to them all in this judgment. It is sufficient to refer to the passages in the Mitakshara. Verse 70 in the Achara Adhyaya in the Chapter relating to "Marriage," with Vijnanesvara's commentary thereon, is translated as follows by Srisa Chandra Vidyarnava in his translation of the Achara Adhyaya at page 136:—

(6) 9 B. 108; 9 Ind. Jur. 271; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 72.

"The author now describes how unchaste women are to be treated.

Yajnavalkya.

LXX.—The unchaste wife should be deprived of authority, should be unadorned, allowed food barely sufficient to sustain her body, rebuked, and let sleep on low bed, and thus allowed to dwell.—70.

Mitakshara.

She who commits adultery, 'should be deprived of authority' i. e., the control over servants and the management of the household, etc., should be taken away. She should be kept 'unadorned, i. e., without collyrium, ointments, white cloth or ornaments; 'with food enough to maintain her body' and sustain her life merely, and 'rebuked' with censure etc., and 'sleeping on low bed,' on the ground, and 'allowed to dwell,' only in his own house. This should be done in order to produce repentance, and not for purification."

In the commentary on Verse No. 72. the meaning of the word 'abandonment' is explained by Vijnanesvara in these terms at page 139 of the same translation:—

"The abandonment should be by not having any carnal connection with her, and by not allowing her to join in any religious ceremonies and does not mean that she should be driven out of the house, because of the rule she should be kept confined to one apartment" (Manu XI, 176 or 177).

It must be remembered, however, that these passages in terms relate to a wife and not to a widow.

In the Prayaschitta Adhyaya of the Mitakshara in Verses 297 and 298, in dealing with the question of penance, Yajnavalkya lays down the following rule as translated in the Sacred Laws of the Aryas (Mitakshara, Vol. II. Prayaschitta Adhyaya) translated by S. M. Naraharayya and published from the Panini Office, Allahabad, at page 437:—

"It is declared that this very process (should hold good) with regard to women who have suffered degradation (from caste).

CCXCVII. (But) accommodation should be given (to them) close to the house; (and also) food and clothing along with protection."

And then in the commentary on that verse the following explanation is given of these women (page 438):—

'To those women who, though have suffered degradation (from caste) and for whom the rite of presenting (disconnecting) water libations, etc., have been performed, accommodation, (that is) a small cottage built of straws and leaves should be given in the proximity of the main (building of the) house. Similarly food that is just sufficient for the maintenance of life and also raiment of a low description along with (the protection) of preventing her from being enjoyed again by another man should be given."

In the commentary on the next verse it is explained at page 439 of the same book that women under certain circumstances may be abandoned. The following translation of Vijnanesvara's commentary on this text is material:—

"(Here) it has been said that the abandoning is with regard to these four (sorts of) women only, and, nevertheless, the idea is that among such women who (have suffered degradation from caste and) will not perform the penance, only four, (namely), one who yields herself to (her husband's) pupil etc., should be abandoned without the (allowance of the) necessaries of life, (namely,) clothing, food, accommodation, etc., and it is not so with respect to other (offending women). And hence, it is inferred that (in the case) of other women who have suffered degradation (from caste), all that is said as, 'accommodation should be given (to them) close to the house etc.,' (III, 297) should be done though they do not perform the penance."

These passages may go to show that in the case of woman who did not fall from the path of chastity in any of the grave manners specified in this last verse, she may be allowed to live as described in the preceding verse. It is not easy to determine whether these passages in the Achara Adhyaya and the Prayaschitta Adyaya are applicable to the case of a widow who claims maintenance from the co parceners of her deceased husband. I may refer to the following passage in the Vyavahra Mayukha at page 79 of Mandlik's Hindu Law:—

"As for the text:—'This same course should be followed in the case of degraded females; food and raiment are to be given to them and they should reside near the house'; it is, in the opinion of some others, in reference to the husband while living."

This suggests that in the opinion of Nilakantha it might not be so limited, In the Vira Mitrodaya, Mitra Misra expresses an opinion, as given at page 153 of Golap Chandra Sarkar's translation of the Vira Mitrodaya, in the following passage.

"As for the allowance of food and raiment even to the unchaste wives, as is declared in the following text, namely,—'Also let one act in the same manner towards even the fallen wives; food and raiment, however, should be allowed to them, if they reside in the vicinity of the dwelling house':—that, however, is to be explained as referring to the husband, consistently with what is ordained by Yogisvara after having premised the husband, as in the text—'Deprived of her position in the family, clad in dirty clothes, living upon morsels barely sufficient for life, and humiliated, an unchaste wife shall be made to lie down upon the bare earth.'"

At the same time it is a reasonably possible reading of the passages in the Mitakshara, particularly the passages in the Prayashchitta Adhyaya that they refer to women generally and are not confined to wives.

In this state of the opinions with regard to the application of these passages to the case of a widow who has been unchaste but who has reverted to the path of propriety it is not unreasonable to say that they may apply to such widows.

It is important to remember that, so far back as 1876, Sir Michael Westropp, C. J., and Nanabhai Haridas, J., accepted the view that where the widow had resumed proper ways, she might be and ought to be given bare maintenance. No doubt, in coming to that conclusion, they referred to a text of Harita which is quoted in placita 37 and 38 of Mitakshara, Ch. 2 s. 1, which has no bearing upon the question. This text of Harita has been referred to and considered by Sir Charles Sargent in Valu v. Ganga (2) (page 84*) and the view taken of Harita's text there by the learned Chief Justice is correct, if I may say so with respect. But the fact remains that in Honamma's case (3) the learned Judges acted upon the view that a bare maintenance could be allowed to an incontinent widow without referring to the passages in the Achara and Prayaschitta Adhyayas of the Mitakshara. I read that judgment as really applicable to the case of a widow who is proved to have given up the life of unchastity. In that case it is pointed out that the allegation that the widow was living in a state of unchastity was not proved, and it appears that the widow had gone to reside with her mother-in-law. Under those circumstances the learned Judges considered whether her incontinence had disentitled her to bare maintenance which was allotted to the widow in that case under a previous decree. The decision is really applicable and limited to the case of a widow who is proved to have ceased to lead an unchaste life. If it is read as going beyond that, it has not the support of any text or of any recognised commentator; nor has it the support of any decision of this Court or of any other High Court. I cannot believe that the learned Judges could have meant to go beyond the strict necessity of the case and to hold that even an incontinent widow was entitled to bare maintenance.

In Rama Nath v. Rajonimoni Dasi (7) the learned Judges declined to apply the rule of Honamma v. Timmannabhat (3) to the case of a widow who was living a life of unchastity at the date of the suit. But they expressed the following opinion in the judgment at page 679*.

"We do not decide in this case what her rights would be if she were to give up her present way of living and begin to lead a moral life; we do not say that she would not, even in that case, be entitled to claim a starving maintenance. All that we say now is, that under the existing state of things, she is not entitled to maintenance of any sort."

This point has been recently considered in Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya (8). The view taken by Seshagiri Ayyar, J., is that these passages in the Mitakshara go to show that the widow will get starving maintenance, though on account of unchastity, she would lose the right to the ordinary rate of maintenance. Undoubtedly this case supports the view that a widow who has been unchaste, but who has ceased to lead a life of incontinence, may be given bare maintenance, and that such right is not excluded by the text of Narada which seems to give the co-parceners the right of cutting off her maintenance.

This is the state of the authorities and the opinions with reference to this point. The question is whether there is any real conflict of decisions such as would necessitate a reference to a Full Bench. As I have already stated, the decision in Honamma v. Timmannabhat (3) must be treated as limited to the case of a widow who has ceased to be unchaste, and connot be read as applicable to a widow who continues to be unchaste. If the judgments in Valu v. Ganga (2) and Vishu Shambhog v. Manjamma (6) are read with reference to the facts of those cases that question did not arise for decision. If Honamma's case (3) is read as laying down that bare maintenance should be allowed to a widow who is in fact leading a life of unchastity, there is undoubtedly a difference of opinion. But, as I have already said, the weight of opinion would be preponderatingly against the view that a widow continuing to be unchaste can get bare maintenance: and no reference to a Full Bench would be called for. Further, on the facts of this case, that question would not arise. But if the decision in Honamma's case (3) is, as I think it should be, restricted to the case of a widow who has really given up a life of unchastity, there is really no conflict of decisions. In view of the concurrence of judicial opinion in the three High Courts, that a widow who has been unchaste, but who is proved to have given up the life of unchastity, should be given bare maintenance, I think that that view may be given effect to without any reference to a Full Bench. I may respectfully say that, in spite of the difficulty of applying these passages in the Mitakshara to the case of a widow who is proved to have lapsed from the path of chastity but who has improved her ways, I am of opinion that they are fairly capable of being applied to the case of such a widow, provided she has not been guilty of any such grave misconduct as has been stated in the said passages. At the same time these passages cannot be literally applied to modern conditions under which the Hindu Law is administered. While, therefore, the Court allows such a widow to live separately, it must insist upon her continuing to lead a chaste life, if she wishes to have the benefit of bare maintenance.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the conclusion of the Trial Court on this point, that Bhikubai is entitled to bare maintenance, can be accepted.

The learned Trial Judge has referred the question of determining the amount of bare maintenance to the Commissioner. I do not think, however, that any reference to the Commissioner is necessary. Bare maintenance can and should ordinarily be fixed by a rough and ready reference to the general condition of the family as disclosed in the evidence. It must be bare maintenance as indicated in the passages cited in this judgment. Though these passages are not capable of literal application to the case of a widow who does not live in the family house, under the law as administered now it is simply a question of determining the bare minimum which should be allowed to her under the circumstances in order to enable her to live. We asked the learned Counsel for the respondents as to what amount he would suggest under the circumstances. He suggested Rs. 20 as maintenance and Rs. 5 as house rent, in all Rs. 25. The appellant's Counsel has not accepted this as being a reasonable amount for bare maintenance. But his suggestion for allowing Rs. 75 or Rs. 100 per month as bare maintenance is clearly unreasonable. I am of opinion that Rs. 25 would be reasonable as bare maintenance under the circumstances.

We modify the decree appealed from by cancelling the order of reference to the Commissioner and the other provisions in the decree incidental to the reference, and by ordering that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 do pay Rs. 25 per mensem including house rent to the plaintiff from the date of the suit; the liability to pay in the case of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 to be limited to the estate in the hands of the Administrator General. The amount now lying with the plaintiff's Solicitors in respect of payments made under the order of the Court during the pendency of the suit to be refunded to defendants, so far as it is in excess of Rs. 25 per mensem. The excess amount paid during the pendency of the appeal to be set off against payments already due or which may fall due hereafter. In the Trial Court each party to bear his or her own costs.

The appellant to pay the respondents' costs in appeal and to get the costs of cross objections from respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

Kincaid, J.—[His Lordship concurring with the conclusions on facts arrived at by the Acting Chief Justice, dealt with the question whether Bhikubai had reverted to a moral life]. The next question is whether the improper intimacy between Bhikubai still exists. In 1918 Shankar, after quarrelling with Kashibai, married yet another wife Jijibai. Jijibai has sworn that no intimacy now exists between Shankar and Bhikubai. The learned Counsel for the defendants has argued that Shankar and Bhikubai have not ceased to meet and, therefore, their intimacy most probably continues. But if we accept Kashibai's statement as regards impropriety of their conduct, we should, I think, also accept Jijibai's statement as to its present propriety. I, therefore, agree with the learned Trial Judge in holding that their immoral intimacy has ceased and that Bhikubai has returned to a chaste life.

The last question is whether even on that finding Bhikubai is entitled to a bare maintenance. The case-law on the subject is not inconsiderable. The first authority brought to our notice is that of Honamma v. Timmannabhat (3) where Westropp, C. J., held that where a widow had obtained an award of maintenance, she did not ferfeit a bare maintenance by her incontinence. It should, however, be observed that the question whether she was incontinent at the time of the suit was left in doubt. The Judge of the first Appellate Court did not positively find "that allegation (i. e., of continued incontinence) to be true and he did state that she resided with her mother-in-law."

The correctness of the above decision was questioned in the case of Valu v. Ganga (2) Sir Charles Sargent observed (page 90*) :—

"In the absence of any text distinctly imposing this obligation (to give an unchaste widow maintenance) or of any expression qualifying the right which is reserved by so many texts to those who take the husband's property, of withdrawing maintenance from an unchaste widow, it cannot (except perhaps in the case of a son) be regarded as a legal liability to be enforced in a Civil Court."

In this case, too, the question whether the widow had returned to a moral life did not arise.

This authority was followed in Vishu Shambhog v. Manjamma (6). But a passage which occurs to the close of Sargent, C. J.'s, judgment is worthy of note (page 110†) :—

"Such being the nature of the widow's right to maintenance, a decree, declaring her right, must, from its nature, be liable to be set aside or suspended in its operation on proof of such unchastity."

Here, again, the question of the widow's return to a moral life was not before the learned Judges but the words "suspended in its operation" seem to imply that a widow was to be deprived of her maintenance only so long as her unchastity lasted.

The matter was again discussed in the case of Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (1) by Chandavarkar, J. Although he decided the case on other grounds he quoted with approval a text of Parashara which supports the contention that a repentant widow must be maintained. The passage runs as follows (page 285*) :—

"This text of Parashara, which includes the case of a widow, is explained by Madhavacharya (†) as relating only to a woman who is leading a life of unchastity is unrepentant, and has not performed expiatory rites. As to a woman, whether she is wife or widow, who returns to a life of chastity after she has been unchaste Madhavacharya explains that she, after expiation, cannot be cast out of the house, but that she must be maintained."

Other High Courts, besides the Bombay High Court, have considered the same question.

In the case of Roma Nath v. Rajonimoni Dasi (7) their Lordships held that an unchaste widow was not entitled to a "starving maintenance," but they deliberately left open the question of her rights should she return to a moral life. They observed (page 679††) :—

"We do not decide in this case what her rights would be if she were to give up her present way of living and begin to lead a moral life; we do not say that she would not, even in that case, be entitled to claim a starving maintenance. All that we say now is, that under the existing state of things she is not entitled to maintenance of any sort."

In the Madras High Court there were two similar cases. The first, however, Kandasami Pillai v. Murugammal (9), deals with a wife, and is, therefore, hardly pertinent. Still the following passage may be quoted from the judgment (page 8‖) :—

"I have little doubt that before a decree for maintenance is given to a wife who has once been guilty of infidelity, she must show, not only that at the time of the plaint and the trial she was leading a chaste life, but also that she had done so for a sufficient period previously so as clearly to lead to the conclusion that she has completely renounced her immoral course, and that, in fact, she is a reformed woman."

A case exactly analogous to the present one was that of Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya (8). There the learned Judges, after reviewing the authorities cited by me, came to the conclusion that an unchaste widow who had definitely repented was entitled to a bare maintenance. I quote the following passage (page 660):—

"But in none of these (Hindu) texts is there any provision for a woman who had repented and was subsequently leading an honest life. It is not to be presumed from the omission to provide for such a contingency, that the resumption once made is to be irrevocable and that the fallen woman who had reformed is to be denied even a starving allowance."

We thus have a series of decisions that at first sight seem to conflict, but if closely scrutinized, appear not really opposed to each other. In the case of Honamma v. Timmannabhat(3) we do not know whether the widow had reformed or not, but as she was living with her mother-in-law, their Lordships seem to have believed that she had. In Valu v. Ganga (2) and Vishu Shambhog v. Manjamma the (6) the widow had certainly not reformed and in the latter case their Lordships seem at any rate to have felt a doubt whether, if she had returned to a chaste life, she would not have been entitled to a starving maintenance. In Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (1) Chandavarkar, J., certainly inclined to the opinion that a repentant widow must be maintained. In Roma Nath v. Rajonimoni Dasi (7), their Lordships deliberately refused to hold that a repentant widow had no claims. Finally in Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya (8) the Madras High Court affirmatively held that a reformed widow must be given a starving maintenance. In these circumstances the decision of the Trial Judge seems to be the right one and I would confirm it with costs save in one particular. I should not send the case for further consideration of the Commissioner but would award by way of starving maintenance Rs. 25 inclusive of rent and all other charges.

I would modify the Trial Court's decree, therefore, as indicated by the Chief Justice.

Railway Company—Goods accepted under Risk Note B—Waggon sealed with paper only—Liability for loss of goods.

The fact that a waggon is sealed with paper and bolted but not locked, does not amount to wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Company accepting goods on the terms of Risk-Note B.

Application against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, exercising the Small Cause Court's powers, dated the 3rd March 1924.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. N. Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act. The plaintiff purchased 126 bags of sugar from a Calcutta firm. They were consigned to plaintiff at Lakhimpur. The Railway accepted the goods on the terms of Risk Note Ex. B, under which they are free from liability unless the Railway is guilty of wilful neglect. The bags came by goods train in the ordinary way in a waggon sealed merely with paper, and bolted, in such a way that the bolt could easily be opened. The Guard had deposed that the seal was intact at Utrauli Station, but that it was broken and six bags of sugar were missing when the train reached Lucknow. The Court of Trial has held that the way in which the waggon was fastened amounted to wilful neglect on the part of the Railway, and this is not an unreasonable view to take. There is evidence in this very case that on the R. K. Railway, the waggons are bolted in such a way that an unauthorised person could not open them without using a hatchet. But in Firm Bhagai Bam-Bahadur Ram v. B. N. W. Railway (1) it was said:

"The plea as to wilful neglect cannot succeed. The Company in the way usual with all Railways sealed the waggon on one side. The seal was broken and it is not known how the plaintiff's property disappeared. The putting of a seal and not of a lock does not amount to wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Company."

Similarly in Jagannath Prasad v. Agent, G. I. P. Ry., Co. (2). The case of Rohilkhand & Kumaon Ry., Co. v. Bij Raj (3) differs because in that case the waggon was not even sealed. See Agent, Rohilkhand & Kumaon Ry. v. Gauri Lal (4). I follow these decisions, and hold that there was no wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Company.

The learned Small Cause Court Judge, although he decided that the fastening of the waggons by bolt and seal amounted to wilful neglect, nevertheless dismissed plaintiff's suit on a finding that the bags had disappeared through running train robbery. This would raise the vexed question whether the word "robbery" in the Risk Note form B is to be construed to mean robbery or theft. If this question had come up for decision, I should have referred it to a Bench, because I am unable to agree with the Allahabad and Madras decisions. But since there was no wilful neglect the second question of running train robbery is not reached (see B. B. & C. I. Ry., Co. v. Ranchhodlal Chhotalal & Co. (5).

In the result, although I do not agree with his reasons I maintain the judgment and decree of the learned Small Cause Court Judge. This application is dismissed with costs.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad (with him Mr. Mulla), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bahadurji (with him Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was originally filed by one Vanmalidas Bhicabhai, as a trustee of certain premises situate at Sham Sett Street outside the Fort of Bombay, against the 1st defendant, who is the owner of certain premises situate to the north of the said trust premises, claiming inter alia that the 1st defendant, his servants, agents and workmen might be restrained by an order and injunction of this Court from encroaching or trespassing on the trust premises as they had done on October 8, 9 and 10, 1924, in the manner following, that is to say, that the defendant and his servants, agents and workmen had entered upon the ground floor of the trust premises and upon a chowk in the trust premises adjoining the southern wall of the defendant's premises for the purpose of plastering the said southern wall. The original 2nd defendant was one of the trustees of the said premises with the plaintiff, and as he refused to join in the filing of the suit, he was made a party defendant. The plaintiff resigned as the trustee and the Official Trustee was thereafter brought on the record in his place. The original 1st defendant died and his legal representatives were brought on the record as defendants Nos. 1, 1 (a) 1 (b) and 1 (c). I shall thereafter refer to them as defendants.

The original first defendant put in a written statement whereby he alleged that the two properties in suit formerly belonged to common owners, viz., Tyeballi Ahmedji, Abdul Ally Ahmedji and Abdul Hoosein Ahmedji, who by a conveyance, dated July 2, 1923, conveyed the trust property to the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title subject to a covenant by the purchaser, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns that he and they would not raise the building on the land conveyed to a greater height than it was on February 11, 1903, and would keep the chowk in the premises conveyed in the same condition as it was in on the said date. The defendant contended that the said covenant was inserted in order to preserve to the transferors access of light and air to the windows in the property retained by the transferors and ultimately conveyed to the 1st defendant on June 12, 1917. He further contended that by reason of the fact that the plaintiff's building was lower than the defendant's building and by reason of the existence of the said open chowk it was necessary to plaster the portion of the defendant's southern wall which abutted on the said open chowk in order to protect it from wind and rain, and stated that in order to plaster such wall he had placed planks in his building so that they projected through the windows thereof and had erected on the projecting portions of such planks scaffolding to enable his workmen to carry out the said work. He further contended that the plastering of the said wall was incidental to and necessary for the full and proper enjoyment of the said easement of light and air, and that by reason of the facts stated in para. 2 of the written statement he was entitled to erect a scaffolding over the said open chowk in order to enable his workmen to carry out such plastering work.

At the hearing of the suit two issues were raised :—

(1) Whether the defendants are entitled to raise the scaffolding in the open chowk of the plaintiff for the purpose of plastering or white-washing the south wall of defendants' premises?

(2) Whether for that purpose the defendants were entitled to enter the plaintiff's chowk through the plaintiff's property?

It was admitted by Mr. Bahadurji for the defendants that their workmen did enter the plaintiff's chowk through the plaintiff's property for the purpose of plastering and white-washing the wall of the defendants abutting on the said chowk.

The defendants, as the successors of the former owners who owned the two properties, are entitled to the benefit of the covenant in the conveyance to the plaintiff dated July 2, 1903. That covenant, however, does not either expressly or impliedly create an obligation on the plaintiff to allow the defendant or his men to enter the chowk through plaintiff's property for the purpose of plastering or repairing the southern wall of defendants' premises. But the defendants have claimed that right in para. 4 of the written statement on the ground that it was necessary for the full enjoyment of the said easement of light and air. Now there cannot be an easement of necessity for enabling the dominant owner to enjoy another easement. At the hearing, however, Mr. Bahadurji for defendants put forward the defendants' claim on the ground that the right to enter the plaintiff's chowk and to erect a scaffolding thereupon for the purpose of plastering and white-washing the defendants' wall, was absolutely necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the defendants' property and that the defendants were entitled to the said right as an easement of necessity under s. 13 (c) of the Indian Easements Act. I allowed the defendants to put forward that contention and the parties to lead evidence on the point.

The first question then to consider is whether the right claimed by the defendants is in the nature of an easement. Mr. Mulla argued that it was not, and that it did not fall under the definition of "easement" as given in s. 4 of the Indian Easements Act. "Easement" is defined as a right which the owner or occupier of certain land possesses as such, for the beneficial enjoyment of that land, to do and continue to do something, or to prevent and continue to prevent something being done, in or upon, or in respect of, certain other land not his own. The act which the defendants claim a right to do here is to erect a scaffolding on the plaintiff's land and for the purpose of so erecting it to enter into the chowk which is the plaintiff's property through the adjoining building of the plaintiff. The right to erect a scaffolding is claimed as being for the beneficial enjoyment of the defendants' property on the ground that the wall of their building abutting on the chowk must be plastered and white-washed from time to time in order that the defendants may keep it in proper condition so as to enable them to live in and enjoy their said property, and that unless they are allowed to go on the plaintiff's land and erect a scaffolding thereupon, they cannot plaster or white-wash the said wall.

Mr. Mulla argued that an easement of the nature claimed here had not been heard of before. I think there was some misapprehension as to the nature of the right claimed in the argument of Mr. Mulla. He seemed to think that the easement claimed was the right to plaster the wall. But on a proper consideration of the facts it appears to me that there is a clear fallacy in the argument, because the easement claimed here is not the right to do something to the defendants' own property but the right to do something on the plaintiff's property for the beneficial enjoyment of the defendants' property. The plastering is for the beneficial enjoyment of the defendants' property, and the act which they claim the right to do to enjoy that benefit is an act which is to be done on the plaintiff's property. In my opinion, if such a right exists, it would clearly be in the nature of an easement. If the two properties had belonged, as they do now, for a long time to different owners, the owner of the property belonging to the defendants could have acquired the right claimed as an easement by prescription or by grant under the Indian Easements Act. For example, if the defendants had gone on the property of the plaintiff without the leave or license of the plaintiff, and as a matter of right for the purpose of erecting a scaffolding on the chowk, and had from that scaffolding plastered and white-washed their own wall, and if that right had been exercised for the period required by the Indian Easements Act, it would have ripened into the right of easement which the plaintiff could not have denied.

Mr. Mulla argued that the English Courts had declined to create easements of a new kind. There is really no easement of a new kind which is claimed in this suit. However, if the right comes within the four corners of the statutory definition of an easement whether it be a new one or novel one, the Court is bound to give effect to it.

In Simpson v. Mayor of Godmanchester (1) the question was considered by the Appeal Court. The right claimed in that case was a right to open in the times of flood certain river locks belonging to the plaintiff. By a deed of 1639 a predecessor of the plaintiff had granted to the Corporation the right that the miller, or other appointee of the Corporation, should open the locks in question in times of flood. Lord Herschell in his judgment at page 218* observes as follows:—

"It appears to me to be an easement within the definition of the term at the commencement of Mr. Gale's work on Easements, and I think that that is a perfectly correct definition. Easements may be of various characters, and it is a fallacy to suppose that every easement must be brought within some particular class which has been recognised, such as the class relating to water-courses, or light or air or otherwise. If a right is granted by the owner of land to another person to enter and to do something on the grantor's land for the benefit of the land of that other person that prima facie is an easement. And I do not see any reason why there should not be a perfectly valid easement in this right to go upon the land of the owner of locks or sluices, and in times of flood raise those locks or sluices to let the water down for the benefit of the land of the person who exercises the right."

The definition of "easement" in Gale on Easements is similar to the definition given in the Indian Easements Act. He defines it as a privilege without profit which the owner of one neighbouring tenement has of another, existing in respect of their several tenements by which the servient owner is obliged "to suffer or not to do" something on his own land for the advantage of the dominant owner.

Gale gives at page 27 of his book instances of affirmative easements as held by the English Courts; they include a right to place an advertisement hoarding on the servient land, or to place a sign-post on a common, or to place over neighbouring land clothes on lines or telephone wires.

(1) (1896) 1 Ch. 214.

In Moody v. Steggles (2) the question was whether the plaintiffs, the owners of a public-house, had the right to affix a sign-board to the wall of the defendants' house as the sign-board had been so affixed for upwards of 40 years. It was held that the easement claimed was a legal one, and that a grant of it by the defendants' predecessors-in-title to the plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title must be presumed. There the benefit was the advertisement of the public-house which was in a lane, and the sign-board, which was fixed on the wall of the defendants' house, gave that advertisement.

In my opinion, therefore, an easement could have been created in this case of the nature alleged by the defendants at the hearing.

The next question then is whether it is an easement of necessity coming under s. 13 (c) of the Indian Easements Act. The claim is based by the defendants on the fact that in 1902-1903 for a period of less than a year, the two properties were owned by a common owner. Before the common ownership, it appears that there was litigation between the then respective owners of the properties and that litigation was put an end to by the then owners of the defendants' property buying the other property. Within a year of such acquisition the common owners of these two properties conveyed the property of the plaintiffs to their predecessors-in-title with the covenant as mentiond by me hereinbefore. Nothing is mentioned in that covenant as to the transferors, the predecessors in-title of the defendants, having any right to enter upon the plaintiff's property or to erect a scaffolding upon the plaintiff's property, for the purpose of plastering or white-washing the wall abutting on the chouk of the defendants' property. But Mr. Bahadurji, in my opinion, rightly pointed out that if there was a right by way of an easement of necessity, no covenant was required to support it. Mr. Bahadurji gave me a reference in Indian Cases of a judgment of the Madras High Court where a right of the nature claimed in this suit was held to exist as an easement of necessity. I have not been able to get this judgment; so I do not know the reasoning on which the Court came to the conclusion; but after giving a careful consideration to the point, I have come to the definite conclusion that the right claimed here cannot be treated as an easement of necessity.

Now an easement of necessity is created under s. 13, sub-cls. (a), (c) and (d). An easement of necessity is not created merely when the easement is necessary, but when it is absolutely necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the dominant property. As pointed out in Chhotalal v. Devshankar (3) by Jenkins, C. J., the necessity contemplated in cls. (a), (c) and (d) of s. 13 of the Indian Easements Act is an absolute necessity; while in cl. (b) of the section, it is a qualified necessity. There the easement was claimed under s. 13, cl. (b), which is not classed as an easement of necessity under s. 13. The learned Chief Justice observes as follows (page 602*):—

"It is true that the lower Appellate Court has found that there was no necessity, but it is clear that the Judge in so deciding had in mind an absolute necessity such as is indicated in s. 13 (a), (c) and (d) and not a qualified necessity such as is contemplated in s. 13 (b). The distinction is obvious: thus a right of way may not be absolutely necessary, and yet necessary for the purpose of enjoying the property as it was enjoyed when a transfer of it took place."

This point is also dealt with in Esubai v. Damodar Ishvardas (4) and in Municipality of the City of Poona v. Vaman Rajaram Gholap (5). In the last case the person who claimed the right of way had another right of way to the property through his own land. It was contended that if the property had been sold to a third party, he would have been entitled to have a right of way through the defendant's land, that, therefore, although the plaintiff had a right of way through his own land, still the right of way through the defendant's land was a way of necessity. The learned Judge held that it was not so. The easement of necessity could only be created when it is absolutely necessary for the enjoyment of the dominant tenement. He says (page 800†):—

"If a stranger had bought, he would have got what is called a landlocked tenement, to which he could only obtain access over the land of his vendor or by trespassing on other people's property. But the defendant having bought could approach his new acquisition through his own premises, and it cannot, therefore, be said that in order to enjoy it, it was necessary for him to pass over his vendor's land."

The English cases and the observations in Gale on the point are to the same effect.

The question here is one of fact as to whether the right which is claimed is an easement of necessity for the beneficial enjoyment of the property of the defendants. In my opinion, it is not. It may be necessary for the purpose of such enjoyment that the wall should be plastered and white-washed, but it is not absolutely necessary. Admittedly, the common ownership of the two houses lasted for less than a year. The original wall of the defendants' house which abutted on the chowk was built by the owner of that house long prior to the time when the two houses came under common ownership, that is to say, the owner built the wall with knowledge that he ran the risk of not being allowed to go on the neigbouring property for the purpose of plastering or white-washing the wall. This state of affairs continued for a long number of years during which period the then owner of defendants' property could not have claimed as a matter of right to go on the plaintiff's chowk for the purpose of white-washing or repairing his said wall. Then, was the position changed in any way because for a period of less than a year the properties were owned by a common owner? Can it be said that during this period of less than a year the white-washing and plastering became so absolutely necessary that on the severance of the two tenements, the right to do so by going over plaintiff's property was created in favour of the owner of the defendants' property? There is no evidence at all of any such enjoyment of the right by the common owners during that particular period. The defendants cannot, therefore, say that by the mere fact of the properties having come under a common owner for a period of a year or so, a right, which otherwise could not have been considered absolutely necessary for the enjoyment of the property, became an easement of necessity. In my opinion, there is really no easement of necessity in this case, and, if my view is correct, there is an end to the defendants' case.

As to the evidence laid before me, I may point out here shortly that the evidence of the witnesses on behalf of the defendants has not impressed me at all as evidence of truthful witnesses. It may be that occasionally the wall was white washed and plastered by the men of the owner of the defendants' property going over the neighbouring chowk, but it must have been with the leave and license of the owner of the neighbouring property. As to the erection of the scaffolding by the defendants' men in the plaintiff's chowk, which led to the filing of this suit, I have no hesitation in accepting the evidence of Mr. Chinoy, the architect of the plaintiff, and rejecting the evidence of the witnesses on behalf of the defendants on the point. They have told a falsehood when they said that the scaffolding was there for nearly two years. The affidavit made by the original defendant in the suit on January 9, 1922 (Ex. B), puts the matter beyond any doubt. The scaffolding was in fact erected a few days before the filing of the suit. In my opinion, the oral evidence in the case does not affect the decision of the question in issue.

There will be a decree in favour of the plaintiff in terms of prayer B of the plaint, and costs of the suit, including costs reserved, if any.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Phillips and Ramesam, JJ.—The plaintiff (appellant) is the owner of a piece of land which lies on a higher level than the land of the defendant and he seeks to prevent the defendant from erecting a bund on his land, which has the effect of preventing the flow of surface water over the plaintiff's land on to the defendant's land which is its natural outlet. The lower Appellate Court following the ruling in [Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) has held that the defendant is entitled to prevent water flowing over his land by erecting a bund. It is now argued for the appellant that this decision in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) is only applicable to cases where the lands are situated within a town and he relies on subsequent cases of this Court, Ramaswamy v. Rasi (Sankarappa Naicker v. Pari Naicker) (2) and Gopala Kristna Yachendrulu Varu v. Secretary af State for India (3). In Ramaswamy v. Rasi (Sankarappa Naicker v. Pari Naicker) (2) the prior decision in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) was distinguished on the ground that it referred to land in a town and was, therefore, not applicable to agricultural land outside a town. The decision in Gopala Kristna Yachendrulu Varu v. Secretary of State for India (3) was with reference to the right to bund a natural stream and Seshagiri Iyer, J., prefers to base his decision on Illustration (h) of s. 7 of the Easements Act (V of 1882) rather than Illustration (i) which deals with surface water, Illustration (h) dealing with natural streams. He, however, adds that if the learned Judge in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) intended to lay down that the principle regarding the conflict of rights should be extended to agricultural areas in rural parts, he dissents from the proposition and Wallis, Offg. C. J., takes the same view. Subramania Iyer, J., in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) laid down the proposition that the natural right mentioned in Illustration (i), namely, "the right of every owner of upper land that water naturally rising in, or falling on, such land and not passing in defined channels, shall be allowed by the owner of adjacent lower land, to run naturally thereto," was not an absolute right but was the right to pass such water without incurring any liability for damages caused thereby and held that when that right came in conflict with the right mentioned in Illustration (a), namely, "the exclusive right of every owner of land in a town to build on such land, subject to any Municipal Law for the time being in force," the latter must prevail. If this proposition is correct, it would be illogical to hold that the natural right to pass water over a lower land cannot prevail in a town, whereas it must prevail in the country.

In s. 7 we have the definition of what an easement is, namely, "restriction of one or other of the following rights" which are mentioned. Because Illustration (a) mentions the right of an owner of land "in a town" to build on such land, it does not necessarily exclude the right of an owner of land in the country to build on such land. In fact s. 7 itself deals with the exclusive right of every owner of immoveable property, subject to any law for the time being in force, to enjoy and dispose of the same and also the right of every owner of immoveable property, subject to any law for the time being in force to enjoy without disturbance by another the natural advantage arising from its situation. Prima facie the owner of immoveable property is entitled to do what he pleases with his land and can only be restrained by law or by the superior right of some other person. There can be no distinction between such a right in a town and the same right in the country, unless it is subject to any law for the time being in force. We find it difficult to realise the distinction drawn between such rights in Ramaswamy v. Rasi (Sankarappa Naicker v. Pari Naicker) (2) and Gopala Kristna Yachendrulu Varu v. Secretary of State for India (3) unless there is some law or custom having the force of law which restricts the right in rural areas, but not in urban areas. The difficulties of cultivating land are referred to and it is suggested that owing to these difficulties the natural right of an owner of land to do on it what he pleases is subject to restrictions but this can only be if the restrictions are imposed by law or custom having the force of law. If the right of an owner to pass his surface water on to the lower land is an absolute right which the owner of the lower tenement cannot resist, it is undoubtedly an easement right enjoyed by him over the lower tenement but we find in the Act that the right is given as an illustration of a right against which an easement may be acquired, and is not described as being in itself an easement right. It is doubtful whether the Legislature would have given a right which is in itself an easement right as an illustration of a natural right in restriction of which an easement right can be acquired. We may mention that the observations in Gopala Kristna Yachendrulu Varu v. Secretary of State for India (3) with reference to Illustration (i) of s. 7 are abiter inasmuch as it was found in that case that the water which was interfered with was the water of natural stream. The decision, however, in Ramaswamy v. Rasi (Sankarappa Naicker v. Pari Naicker) (2) distinctly limits the proposition put forward in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) to urban areas although in the earlier judgment there is no language to lead one to suppose that the learned Judges meant to confine the decision to urban areas. They no doubt refer to Illustration (a) which deals with land in a town, but the right mentioned is only an illustration of the right referred to in s. 7 and does not exclude other rights ex jure naturæ appertaining to an owner of land. An owner of agricultural land is undoubtedly entitled to raise the level of his land if he so wishes, provided there exists no legal restriction to such act. It might thus happen that a lower land when raised would become higher in level than the adjacent land which had formerly been on a higher level. The right to pass water would thereby be reversed and the owner of the originally lower land would be entiled to pass water on to what was originally the higher land. If the owner of the lower land has such a right to raise his land over the whole of it, it is strange that he cannot raise the level over only a part, such raising having the effect of stopping the flow of water through the adjacent land but whether he has such right must depend on the extent of the right of the owner of the land which was originally higher. Three other authorities have been cited before us from other parts of India, the first being Ambica Saran Singh v. Debi Saran Singh (4) in which it was decided that the owner of higher land had the right to pass his surface water over lower land so long as it continued to be on a lower level, apparently dissenting from the decision in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) although in terms it does not purport to do so. In the other two cases of Calcutta and Patna respectively, the Easements Act does not apply Ramadhin Singh v. Jadunandan Singh (5) and Sarban v. Phudo Sahu (6). The former case is of no assistance here, for it merely deals with the right of a party to abstain from passing water falling on his land to the lower land and to callect it on his own land. The Patna case does not refer to any authorities and the Court came to the conclusion differing from that taken in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1).

Inasmuch as the authority of Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) which was followed in Sangana Reddiar v. Perumal Reddiar (7) has been questioned in Ramaswamy v. Rasi (Sankarappa Naicker v. Pari Naicker) (2) and Gopala Kristna Yachendrulu Varu v. Secretary of State for India (3) we think that it is advisable that the whole question should be considered by a Full Bench of this Court, and accordingly we refer the case to a Full Bench for decision.

This second appeal came on for hearing yesterday in pursuance of the said Order of Reference to a Full Bench. Upon Suryanarayana*, for the Appellant and Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Respondents, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court expressed the following OPINION.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—This appeal raises certain questions of fact with which we are not concerned. The question of law to which our attention has been directed is whether the owner of a plot of land on a lower level on to which water flows in the ordinary course of nature from adjacent land on a higher level is entitled in law so to deal with his land as to obstruct the escape of water from the higher land. It is said that any right which the owner of the higher land has is not in the nature of an easement and that terms such as dominant and servient tenements are inapplicable. That may be true in the abstract but it seems to me that the Privy Council and the House of Lords have clearly recognised a very close analogy between the two classes of cases and that if the owner of the land at the lower level raises an obstruction to the natural flow of the water, he will be restrained if it causes or tends to cause damage to the owner of that on the higher. Gibbons v. Lenfestey (8) is a direct authority of the Privy Council binding upon us. In the judgment of the Committee which was delivered by Lord Dunedin we have at page 57*.

"The right of the superior proprietor to throw natural water on the lower land is not an ordinary servitude to which this rule can apply. It is a natural right inherent in property; it is a question of nomenclature whether it is or is not called a servitude."

Later on we have "Where two contiguous fields belong to different proprietors, one of which stands upon higher ground than the other, nature itself may be said to constitute a servitude on the inferior tenement, by which it is obliged to receive the water that falls from the superior. If the water which would otherwise fall from the higher ground insensibly, without hurting the inferior tenement, should be collected into one body by the owner of the superior in the natural use of his property for draining or otherwise improving it, the owner of the inferior is, without the positive constitution of any servitude, bound to receive that body of water on his property." In Young v. Bankier Distillery Co., (9) Lord Watson says at page 696: "The right of the upper heritor to send down, and the corresponding obligation of the lower heritor to receive, natural water, whether flowing in a definite channel or not, and whether upon or below the surface, are incidents of property arising from the relative levels of their respective lands and the strata below them. The lower heritor cannot object so long as the flow, whether above or below ground, is due to gravitation unless it has been unduly and unreasonably, increased by operations which are in æmulationem vicini. But he is under no legal obligation to receive foreign water, brought to the surface of his neighbour's property by artifical means; and I can see no distinction in principle between water raised from a mine below the level of the surface of either property, which is the case here, and water artificially conveyed from a distant stream."

And then His Lordship quotes Lord Giffard in Blair v. Bunter Finlay & Co. (10) "although there is a natural servitude on lower heritors to receive the natural or surface water from higher grounds, the flow must not be increased by artificial means, although reasonable drainage operations are permissible."

The same principle clearly underlies the decision in Smith v. Kernick (11) and in that case Mr. Justice Crosswell in delivering the judgment of the Court said (page 565*).

"There are many cases in which the principle has been recognised, that one land-owner cannot, by altering the condition of his land, deprive the owner of the adjoining land of the privilege of using his own as he might have done before. Thus, he cannot by building a house near the margin of his land, prevent his neighbour from excavating his own land, although it may endanger the house; nor from building on his own land, although it may obstruct windows, unless, indeed, by lapse of time, the adjoining land has become subject to a right analogous to what in the Roman Law was called a servitude. So, also, in Acton v. Blundell (12),—where the subject was very much discussed,—the Court held that one land-owner, having dug a well on his own land, could not maintain an action against a party who afterwards sunk a coal-pit in the neighbourhood, which had the effect of drawing the water away from his well; the act not being done by the defendant negligently or maliciously, but in a proper manner, for the purpose of winning his own coal. We think that the same principle is applicable to the present case. The water is a sort of common enemy,—as was said by Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Commissioners of Sewers for Pagham (13),—against which each man must defend himself. And this is in accordance with the Civil Law, by which it was considered that the land on a lower level. owed a natural servitude to that on a higher, in respect of receiving, without claim to compensation, the water naturally flowing down to it."

This last case also touched on the distinction between natural and artificial accumulations of water which was later in 1898 made the basis of the celebrated decision in Rylands v. Fletcher (14). The reference seems to have been made on account of the conflict of views expressed in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) and Sangana Reddiar v. Perumal Reddiar (7) on the one hand and Ramaswamy v. Rasi (Sankarappa Naicker v. Pari Naicker) (2) on the other. The referring Bench in accepting the distinction drawn in Ramaswamy v. Rasi (Sankarappa Naicker v. Pari Naicker) (2) held that the decision in Mahamahopadyaya Rungachiariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) only referred to urban areas and we agree that no such distinction arises. It doubtless came from the accident. that Illustration (a) to s. 7 of the Easements Act instances a case of land in an urban area because it wishes to safeguard the statutory rights of urban authorities to restrict unapproved methods of dealing with land and buildings. In our opinion Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) was wrongly decided and the reasoning on which it is based is clearly at variance with the decisions of the Privy Council and the House of Lords to which we have referred; and the same observations apply to Sangana Reddiar v. Perumal Reddiar (7). It cannot be that the law recognises two inconsistent rights in adjacent owners, the exercise of one of which would necessarily destroy the other.

It was contended by the respondent that, if the argument of the appellant should be correct, the owner of the adjoining lands at a lower level would be prevented from improving their lands, but this is clearly not so, as the adjoining owner can improve his lands to any extent he pleases even to the extent of raising the level of his lands provided that he makes suitable arrangements for carrying off the water from his neighbour's land. We are confirmed in our view by the fact that the decision in Ramaswamy v. Rasi (Sankarappa Naicker v. Pari Naicker) (2) was referred to by the Privy Council in Mauug Bya v. Maung Kyi Nyo (15) with approval as being consistent with the authorities.

We refer the case back to the Division Bench for final disposal with this expression of opinion.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 602 OF 1925.

November 24, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Taraporewala.

THE PIONEER ALKALI WORKS LIMITED—PLAINTIFFS

versus

AMIRUDDIN SHALEBHOY TYEBJI—DEFENDANT.

Company—Shares, calls for—Resolution by Board of Directors—Time, place, amount and person, specification of.

Where the Articles of Association authorise the Directors of a Company to make calls upon the shareholders in respect of moneys unpaid, to the persons and at the time and place appointed by the Board, the Directors must, when they make a call, fix and appoint by resolution the amount to be paid, the time and place of payment and the person to whom the same should be paid. Any failure to comply with the above requirements can be remedied by any subsequent issue of notice. [p. 684, col. 1.]

In the absence of any such provisions in the Articles of Association, the fact that the amount of the call is fixed by the terms of the issue of the shares cannot be treated as creating an obligation on the share-holders to pay such amount as and by way of a call. [ibid.]

Mr. Munshi, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. B. J. Wadia, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—In the first suit the plaintiff Company claim to recover from the defendant a sum of Rs. 3,058-7-7 with interest thereon alleging that the said amount is due by the defendant as the share-holder in the plaintiff Company in respect of the third call alleged to have been made by the plaintiff Company. The only issue in the suit is whether the call was legally made and is binding on the defendant under the Articles of Association the Company.

There was one resolution passed by the Directors making the second and the third calls. That resolution is as follows:—

"Resolved that the second (or the first as the case may be) call be made on June 30, 1922, and the third (or the second as the case may be) call be also made payable two months after that date."

Article 38 of the Articles of Association provides for the making of calls in the following terms:—

"The Board may, from time to time, make such calls upon the share-holders in respect of all moneys for the time being unpaid on their shares as the Board think fit, and every share-holder shall be liable to pay the amount of every call to the persons, and at the time and place appointed by the Board; provided that no amount shall be called up in respect of any share to an extent in excess of the amount called up in respect of the rest of the issued or allotted shares for the time being."

Then Art. 40 provides for the notice of the call being given, and Art. 41 provides that a call shall be deemed to have been made at the time when the resolution of the Board authorizing the call was passed.

The plaintiffs originally claimed interest on the amount of the calls, but they have abandoned that claim.

Now Art. 38 is in the same terms as the usual Article which now appears in the Articles of Association of Companies. The question as to what is a proper resolution for making a call under an Article framed as here is considered in In re Cawley & Co. (1). In that case no time or place of payment was appointed in the original resolution of December 18. The time and place of payment were appointed by a resolution of January 17 following. It was held by the Appeal Court that there was no proper call made until the second resolution fixing the time and place for payment. The head-note at pages 209 and 210* is not accurate as will appear from the following observations of Lord Esher, M. R., at page 228*, in which the other two Lords of Appeal concurred:—

"In order to make a call within the Articles of Association, we must see what is necessary to be done to make a call. In the first place, there must be a resolution of the Directors. They cannot do such a thing as make a call without a resolution. Then, what is to be done in passing a resolution to make a call? Article 38 says the time and place for payment must be stated...Therefore, there could be no valid call in this Company until the time and place for its payment had been appointed by the Board; that is to say, until it had been resolved by the Directors that the call should be payable in certain instalments and in a certain manner and at a certain time appointed by the Board. The Article says, 'as shall be appointed from time to time.' I take those words to mean this; that the Directors are not bound to make a call of the whole of the unpaid capital, but that they may make a call of part only, and that at another time they may deal with the rest, so that there may be successive calls until the whole of the capital has been paid up...but, if there is a resolution passed that a call shall be made, and afterwards, on a subsequent day, a further resolution is passed naming a time and place for payment, the utmost that can be said is, that the two resolutions taken together make a valid call, but that there is no call until the latter day."

The question was also discussed in Johnson v. Lyttle's Iron Agency (2). There in the judgment of the first Court, Jessel, M. R., held that there was no objection to the call which could be sustained on the ground which was taken, viz., that the time for payment was not mentioned in the original resolution and the same was inserted therein afterwards by the Secretary. It was assumed by Jessel, M. R. that that must have been done with the authority of the Directors. The Appeal Court came to the contrary conclusion. Lord Justice James observes at page 694* as follows:—

"It was the established rule of the Court of Chancery and of the Courts of Common Law that no forfeiture of property could be made unless every condition precedent had been strictly and literally complied with. A very little inaccuracy is as fatal as the greatest. Here the notice is inaccurate. It is, therefore, bad, and the forfeiture is invalid. I may add that, as at present advised, I think that the time for the payment of the call could not properly be fixed by a mere verbal direction to the Secretary; it ought to be fixed by a formal resolution of the Directors."

Mr. Munshi for the plaintiffs relied on the judgment in Sheffield and Manchester Railway Co. v. Woodcock (3). In that case none of the resolutions making the calls specified the place where or the person to whom payment was to be made; but shortly after the passing of each of the resolutions, notices were inserted in the local newspapers pursuant to the directions of the Act of Parliament, signed "by order of the Directors" by the clerk and Secretary, stating that "the Directors having resolved to make a call" for an instalment of...per share, the proprietors were required to pay the said call on or before etc., to some one of the under-mentioned bankers. It was contended that the time and place of payment of the calls ought to have been specified in the resolutions in order to entitle the Company to recover them. Parke B., in delivering the judgment of the Court, observes as follows (page 587†):—

"There appears to us to be nothing in the 115th section, nor in any other part of the Act, which requires the Directors to fix the person to whom and the place where the payment is to be made, at the same time that they resolve that a call shall be made, and as part of the same resolution. It seems to us to be open to them to fix such person, as well as the time and place of payment, at a different period, and by a distinct act. A question indeed may arise in some cases, where there has been a change of proprietorship by transfer, what is the time of making a call, which fixes the liability of the then proprietor of a share under the 118th section and which prevents the free transfer of a share under the 127th section; whether it is to date from the original resolution, from the time of fixing the mode of payment, of giving notice in the newspapers, or even from the period when the calls become due. ...All that we have to determine now is, that the Directors may fix the time, place, and manner of payment, after the original resolution has been made, and by a distinct act."

The judgment proceeds entirely upon the construction of the section of the Act in that case, and on the proved fact that the Directors had, subsequent to the passing of the resolution, appointed the place where and the person to whom the payment was to be made.

The time of payment is mentioned in the resolution before me but the defect which the defendant points out is in respect of the amount, the place of payment, and the person to whom the same was to be paid, which are not mentioned in the resolution. Mr. Munshi has argued that the amount of the calls was fixed when the new issue of capital, to which the defendant subscribed, was resolved upon by the Company. The Company then gave authority to the Directors to fix the manner in which the new capital should be paid by the subscribers. The Directors accordingly resolved that the new capital should be paid by calls of Rs. 5 which were not to be made before a certain interval had elapsed. Mr. Munshi says that that resolution ought to be read with the resolution in making the second and third calls, that the amount of the call having been fixed in the first resolution, it cannot be said that the amount was not fixed by a resolution of the Directors, and that taking the two resolutions together, there was a valid and binding call made on the subscribers so far as the amount of the call was concerned.

Now, there is no doubt that the shareholders are bound by the Articles of Association, and the Memorandum of Association and nothing else in the absence of any special agreement. Even if in the prospectus the amount of the calls was stated to be fixed at a certain figure, the same would not create a liability in the nature of a call. Palmer in his Company Precedents, 12th Edition, Part I, at page 628 says as follows:—

"In the absence of a special provision in the Memorandum or Articles, or any special agreement as to payment, a subscriber to the Memorandum of Association, like an ordinary share-holder, is not liable to pay anything in respect of the shares subscribed for by him until calls are duly made on him."

Then, in the form of the Articles given by Palmer, he specifically provides for a case like the present in Art. 21 (a) at page 630 in the following terms:—

"If by the terms of issue of any share or otherwise any amount is made payable at any fixed time or by instalments at fixed times, whether on account of the amount of the share or by way of premium, every such amount or instalment shall be payable as if it were a call duly made by the Directors and of which due notice had been given, and all the provisions herein contained in respect of calls shall relate to such amount or instalment accordingly."

In the absence of any such provision in the Articles of Association, the fact that the amount of a call is fixed by the terms of the issue of the shares, cannot be treated as creating an obligation on the shareholder to pay such amount as and by way of call. It is something quite distinct from the process of making a call whereby alone the liability to pay the amount is created. Under Art. 38, the Directors must, when they make a call, fix and appoint by resolution the amount to be paid, the time and place of payment and the person to whom the same should be paid. The fact that in this case there is a resolution of the Directors fixing the amount of the calls, when they fixed the manner in which the capital of the new issue should be paid, does not differentiate this case from a case where the amount of the calls is fixed by the prospectus. It has been held that, notwithstanding any such provision, a Company can make even a call in excess of the amount so fixed at the time of the issue, and certainly can make a call for a lesser amount. The share-holder, therefore, on whom the call is made is entitled to know from the resolution making the call, the amount which the Directors have resolved to ask for in respect of that particular call. It is to be noted that in the resolution for the first call passed by the Directors in respect of the new issue, the amount of the call viz., Rs. 5, is mentioned.

In my opinion, there cannot be any distinction between the other requirements of the Article regarding the call. I do not see on what principle it can be argued that although the place is not mentioned in the resolution, it is sufficient if it is subsequently mentioned in the notice, but that if the time is not mentioned in the resolution, it would invalidate the call. As observed by Lord Justice James, in Johnson v. Lyttle's Iron Agency (2) every requirement is of the same importance whether it is a small or a big one, and, therefore, if the place is not mentioned in the resolution it cannot be contended that because it is mentioned in the notice it is sufficient. There is no evidence before me to show that, so far as the second and third calls are concerned, the Directors ever resolved that the amount of the calls should be Rs. 5 each or that they should be paid at a particular place or to a particular person. Even if Mr. Munshi's argument as to the amount of the call having been fixed by the resolution at the time of issue of new capital be correct, neither the place of payment nor the person to whom the payment was to be made was appointed by a resolution of the Directors. Mr. Potdar, who gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs, did not make any allegation to that effect.

Under these circumstances, I must hold that the second and third calls were not validly made, and the plaintiffs' suit must be dismissed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2171 OF 1922.

May 26, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir N. R. Chatterjea, KT., and Mr. Justice Cuming.

CHANDI CHARAN MITRA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

ASHUTOSH LAHIRI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Lease—Second lease for convenient use of land under first lease—Presumption as to incidents of second lease—Indefinite tenancy, duration of—Yearly rent—Presumption as to nature of tenancy.

Where a land is taken on lease for the convenient use and occupation of other premises already taken under a lease, there is no presumption that incidents of the first lease also attach to the second.

The question whether a lease for an indefinite term enures for the life of the grantee and cannot be put an end to by a notice to quit, depends upon the terms of the lease.

In the absence of anything to show the contrary an agreement to pay annual rent indicates that the tenancy is yearly.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rungpur, dated the 6th May 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, Rungpur, dated the 19th May 1921.

Mr. Rishindra Nath Sarkar (with him Babu Sudhangsusekhar Mukherjee), for the Appellant.

Mr. Girijaprasanna Sanyal (with him Babu Phanindra Lal Maitra), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Chatterjea, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment of the defendant after notice to quit. The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff and that decree has been affirmed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court.

The defendant has appealed to this Court and four contentions have been raised before us.

The first is that the land in suit was taken settlement of for the purpose of enlarging the compound of the house in which his predecessor-in-title was residing, that he had a permanent tenancy in the house; and that the incidents of that tenancy would apply to the disputed land also as it was taken for the purpose of enlarging the compound of the house. We do not, however, think that that would follow. A man may have a permanent right to a piece of land, but he would not necessarily have the same right to another piece of land adjoining it.

The next point taken is, that the two holdings were amalgamated because one rent-receipt was granted in respect of both. But they have been mentioned as two distinct jamas and we do not think there was any amalgamation of these two tenancies.

The third point is that the lease was for an indefinite term and that, therefore, it enures for the life of the grantee and it cannot be put an end to by a notice to quit. Whether it is so or not, depends upon the terms of the document and in this particular case there is nothing to show that it comes within that principle. An annual rent was payable and in the absence of anything to show the contrary it indicates that it was a yearly tenancy. Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that "in the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary, a lease of immoveable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by six months' notice expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy". There is nothing in this case to show that it does not come within s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The last contention is that the notice to quit is bad as it did not expire with the end of the year of the tenancy. The lease was granted on the 28th Pous, 1306 corresponding to 11th January 1900. The notice to quit was served on the 9th July, 1919, to vacate the land within the 11th January. The suit was instituted on the 9th October 1920. The Court below found that the tenancy commenced on the 11th January and the year of the tenancy extended to the 10th January of the next year.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has relied upon some rent receipts showing that rent was paid according to the Bengali year and has contended that that being so the year of the tenancy did not extend to the 10th January but to the last day of the Bengali year. It is not clear that this question was raised in the Court below, because there is no reference to it in the judgment of the lower Court; and, if we were to direct a remand to the Court below for a determination of this question it would lead to further litigation; and if the notice is found to be bad the defendant will have ultimately to quit after proper service of notice to quit. In these circumstances the learned Advocate for the respondent has agreed to give up costs and also to give the appellant time to vacate the land in question within six months from this date.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal and direct that each party do bear his own costs in all the Courts. There will be a direction in the decree that the defendant must vacate the land in suit within six months from this date.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 3112 OF 1917.
March 12, 1926.
Present:—Mr. Justice Martineau.
MUIN-UD-DIN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
ABUL KHAIR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS RESPONDENTS.

Procedure—Decree against minor in second appeal—Decree set aside—Second appeal, re-hearing of.

Where a decree in second appeal passed by the High Court is set aside on the ground that a minor respondent was not duly represented by a guardian ad litem, the second appeal would be re-heard.

Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass, 36 Ind. Cas. 366; 39 A. 8; 14 A. L. J. 818, referred to.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 11th August 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, Second Class, Hissar, dated the 17th July 1916.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought a suit in which they asked for several injunctions against the 1st defendant Nur Mustafa. The Trial Court gave them a decree in full but on appeal the District Judge set aside one of the injuctions, namely, in regard to the demolition of a wall and a room built by the defendant, and held that although these were new erections and they narrowed the way to which the parties were entitled the relief to be given to the plaintiffs should take the form of compensation. The plaintiffs filed a second appeal in the Court. It was heard ex parte and Mr. Justice LeRossignol accepted it and restored the decree of the first Court.

During the pendency of the appeal in the Court Nur Mustafa had died, and his sons, one of whom, Niaz Mohammad, was a minor, were impleaded in his place. They brought a suit to have the decree of this Court set aside on the ground that Niaz Mohammad had not been properly represented by a guardian. They succeeded in the suit and the decree of this Court was declared to be null and void as against them. The second appeal which the plaintiff had filed in this Court has consequently to be re heard [Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass (1).] A guardian has been duly appointed for the minor Niaz Mohammad, but no appearance has been made for the respondents. I have heard Counsel for the appellants and have come to the same conclusion at which Mr. Justice LeRossignol arrived, namely, that the plaintiffs claim should have been decreed in full, and for the reasons given in Mr. Justice LeRossignol's judgment I accept the appeal and restore the decree of the Trial Court with costs throughout.

R. L. Appeal accepted.

CROSS-APPEALS NOS. 337 OF 1922 AND 67 OF 1923.
July 29 and August 25, 1921.
Present:—Mr. Justice Marten and Mr. Justice Fawcett.
KESARLAL GIRDHARILAL DESAI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS, IN APPEAL NO. 337 OF 1922.
JAGUBHAI HIRALAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS IN APPEAL NO. 67 OF 1923.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 18—Partition suit—Interest, whether can be allowed—Hindu Law, interpretation of—Mayukha—Succession—Sons of deceased brother, whether entitled to succeed along with brothers.

In a suit for partition the Court has power, after a preliminary decree has been passed, to award interest, although the preliminary decree does not make any mention of interest. [p. 687, col. 2; p. 689, col. 1.]

In the administration of the Hindu Law it is not the literal meaning of the original text that is to be looked to. Though commentators may have been wrong in their interpretation of an original text their opinion should be enforced as having the sanction of usage. [p. 692, col. 1.]

In the Mayukha the sons of pre-deceased brothers succeed along with surviving brothers to the estate o a deceased Hindu. [ibid.]

(1) 36 Ind. Cas. 366; 39 A. 8; 14 A. L. J. 818.

These cross-appeals arise out of a suit for partition for family property filed as long ago as 1893, in which a preliminary decree was passed (as modified in appeal) for taking accounts since 1870. Accounts were taken and a report submitted in 1907. The defendants then made over certain lands to the plaintiffs. The report coming up before the Trial Court, and on appeal before the High Court, the latter directed the accounts to be submitted down to 1907. The Commissioner after compliance with the above order submitted his report in 1919 and after reference to the Court made his final report in 1921. In the meantime Himat Lal died in 1902, after bequeathing his share to his wife who was brought on to the record as the representative of her husband. In 1905 she sold his share to defendants Nos. 1 and 2, she died in 1917, and in 1918 plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 applied to the Court stating that they and the defendants were entitled to the property of Himat Lal as his reversioners. The Trial Court confirmed the Commissioner's report, upheld the sale-deed in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and referred the parties to apply for a Succession Certificate with respect to the right to succeed to the profits accruing from the estate of Himat Lal, prior to the sale-deed in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Messrs. G. S. Rao and H. V. Divatia, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. H. Mehta, G. N. Thakor and N. K. Mehta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J. (July 29, 1924).—[His Lordship after dealing with facts of the case discussed the question of interest thus:—] Next it was argued that as a matter of law we were unable to direct interest to be paid. Mr. Rao cited to us several decisions of the Privy Council based on the law or the practice which was in force prior to the present practice and to the practice which regulated to the decisions of the Court at the time when these proceedings were originally heard. I may note in passing that in one judgment their Lordships followed a particular rule, not because they themselves were in favour of it but because it represented practically the unanimous decisions of all the High Courts in India, and, therefore, in face of that unanimous opinion they were not prepared to set it aside, and declare that those decisions were all wrong. But in fact by alteration in the rules those decisions have been rendered obsolete.

Now we have not here a suit for possession of immoveable property and for rent or mesne profits as in O. XX, r. 12. In that class of suits it is quite easy for a plaintiff to ask at the trial for interest when he gets his decree for possession. If he does not then ask for mesne profits, one can quite understand that he may be debarred thereafter from getting them. But the suit before us is governed partly by O. XX, r. 18, which provides for making preliminary decrees for the partition of property, and for giving such further directions as may be required. We are now on what I may call further consideration, and I think we may give such further directions as are necessary to work out the accounts and adjust the rights of the parties between themselves. What then about interest?

Now in the present case if it is open to us to award interest on this money, I should unhesitatingly do so having regard to the conduct of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 which the Commissioner has so adversely commented on and with which comments I entirely agree. I may also say that under the rule of Damdupat, which admittedly applies here, the Hindu Law has foreseen the possibilities of what I have called the longevity of Indian litigation. The rule works very usefully here, because if one takes interest at the normal Court rate of 6 per cent. then after approximately 16⅔ years' delay you reach your 100 per cent. and no more interest can be obtained by a plaintiff. So approximately if you take the date of October 1907 when the possession in this case was given and when this sum in question was due from the defendants, we have just about 16⅔ years' interest up to the present date. Consequently as a matter of arithmetic it is sufficient to debit the defendants with interest on the sums found due from them as at October 1907 and to disregard complications as to the interest prior to that date. Even taking that date, they have got off some fourteen years' interest from the date of the suit, to say nothing about interest due prior to that date.

Therefore it seems to me—and I wish to make this distinction perfectly clear—that we should not debit the defendants with interest on the profits received by them year by year up to 1907, but should debit them with the final sum found due from them by the Commissioner at the proper date, viz, 1907, and with interest thereon to the present date. In my opinion we have jurisdiction to do that in this case. In this connection I again want to point out the difference which exists between a case where a Court can only grant a preliminary decree, and a case in which the main rights can be ascertained at the trial. In Daniell's Chancery Practice, 7th Edition, Volume I, page 950, I find it stated:—

"A party may be charged with interest at the hearing upon further consideration, although the question has not been reserved by the original judgment; and not only may the computation of simple interest be so directed, but, where the Court finds large sums of money in the hands of an agent, Receiver, trustee or personal representative, it may direct balances from time to time in the hands of the accounting party to be ascertained, and interest to be computed on them. The Court has even gone the length of charging an accounting party with interest on the balance in his hands on further consideration, not only where there was no reservation of the question of interest by the original decree but even where there was not originally any claim that he might be so charged, and where the circumstances were such that a claim for interest existed, and was known to exist, at the time of the institution of the suit."

Then Burland v. Earle & Sons (1) was a Canadian appeal where the appellant had been ordered to re-pay money in excess of his salary as Manager of the Company. There Lord Davey in delivering the judgment of their Lordships said:—

"Their Lordships do not doubt the power of the Court on further directions to order payment of interest on a sum found due from a defendant, although the decree declaring the liability contains no direction for payment of interest or the statement of claim does not ask for it. In a case like the present one the plaintiffs are not entitled as of right to interest, and the liability for payment of interest is a matter for the discretion of the Court, and depends largely on the view which the Court may take as to the conduct of the defendant to be charged and the circumstances under which the liability for payment of the principal sum was incurred."

Then on going into the facts of that case their Lordships were of opinion that as the Order in Council intentionally omitted to make an order as to interest, therefore, the Court below had no discretion in that particular case to allow interest and consequently the claim for interest was over-ruled.

I may also refer to In re Salvin, Worsley v. Marshall (2) where Mr. Justice Eve went into the practice of allowing interest upon the arrears of an annuity, and after pointing out that there was a difference between an administration suit and a mortgage suit in that respect, he directed on further consideration that the arrears of an annuity should carry interest.

There is another line of authority which is exemplified in Turner v. Burkinshaw (3) where Lord Chelmsford pointed out that usually, unless fraud is proved, an agent is not charged with interest on the moneys in his hands, except from the date of the certificate. It will, however, be remembered that in the present case the original report or certificate was in 1907, and that it is mainly by reason of the subsequent appellate judgment directing the accounts to be carried back still further, that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have been enabled to delay the proceedings in this way.

Then there is a recent case of Ramaswami Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (4). This was a partition suit, which in the length of its proceedings was somewhat similar to the present one because it was instituted in 1895, and the learned Judges in the Madras High Court were deciding the question of interest in 1922. There the claim for interest was disallowed, and their Lordships referred to some of the English authorities. But there was this material difference of fact, which is pointed out by Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao. He says (page 54*):—

"As my learned brother has pointed out, it cannot be said in this case that the 2nd defendant was bound to invest the profits. The plaintiff had the conduct of the suit and it was quite open to him at any moment to ask for possession of the properties, for an account of the profits and for payment to him of the sum ascertained to be due. The delay is not attributable solely to the 2nd defendant, and the plaintiff has failed to show any grounds for making the 2nd defendant liable for interest."

Here the plaintiffs got actual possession in 1907, but long before that, viz., in 1893 had asked for accounts and for payment of the sum due to them and also for interest. Therefore the Madras case seems to me quite a different one from the one which we have before us.

Accordingly, after giving my best consideration to the arguments which have been advanced, I hold, first, that in the circumstances of this particular case we have power to award interest; secondly, that it is a case in which if we have the power, undoubtedly interest ought to be allowed; and thirdly, that it ought to be awarded on the basis of interest due on the sums found due from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as at October 1907, the date down to which the account has been ordered to be taken by the Appellate Court.

The result, therefore, is that in effect, owing to the rule of Damdupat, we arrive at precisely the same sum as was awarded by the learned Judge, and I do not propose that the figures that he has given should in any way be altered. We think that the sum he has awarded is the correct sum, and that if there should be any slight variation in rupees or pies it should be adjusted so as to make the aggregate sum for interest amount to 100 per cent. Accordingly our finding is that the sum he has allowed is correct, although we allow it for different reasons.

Fawcett, J.—I agree generally with the conclusions of my learned brother, and the reasons that he has given for them.

I will only add a few remarks on one or two points. As to the question about interest awarded against the defendants, this is clearly not a case where a decree can be said to have been passed for the payment of money, that is to say, a definite sum of money, falling under s. 34 of the C. P. C. so as to make sub-s. (2) of the section applicable to the present case. I quite agree with my learned brother that there is no ground for holding that the decree passed originally by the Subordinate Judge in 1894, and the subsequent judgment of this Court in regard to that decree, are intentionally silent on this point of interest, so that such interest must be taken to have been refused. It seems to me to be a case clearly on all fours with the authorities cited by my learned brother, especially the Privy Council case of Burland v. Earle and Sons (1), where their Lordships held that the Court has the requisite authority to pass orders making interest payable by the defendant, although the decree declaring the liability contained no direction for payment of interest.

This case is one that arose under the old Code. The plaintiffs are seeking to execute the original decree which, amongst other things directed an account to be taken of the income divisible between the plaintiffs and the defendants. And so far as regards the Darkhast of 1902 they asked for execution of that decree by having accounts taken. The case is one falling under s. 51 of the present C. P. C. under which the Court may grant execution in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require. But the position really is analogous to what the present Code recognises, namely, that a preliminary decree be first passed for the taking of an account, and then a final decree be passed when that account has been taken. The case would be entirely governed by O. XX, r. 18, of the present Code, under which the Court may give such further directions as may be required.

Now the case of taking an account under the particular rule is similar to the case of taking an account in a decree in an administration suit and that is governed by O. XXI, r. 30. We have for our guidance Forms Nos. 17 and 18 of the Appendix D to the C. P. C. of decrees in the case of a preliminary decree in an administration suit, and a final decree in an administration suit by a legatee. If those forms are looked at, it will be seen that the Legislature does recognise that although the preliminary decree does not contain any direction as to interest on the amount a defendant may be found accountable for, yet in the final decree interest may be awarded against him. In Form No. 17, item No 7, there is a direction that the defendant should pay into Court all sums of money which may be found to have come to his hands, etc. There is nothing in the different heads of this Form which mentions the word" interest," and finally the Commissioner is directed to report the result of the enquiries and the accounts and all other acts ordered and have his certificate ready for inspection of the parties on a certain date.

Then when we come to Form No. 18, head No. 1, we find the Form contemplating the Court making an order against a defendant not only as regards the amount certified by the Commissioner but also for the sum of Rs...for interest from a certain date to a certain date. I think that is a clear indication that the Legislature intended to allow a subsequent order for the payment of interest of the kind referred to in the Privy Council case that I have already mentioned." The omission to mention interest in Form No. 17 does not appear to be due to oversight, because we find the word "interest" mentioned in the form of preliminary decree in an administration suit given in Form No. 19: see item No. 3. The forms with regard to preliminary decree and final decree in suits for dissolution of partnership do not throw any light on this question, because the ordinary rule is that in taking partnership accounts interest is not allowed from one partner to another.

The case is very much like one where the Court refers the matter to the Commissioner for taking an account, and the ordinary form on the Original Side says: "Further directions and further costs reserved." It does not make any specific direction about interest, but the further directions would cover any subsequent direction on that point.

Messrs. R. W. Desai and M. H. Mehta, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. B. D. Mehta), Messrs. G. S. Rao and H. V. Divatia, for the Defendants.

The appeal was decided in the terms of the judgments given above. The judgment on cross-appeal was delivered as under:—

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J. (August 25, 1924.)—We have already disposed, on July 29, of Appeal No. 337 of 1922 apart from the question of costs, and have also dealt with some of the points raised in Appeal No. 67 of 1923. We have since heard full arguments on the remaining points in Appeal No. 67 of 1923 and also Civil Application No. 523 of 1924.

Under the rulings of the Court already given, a one-fifth share in the income, the subject-matter of the accounts directed by the preliminary decree of 1894 as subsequently varied by the orders of the Appellate Court, devolves on the original defendant No. 3, Himatlal, or his assigns or personal representatives. If one looks at the pedigree, it will be observed that Himatlal was one of five brothers; three of whom, viz., Girdharlal, Bhagubhai and Jaswantrai predeceased him, and one, namely, Hiralal, the original plaintiff No. 1, survived him. It will also be seen that Himatlal died in 1902 leaving a widow Chaturba who died in September, 1917. It is alleged that Himatlal left a Will in favour of Chaturba under which she was his universal legatee and devisee, and that Chaturba in her turn passed a sale-deed in respect of this one-fifth share to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 dated March 8, 1905. It is common ground that this sale-deed only affected the income after March 8, 1905. Accordingly as the accounts directed by the Court extended from 1870 up to 1907 when possession of the land was given up by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, it follows that the sums found due in respect of this one-fifth share may have to be apportioned so that the amount up to March 8, 1905, passes to the representatives of Himatlal or Chaturba, and the amount accruing after March 8, 1905, passes to the purchasers under the sale-deed of 1905.

All these points are contested. The present plaintiffs Nos. 1—4 all contest the validity of the Will and also the validity of the sale-deed as regards the moneys after 1905. But as regards the moneys prior to 1905 the present plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 join with defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in contending that on Chaturba's death these moneys passed to the surviving brother and the sons of the deceased brothers of Chaturba's husband Himatlal The present plaintiff No. 1, however, contends that Hiralal as the sole surviving brother alone takes these moneys and that his nephews are not entitled to share with him.

[After dealing with an objection as to jurisdiction the learned Judge proceeded :—]

In the result, therefore, I think we have jurisdiction to determine who are now entitled to this one-fifth share, and to say in what shares and proportions we should pass a final decree for payment of that share amongst the parties so entitled.

That being so, the first question arises about the Will of Himatlal which is Ex. 357 and is dated October 12, 1902.

[Here his Lordship discussed the evidence on the point and concluded :—]

In my judgment, therefore, the Will, Ex. 357, was rightly held by the learned Judge to be the last Will and testament of Himatlal. That being so, this one-fifth share passed under that Will to Himatlal's widow Chaturba.

That brings us next to the sale-deed, Ex. 358, which was passed by Chaturba in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

...In my opinion there is really no ground here for contesting the validity of this deed. Accordingly we hold that so much of Himatlal's one-fifth share of income as accrued after the date of this sale-deed passed thereunder to the purchasers defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

There yet remains the question whether Himatlal's nephews are entitled to share along with their uncle Hiralal, or whether Hiralal alone takes so much of Himatlal's one-fifth share as did not pass under the sale-deed, Ex. 358. I have had the advantage of reading the judgment which my brother Fawcett has prepared on that point, and I need only say that I concur in it. Our final conclusions on these appeals will be stated after that judgment has been delivered.

Fawcett, J.—I agree with my learned brother in upholding the findings of the lower Court as to the Will of Himatlal (Ex. 357) and the sale-deed (Ex. 358)....

The dispute resolves itself into one whether under the Law of Succession contained in the Mayukha, which is the leading authority in the Province of Gujarat, whence the parties come, the sole heir of Himatlal was Hiralal, his only surviving brother, or whether the nephews of Himatlal, plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the sons of predeceased brothers, are entitled to share along with Hiralal, as if their fathers had survived Himatlal. The son of the deceased plaintiff No. 1, namely Jagubhai, puts forward the former contention, while plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contend that they are entitled, as nephews, to share in the succession.

It is common ground that, although it is now a question of the legal representation of Bai Chaturba (who as already mentioned), was brought on the record as the legal representative of Himatlal, the original defendant No. 3, this only entails a question of heirship to her husband Himatlal, for the marriage between Himatlal and Chaturba being presumably in an approved form, and Chaturba having died leaving no issue, her stridhan inherited from her husband goes to his and not her, heirs. There is no dispute on this point. The sole question, therefore, before us is whether Hiralal was entitled to succeed to Chaturba's stridhan alone, or whether the nephews, being sons of predeceased brothers, are entitled to share along with plaintiff No. 1.

This question turns upon the meaning of para. 17 of s. 8 of Ch. IV of the Vyavahara Mayukha, and there is a dispute as to the correct translation of this paragraph. According to the translations of Messrs. Borrodaile and Stopes, the sons of brothers share the inheritance, without any restriction as to their father being alive at the death of their uncle, and the rule has accordingly been taken to be a general one that the sons of a deceased brother succeed along with the surviving brother or brothers. The translation, however, of the same passage made by Messrs. Mandlik, Jamietram and Gharpure, limits the right to the case where the father of any nephew was alive at the death of the paternal uncle, and allows such a nephew to take the share of his father on a division with the other paternal uncles.

Before us no expert evidence has been adduced as to which of these two translations is correct, nor has there been any detailed discussion on this point. In any case it would obviously be difficult for us, without a knowledge of Sanskrit, to decide which translation is to be preferred. I understand on good authority that the difference between the two translations turns upon whether an unexpressed negative should be read into one or two words, which are in this passage, and that Sanskrit allows a negative to be read in or the reverse, according to the context. There is, therefore, obviously room for legitimate difference of opinion as to the correct translation. In view of this it seems to me that in considering this question as it arises before us, we should be mainly governed by the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (5) where their Lordships, after stating that the different commentaries had given rise to the different schools of law, say (page 436*):—

"The duty, therefore, of an European Judge who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law, is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, (Smritis), as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the District with which he has to deal, and has there been sanctioned by usage. For, under the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law."

Similarly in Muthukaruppa Pillai v. Sellathammal (6) it is observed: It is not the literal meaning of the original text that has to be looked to in the administration of Hindu Law. Though commentators may have been wrong in their interpretation of an original text, their opinion should be enforced as having the sanction of usage.

No doubt this principle has reference primarily to ancient commentaries: but in a case like the present I think it can almost equally be applied to usage based on an interpretation accepted by modern commentators. In the present case, we have the fact that undoubtedly for a long time it has been accepted as a rule laid down by the Mayukha that the sons of full brothers succeed with full brothers and in Chandika Bakhsh v. Muna Kuar (7) this was accepted as being a definite rule in cases governed by the Mayukha. It is true that the translation there referred to was Stokes', and that there was no discussion, and, therefore, no decision, on the point now before us. On the other hand, the fact remains that this was taken as a definite rule, and the case affords a strong instance of usage. Practically all the modern commentators accept without any questioning this particular rule (see, for instance, Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th Edition, page 834; Trevelyan's Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 391; Mulla's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, page 91; and even Gharpure's Hindu Law. 1921 Edition, page 307). Again in Haribhai Gulab v. Mathura Lallu (8) Shah, J., who himself comes from Gujarat, treats the rule as unquestioned. Russell, J., in Haridas v. Ranchordas (9) also follows the interpretation of the rule accepted in the Privy Council case I have already mentioned. The construction which the learned Judge there gives to "the share of their father" in the translation that was furnished to him, is no doubt open to criticism; but, on the other hand, this case affords a definite judicial recognition of the rule about all nephews sharing in the succession, and no subsequent case has been cited where this interpretation has been questioned.

The only commentators who appear to favour the view put forward by Mr. Ramdutt Desai for plaintiff No. 1 are Messrs West and Majid, who in the 4th Edition of West and Bühler's Hindu Law, at page 104, limit the right of a nephew to succeed to the particular case of his father being alive when the succession opens, but dying before the partition of the estate takes place; and it is added that "Representation is not recognised in the case of a predeceased brother who has left sons. These nephews are excluded by their surviving uncles. It is only on the complete failure of brothers of the deceased that brothers' sons succeed to him.". In a foot-note on the same page it is stated:—

"Some surprise may be felt that this rule should have seemed necessary. But according to Hindu notions, as possession is generally necessary to the completion of ownership, so separate possession is essential in theory to the completion of a separate ownership of a share derived from a prior joint ownership of the aggregate. The father, however, having once become a co-parcener, his son has acquired a concurrent interest which is but expanded by the father's death."

Two cases are cited in support of this proposition, viz., Burham Deo Roy v. Punchoo Roy (10) and Chandika Bakhsh v. Muna Kuar (7). With great respect, I cannot follow how these two cases really support it. I have referred to the report of Burham Deo Roy v. Punchoo Roy (10), and the head-note of that case sufficiently shows the nature of the decision. It says "According to the Mitakshara Law, a step-brother inherits after the widows, if he survives them; otherwise a uterine brother's son succeeds." The Privy Council case of Chandika Bakash v. Muna Kuar (7) contains, so far as I can see, nothing on the subject. It merely assumes the existence of the rule, as I have already mentioned, that the sons of a brother who is dead share along with the surviving brothers. There is another thing which goes against their view. Among the replies of Shastris collected in West and Majid's Hindu Law at page 492 will be found a case at Ahmednagar in 1859, where the question put to the Shastri and his answer were as follows:—

Q.—A deceased woman has no sons or other near relations, but there are one brother-in-law, and four sons of another brother-in-law who are all united in interests. The question is : which of these will be her heirs.

A.—The brother-in law and the sons of brother-in-law will all be her heirs.

This seems to show that in 1859 the Shastri who advised was following the Mayukha rule, as generally interpreted by modern commentators, and the Mayukha is in fact mentioned among the authorities given below the reply, for the Shastri can hardly have rested his opinion on the fact that the brothar-in-law and the sons of the brother-in-law were united in interest, as this affords no basis either under the Mitakshara or the Mayukha for the sons of the other brother-in-law joining in the succession.

Ahmednagar is one of the places where the Mayukha is considered to be of equal authority with the Mitakshara but generally not capable of overruling it [see Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupatty (5) and Bhagirthibai v. Kahnujirav (11).] In the Ahmednagar Zilla, however, the Mayukha was then supposed to have a special authority, as mentioned by West, J. in the case last cited, and this seems to account for the adoption of the Mayukha rule in this case. The learned authors Messrs. West and Majid have put a footnote to this case that "the brother-in-law must have the preference as nearer by one degree," but the case shows the contrary interpretation of the rule is fairly old.

No doubt the rule is an exception to the general principle that the nearer sapinda excludes the more remote, and the view of Messrs. West and Majid may be the correct one, but the exception seems to be so well established that, in the absence of something fairly conclusive to the contrary, I do not think we should hold that the accepted rule is erroneous, and decide in favour of the suggested restriction that the brother's sons' father must be alive when the deceased uncle died. The principle of stare decisis is clearly applicable to a question of the present kind which relates to property and title. Lord Loreburn in West Ham Union v. Edmonton Union (12), says:—

> "Great importance is to be attached to old authorities, on the strength of which many transactions may have been adjusted, and rights determined. But where they are plainly wrong, and especially where the subsequent course of judicial decisions has disclosed weakness in the reasoning on which they were based, and practical injustice in the consequences that must flow from them, I consider it is the duty of this House (of Lords) to overrule them, if it has not lost the right to do so by itself expressly affirming them."

But in the present case it has not been shown that the previous interpretation of this para. 17 in the Mayukha is plainly wrong or that any of the other considerations mentioned by his Lordship applies.

Therefore I would answer the question by holding that the nephews, namely, plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, are entitled to be treated as the legal representatives of Bai Chaturba, and to share in the estate of the deceased Himatlal, which is now in question, along with plaintiff No. 1.

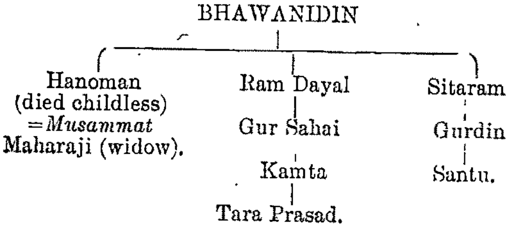
JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the learned District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 31st August 1925, setting aside a decree of the Assistant Collector, Fyzabad, dated the 26th May 1925.

This appeal arises out of a suit for profits under s. 108 cl. (15), of the Oudh Rent Act. The following pedigree will elucidate the statement of facts:—



Hanoman was owner of a certain share in village Pure Bazar, Pargana Pachhimrath, District Fyzabad. He died about 20 years ago leaving a widow Musammat Maharaji who died in or about 1920. On her death two persons, namely, Kamta and Santu, claimed to be the nearest reversioners and mutation was effected in their favour in equal shares in July 1921. During the pendency of the mutation proceedings, Kamta gifted his share to Mahabir and Jagannath. Santu mortgaged with possession his share to Gajadhar and mutation was duly effected in favour of the latter. Thus Gajadhar became a recorded co-sharer. Santu then sued for possession of the other half claiming to be the sole heir of Hanoman and denying also the gift mentioned above. His suit was, however, finally dismissed by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh on the 25th November 1924. It should be noted that it was found in that suit that Santu was descended through males from one brother of Hanoman and Kamta from the other. Kamta was dead. His son Tara and his transferees Mahabir and Jagannath were defendants in that suit. While the suit mentioned above was pending Mahabir and Jagannath brought a suit against (1) "Sant Prasad son of Ram Dayal," (2) Gajadhar and (3) Tara for a declaration that they were the owners of the entire property under the deed of gift executed in their favour by Kamta, on the 16th February 1921. Sant Prasad and Gajadhar, who were defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in that case, were the principal defendants. It was alleged in that suit that Lachhman alias Santu son of Gurdin was dead. It should be borne in mind that this Santu was that very man whose suit for the other half share was finally dismissed by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh on the 25th November 1924. It is clear that Santu son of Gurdin was not dead as stated by Mahabir and Jagannath in their plaint dated the 22nd May 1923. Santu failed to appear but the suit was contested by Gajadhar. Gajadhar alleged in his defence in that suit that Mahabir and Jagannath were not entitled to any relief against him, that they were not in possession of the property and the suit for declaration was not maintainable. He denied, of course, that he was a transferee from "Sant Prasad son of Ram Dayal" and alleged that the plaintiffs had no cause of action against him. The fact is that he was the transferee from "Santu son of Gurdin" and not from "Sant Prasad son of Ram Dayal." He never stated in his defence in that suit that he had no concern with the property in suit. However, the plaintiffs discharged Gajadhar, the contesting defendant, from the suit and obtained an ex parte decree against that person whom they had described as "Sant Prasad son of Ram Dayal" in their plaint. That suit was decided on the 27th August 1923. It should be noted that Santu sued for setting aside the ex parte decree of the 27th August 1923 but his suit was eventually dismissed and his appeals also failed.

The present suit for profits was brought by Gajadhar Singh against Jagannath and Mahabir. Santu was also added as a defendant. The learned Assistant Collector gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 52-0-2 against Mahabir and Jagannath. Santu was discharged. Mahabir and Jagannath appealed and their appeal was allowed by the learned District Judge on the 31st August 1925. The learned District Judge dismissed the suit holding that "Santu alias Sant Prasad" had no title to the property in suit and consequently his mortgagee Gajadhar had no better title than what "Santu alias Sant Prasad" had to the property. Gajadhar has now come to this Court in second appeal.

In my opinion this appeal should be allowed. It appears that the finding of the learned District Judge, that Gajadhar mortgagee has no right to the property in suit is based on the fact that the ex parte declaratory decree mentioned above was passed by the Civil Court on the 27th August 1923. I am not prepared to agree with him on that point. Mahabir and Jagannath knew that Gajadhar was the mortgagee of the share in dispute from Santu and was, therefore, interested in the property. However, they deliberately discharged him from the suit when they found that the suit was contested by him. He is the mortgagee with possession of the share in suit and mutation has been duly effected in his favour. His name still stands recorded in the khewat. When Mahabir and Jagannath deliberately discharged him from the suit, the ex parte decree which they obtained against "Sant Prasad son of Ram Dayal" cannot be held to be binding on him (Gajadhar) in the present suit for profits. It it sufficient for the plaintiff, in order to establish his title to the share of profits, to prove that his name stands recorded in the khewat. The Revenue Court need not go behind the entry in the revenue papers in deciding the case [see the principle of decision in Durga Parshad v. Hajari Singh (1).] Gajadhar is a mortgagee with possession and as such is a co-sharer within the meaning of s. 108, cl. (15) of the Oudh Rent Act and can sue and be sued for profits [see Aziz-un-nissa v. Mohammad Saiyed Khan (2) and Sadika Bibi v. Akbar Singh (3).] Mahabir and Jagannath have not yet got possession of the property in suit as against Gajadhar, the plaintiff in this case. In my opinion Gajadhar's claim was properly decreed by the first Court.

Hence I allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the first Court with costs. The plaintiff will get his costs from the contesting defendants in all the Courts.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 559 OF 1923.

Sikh and Singh are not interchangeable terms. Udasis constitute a sect of their own quite distinct from the orthodox Sikhs of the previous generations as well as from the modern Singhs. [p. 697, col. 1; p. 698, col. 2.]

The followers of Guru Gobind Singh have no such interest in an Udasi shrine as is contemplated by s. 92, C. P. C., and are, therefore, not competent to maintain a suit under that section in respect of an Udasi shrine. [p . 700, col. 2.]

The mere fact that their ancestors or some members of their community made gifts to the shrine does not confer on them the said right. [p. 700, col. 1.]

Any man having a right of worship can bring a suit under s. 92, C. P. No question of the majority of persons can affect the question but the original purposes of the trust must be the guide. [p. 702, col. 2; p. 703, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore, dated the 7th March 1923.

Dr. Gokul Chand Narang and Lala Durga Dass, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Moti Sagar, R. B., Shoukat Rai and Dyal Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Zafar Ali, J.—This first appeal arises out of a suit instituted with the sanction of the Collector of Lahore for the removal of the defendant Basant Das from the office of the mahant of shrine of Bhai Pirthi situate in the village Manak, and for the appointment of a committee to take possession of the shrine and its property and to manage its affairs. Basant Das is a sadhu of the well-known udasi order founded by Sri Chand son of Guru Nanak while the plaintiffs, eight in number, are all Singhs, i.e, followers of Guru Gobind Singh. These eight plaintiffs do not come from one place; one belongs to the village Bhai Ket, one to Lahore, five to village Araian, and only one to the village Manak. The origin and genesis of the litigation lies in the recent extensive quickening amongst Sikhs of this Province which engendered a well-organized movement for taking possession of all temples or shrines to which the term "Gurdwara" in addition to or as an alternative for "udasi dera" had been applied. This movement was directed by a representative body called the Shromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee which had under its control a number of jathas or bands of Akali Sikhs and these jathas under the guidance of the Committee began to take forcible possession of udasi temples and to oust their udasi mahants. To oppose this aggressive movement the udasi Mahants also formed a committee which they designated the Udasi maha mandal, and Basant Das defendant, who was presumably an influential mahant was appointed Secretary of the said maha mandal. He thus drew the attention of the Akalis towards himself and a jatha took possession of his temple on the 6th March 1921 and turned him out. For this act of lawlessness twenty members of the jatha were tried and convicted of dacoity and house-breaking and sentenced under ss. 395 and 452 of the Indian Penal Code to various terms of imprisonment in September 1921. The present suit was filed on the 1st December 1921, and it appears that some of the plaintiffs are near relations of the men involved in the criminal case. For instance, Kahan Singh, plaintiff No. 4 of the village Araian, is a brother of one of the convicts, namely, Wadhava Singh of the same village, and Puran Singh, plaintiff No. 7, is a son of the said Wadhawa Singh. Lal Singh, plaintiff No. 5 was accused No. 24 in that case.

The grounds on which the plaintiffs seek dismissal of the defendant from this office are given in para. 3 of their plaint and are briefly as below:—

"Before the defendant was appointed mahant in Sambat 1964 (corresponding to May 1907) he had executed an agreement that he will give up his wife and children and will revert to single life; but in contravention of that agreement he is keeping his wife with him and begetting children. According to the custom of the institution, the mahant is bound to observe celibacy. Further the defendant has been making use of the wakf property as if it was his own and has willed it to his son Ram Parshad who is a minor. He misappropriates the income and omits to apply it to the legitimate customary purposes, as for example, keeping a free kitchen and feeding sadhus; moreover, he is a bad character and drunkard."

The defendant denied the charges against his character, etc., and pleaded that subsequent to his appointment he was allowed by the bhek (Council of udasi mahants) which had appointed him to keep with him his wife and children, that it was not absolutely necessary for a mahant to remain single, and that it was with the approval of the bhek that he appointed his son his successor. He also pleaded that the property was not wakf but withdrew this plea at the end of the trial. His main contention, however, was that the shrine of Bhai Prithi being an udasi dera and not a Sikh Gurdwara, the plaintiffs, who were Singhs, had no interest in it and no right to interfere with its management and they had, therefore, no locus standi to sue for his removal and for the appointment of a committee of management. It is not denied that according to custom the mahant of an udasi shrine is appointed by the bhek, that Basant Das was appointed by that body and that the office had always devolved on a chela of the late mahant.

The Trial Court (Senior Subordinate Judge of Lahore) found that the plaintiffs were entitled to worship in the shrine and so had such interest therein as is contemplated by s. 92 of the C. P. C. But with regard to the character of the shrine he came to the conclusion that it was an udasi institution and that its management could not be entrusted to a committee of Sikhs. He held further that the defendant had not been discharging his duties properly and was not a fit person to continue in his office, and after taking the opinion of some udasi mahants, he appointed one Dyal Das to that office and dismissed the defendant.

In the light of evidence that is before us almost every important conclusion arrived at by the Court below appears to us to be untenable.

The two vital questions in the case which were put in issue were:

(1) Are the plaintiffs so interested in the institution as to have a locus standi to sue?

(2) What is the origin and nature of the institution?

It is unreservedly stated that the plaintiffs are not Hindus and in contradistinction to Hindus are Singhs or Sikhs. But Mr. Moti Sagar, who appears for the new mahant appointed by the Court below, maintains that udasis are also Sikhs. Even if they are, they are not Singhs or followers of Guru Gobind Singh. "Sikh" and "Singh" are not interchangeable terms, though the word "Sikh" is now-a-days commonly used for "Singh," and Sikh means "disciple," and the followers of all the gurus were called "Sikhs." Gobind Singh initiated or according to Trumpp, renovated the rite called Pahul (baptism by the dagger and sweetened water) and he gave the epithet of "Singh" to every person to whom he administered the Pahul. He received the Pahul himself also and changed his name from Gobind Rai to Gobind Singh. He thus converted Sikhs into Singhs, and he enjoined every Singh to keep five kakkas, i.e., to have always on his person the following five things which commence with the letter kakka (k), viz., kes (long hair), a comb, a kara, (bangle), a kirpan (sword) and a (kachh) shorts. Nanak condemned the exaggerated observance of caste and received all men as his disciples without any regard to caste, but he did not attempt to abolish it and married his own children within his Khatri caste. Gobind Singh, on the other hand, abolished caste altogether and admitted untouchables also into the pale of Singhs. Further he abolished kiria shradh and all other rites and ceremonies of Hindu origin and strictly prohibited the adoration of samadhs (tombs of saints) and rejected the authority of Vedas, Purans and Shastras. In the hymn that he composed on his funeral pyre he said: "The Smriti, the Shastras and the Vedas all teach many modifications. I did not recognize one (of them)." Such being the innovations introduced by Gobind Singh in the religion of Nanak, the plaintiffs, who are his followers say that they are not Hindus and it follows that they cannot claim a direct interest in or power of control over a temple or shrine which is in inception a Hindu institution and where Hindu idols and deities are worshipped, samadhs are adored and Hindu scriptures are held in respect as revealed or inspired books and are recited as such. But before adjudging the character of the shrine in suit we pass on to the question whether udasis are Sikhs or "Singhs" as alleged by the plaintiffs or Sanatou Dharmi (orthodox) Hindu as pleaded by the defendant. The plaintiff's theory is that Sri Chand, the founder of the ndasi order was himself a Sikh or disciple of his father Nanak and that udasis are neither Hindus nor constitute a separate sect but are Sikhs of an ascetic order which sprang from among the followers of Nanak. In this connexion we observe that all the gurus, with the exception of the last, remained within the pale of Hinduism so much so that each employed a Brahman as a family priest. Trumpp in his sketch of the religion of Sikhs says: "The dignity of the Brahmans as family priests, etc., was likewise left untouched and of nearly all the gurus it is reported that they had their family priests though the teaching of the Brahmans as well as the authority of the Vedas and Purans is often reproved. It was the last Guru Gobind Singh, who positively prohibited the employment of Brahmans in any capacity and introduced a new ritual party taken from the Granth and partly from his own compositions" (Trumpp's Introduction to his translation of the Adi Granth, page cxii).

Where a Brahman was employed as a family priest, it is natural that all rites and ceremonies at birth, death, or marriage were performed in accordance with Hindu religion. Nanak himself performed the shradh of his deceased father (Trumpp, page lxvv), and "he remained a thorough Hindu according to all his views." (Trumpp page ci). Gobind Singh had been in his youth a special votary of the Hindu goddess Durga and at the instance of Brahmans he in his early life cut off the head of a disciple and offered it to the goddess (Trumpp, page xc). All this very clearly indicates that Nanak as well as the gurus that succeeded him, except the last, were Hindus. Sri Chand and his followers also though Sikhs could not be anything but Hindus. Gobind Singh renounced Hinduism and rejected everything that smacked of it.

Further it is clear that Sri Chand founded the udasi order in opposition to the second Guru Angad. Nanak disowned his sons as they were disobedient. He said to his wife: "Sri Chand and Lakhmi Dass are thy sons. Lahina (Angad), who obeys me, is my son." The guru's wife duly admonished her sons, giving them hope at the same time "that if they obeyed their father's order, one of them might be found fit to succeed him. The mother's words were addressed to deaf ears, for the sons in no wise showed filial affection or obedience". (The Sikh religion by Macauliffe, Vol. II, page 11). In the Introduction to his book (page lxxix, bottom) Macauliffe says: "There were three great schism of the Sikh religion. The schismatics were known as the udasis, the minas, and the handalis. The first schism of the Sikhs began immediately after the demise of Guru Nanak. Some of his followers adopted Sri Chand, his elder son, as his successor and repudiated the nomination of Guru Angad. The followers of Sri Chand were termed udasi or solitary and they now constitute a large body of devout and earnest men."

Thus the udasis formed a rival sect and Sri Chand kept aloof from Guru Angad and his successor Amar Das and did not recognize and follow them as gurus. Guru Amar Das ex-communicated udasis because they refused to submit to his authority. The udasis were thus cut off from the Sikhs.

Sri Chand lived to a very advanced age and no less than five gurus succeeded Nanak and passed away one after the other during Sri Chand's lifetime. By the lapse of time the bitterness that originally existed between the heads of the two sects disappeared and friendly relations were established when the later gurus showed respect and regard for the old son of Nanak. Sri Chand and his disciples, however, remained quite separate from the gurus and their followers, the ritual and tenets of the former being different from those of the latter. We will state here briefly the points which discriminate the two sects.

Udasis are ascetics, Sikhs are not. The gurus were ghristies, (house-holders) and discouraged retirement from the world. Sri Chand renounced the world and remained single all his life. The general rule among his followers is to observe celibacy. Udasis wear ocre coloured clothes. Sikhs do not. An udasi may or may not keep kes (long hair). He is not enjoined to keep the five kakkas, nor do udasis receive the Pahul. Cap and cord are their peculiar badges, but to wear a cap is for a Singh to seal his perdition. Udasis observe Hindu rites and ceremonies; the present day Singhs do not. Udasis make a ball of the ashes of their udasi guru and that is the chief object of their worship. A ball of ashes is kept in the shrine in question also. Further they adore samadhs and hold Hindu scriptures in respect; the followers of Guru Gobind Singh condemn all this. Udasis and Sikhs are, therefore, poles asunder in their respective creeds and observances. Udasis are within the pale of Hinduism; Singhs are not.

Macauliffe says: "There are two great divisions of Sikhs-Sahij Dharis and Singhs. The latter are they who accept the baptism inaugurated by Guru Govind Singh. All other Sikhs are called Sahij Dharis. The Sahij Dharis include the udasis founded by Sri Chand. (Macauliffe's Sikh Religion, Volume I, page 111). Thus according to Macauliffe also udasis are not Singhs.

It is true that udasis hold the gurus in the highest respect and like all other Sikhs believe the Granth to be an inspired book, but by so doing they do not lose the distinctive characteristics of their order.

It may be observed here that there was no Granth in writing when the udasi sect came into existence. The Granth was complied for the first time by Arjan, the fifth guru and it contains hymns composed by gurus and others including two Mussalmans, viz. Kabir and Sheikh Farid. The pantheistic tenets propounded in the book are not altogether alien to the Hindu mind and religion. As the first nine gurus, and their followers did not cease to be Hindus so udasis did not merge into Sikhs by accepting the Granth as a divine book.

It was argued that udasis became Sikhs when a reconciliation took place between Sri Chand and Har Gobind the sixth guru, and the former adopted a son of the latter and made him his chela and successor. But the result of this adoption was that the Guru's son became an udasi and not that Sri Chand became a Sikh or disciple of the guru. If relations between the heads of two sects became friendly it does not follow that the two sects became one. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that udasis constitute a sect of their own quite distinct from the orthodox Sikh of the previous generations as well as from the modern Singhs.

Having cleared the ground so far we proceed to determine the question whether any of the former mahants of the shrine were followers of Guru Gobind Singh. The saint of the shrine, Bhai Prithi Sahib by name, is the spiritual ancestor of the defendant in the 11th degree, succession being from guru to chela. Bhai Prithi was a Brahman and it was admitted before the learned Subordinate Judge that he was a Sanatan Dharmi Hindu. This is denied before us, but there is nothing to indicate that he was not an udasi. He died in Sambat 1789 (corresponding to 1744 A. D.) and was succeeded by his nephew Bhai Jagat Bhagat. The plaintiffs' story is that Bhai Jagat Bhagat was a chela of Bhai Pheru and that the latter was a disciple of Guru Govind Singh. But even if it be conceded that Jagat Bhagat was a chela of Bhai Pheru and not Bhai Prithi, the plaintiffs fail to establish that Bhai Pheru was a disciple of Gobind Singh. Bhai Pheru was employed as a tithe collector or Masand by Har Rai, the seventh guru, and continued to serve in that capacity, all his successors one after the other. Gobind Singh was so much pleased with his good work that he seated him by his side, gave him half his turban and conferred on him the title of Sangat Sahib Sachi Darhi. From this the learned Subordinate Judge drew the inference that "Bhai Pheru must be regarded as a follower of Guru Gobind Singh." But in the absence of any direct evidence and in the light of the circumstances that neither Bhai Pheru nor Jagat Bhagat nor any one of his suceessors added the epithet of "Singh" to his name, it is impossible to conclude from the fact than Bhai Pheru was honoured by Gobind Singh in the way stated above that he received the Pahul and became a Singh of Gobind Singh. As some other Masands were punished by Gobind Singh for bad work, Bhai Pheru was rewarded for his meritorious services. Beyond this nothing is known and we find that it was not established that Jagat Bhagat was a follower of Gobind Singh. On the other hand an historic incident, which may be briefly related here, shows that there was no love lost between the followers of Bhai Prithi and those of Gobind Singh.

Among the followers of Bhai Prithi there were the two Khatri brothers Jaspat Rai and Lakhpat Rai who held high posts under the Mughal Governors of Lahore. An armed band of Singhs having made its appearance in Eminabad near Gujranwala with intent to plunder, the Governor sent a small detachment of troops under Diwan Jaspat Rai to disperse them, but the Singhs overpowered the Mughal troops and killed Jaspat Rai. When Lakhpat Rai heard of his brother's fate he vowed vengeance saying: "The founder of Sikhism was undoubtedly a Khatri, but I shall not call myself a Khatri if I do not blot out its name from the page of existence." He came out with a large army, defeated the Singhs, and took 1000 of them as prisoners to Lahore where they were beheaded one by one. One of them was Tara Singh, an old companion of Guru Gobind Singh. This occurred in 1746, i. e., about 39 years subsequently to the death of Gobind Singh (see Mohammad Latif's History of the Punjab, page 213, and Dr. Gokal Chand Narang's transformation of Sikhism page 134). It is not conceivable that Lakhpat Rai would have treated the followers of Govind Singh so mercilessly if there had been any spiritual relationship between his guru and Gobind Singh.

The next question is whether the shrine is an udasi institution or Gurdwara. From what the learned Subordinate Judge saw in it, it clearly appears to be the former. There are pictures of Hindu gods and goddesses on its walls and there were thakars lying on a wooden stool besides the Granth Sahib. The samadhs (tombs) of all the mahants from Bhai Pheru downwards are also in the shrine. The learned Subordinate Judge says: "It may also be true that some Hindu modes of worship like the ringing of bells and waving of lights are adopted by Hindu visitors to the shrine." With all these indications of the purposes for which the shrine is used it is impossible to hold that it is a Gurdwara.

Further we find that in all old Government documents the shrine was described as the samadh or Dera of Bhai Prithi and not as Gurdwara. In the statement of Wills prepared in the Settlement of 1868 the then mahant is described as gadi-nashin of the samadh of Bhai Prithi Sahib. (See paper book, page 35). In the Settlement Extra Tehsildar's report dated the 13th May 1892 the shrine is mentioned as Dera Bhai Prithi: (see paper-book page 37,) In the register of jagirs prepared at the Settlement of 1915-16 it is mentioned as Dera: (see paper-book pages 58 to 60, col. 6). One of its former mahants, viz., Sobha Ram, executed and registered a Will to nominate his successor

This is printed at pages 10 and 11 of the paper-book and is dated the 21st June 1905. In this Will also the shrine is referred to as Dera. But in an entry in the mutation register dated the 7th December 1887 the shrine is spoken of as the Gurdwara of Bhai Prithi (see paper-book, page 9). Latterly the defendant himself began to style it as Gurdwara, but there can be no manner of doubt that it was generally known as an udasi Dera or samadh of Bhai Prithi. It may be noted here that Guru Gobind Singh was opposed to the erection of samadhs and his last words were: "If any one erect a shrine in my honour, his off-spring shall perish. (Macauliffe, Volume V, page 244).

It is, therefore, natural that Guru Gobind Singh's followers have no respect for samadhs, and it will be highly objectionable to place under their control a shrine which contains samadhs.

The plaintiffs claim an interest in the shrine on the further grounds:

(1) That their ancestors had made gifts of land to the shrine;

(2) that they and other Sikhs have been making offerings to the shrine and have been worshipping therein; and

(3) that Sikhs have a voice in the appointment of the mahant of the shrine and give saropas and presents to the mahant appointed.

It was, however, not established that any of the donors were ancestors of the plaintiffs and it is obvious that mere making of offerings confers no rights. Further it is clear from the lists of saropas and presents that are on the record that presents to a mahant at the time of his installation are made by mahants of other shrines and Sikhs as well as by Hindus and Mussalmans (see pages 38 to 47 of the paper-book). It cannot, therefore, be said, that people who make these presents have a voice in the appointment of the mahant.

Sikhs no doubt worship the Granth Sahib that is kept in the Dera and is recited therein, but the shrine was evidently erected for the worshippers of the samadh of Bhai Prithi and the samadh occupies the most prominent position in the building. But it appears that as Sikhs and Hindus also visit the shrine a copy of the Granth Sahib and some thakars are also kept therein for Sikhs and Hindus respectively for their worship. Udasi Sadhus are probably not idol-worshippers themselves; but it is matter of common knowledge that Hindus, men and women, consider it a virtue to pay respect to sadhus, to feed them and to make offerings to them, and thakars are kept in udasi shrines for the sake of Hindu visitors. The plaintiffs' witnesses gave evidence to the effect that the thakars were introduced by the defendant about one year before suit but the patwari produced a photograph taken in the shrine some four years back showing therein thakars also. One of the plaintiffs' own witnesses, viz., Kala Singh (P. W. No. 3) deposed that thakars were introduced 7 or 8 years ago. The defendant examined several respectable witnesses including two Tahsildars to prove that thakars have been in the shrine from old times. The observation of the learned Subordinate Judge that thakar worship appears to have been recent innovation was, therefore, not well-founded. Equally baseless is his remark that in the agreement that the defendant executed before his appointment as mahant, he bound himself to abstain from thakar puja because there is not a word about thakar puja in the agreement.

The lower Court also found that the shrine is an udasi temple and that "the plaintiffs certainly desire that the orthodox Hindu practice should be discontinued." As they could not retain what they had seized by force the plaintiffs now seek to recover it through Court and the relief that they seek is not the appointment of a new udasi mahant but the removal of the institution from the control of udasis. They are, therefore, dissatisfied with the decision of the lower Court and have appealed against the order appointing an udasi mahant.

From all the facts reviewed above the conclusions that follow are:—

(1) That udasis constitute a separate sect of schismatics from the religion founded by Nanak;

(2) that they are Hindus as well as Sikhs;

(3) that their mode of life, ritual and religious observances are materially different from those of the followers of Guru Gobind Singh; and

(4) that such followers of Guru Gobind Singh, as do not profess to be Hindus, have no such interest in an udasi shrine as is contemplated by s. 92, C. P. C., and are, therefore, not competent to maintain a suit under that section in respect of an udasi-shrine.

That being our decision we need not enter into a detailed discussion of the remaining issue concerning the defendant's conduct and character. The lower Court found that the charges against his character were not established and it further found that the rule of celibacy was not stringently in force; but in face of the fact that a previous mahant of the shrine, namely, Mehr Das, was also a married man, the lower Court held that "in this shrine celibacy has always been emphatically insisted on," and that the defendant was guilty of breaking his agreement to remain aloof from his wife and children. But many mahants, some of whom appear to be members of the bhek, filed an application in the Court below stating that they considered the defendant to be a capable mahant and were opposed to his removal and that according to the custom of the shrine its mahant could marry. It appears that, as stated by the defendant, he was allowed by the bhek subsequent to his appointment to keep his wife with him. The appointment of his son as his successor was also made by him with the approval of the bhek. Further no misappropriation of the wakf income was proved. It has been urged before us that the fact that the defendant is highly thought of by many Government officials and has received the honour of being made a kursi nashin unfit him for the performance of his duties. We do not agree. We are of opinion that there was no good ground for removing the defendant from his office. Further, we are of opinion that the Court could not appoint an udasi mahant, it being by custom the function of the bhek to do so. A custom of a religious institution should be respected and the Court should not usurp the authority of the bhek.

We accept the appeal and reversing the judgment and decree of the Court below we dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout and set aside the order appointing Dyal Das as mahant. The plaintiffs' cross-objections are also dismissed with costs.

Harrison, J.—I agree with the views expressed by my learned brother in the preceding judgment. It appears to me to be established as an historical fact that at the end of the fifteenth century a great religious teacher known as Guru Nanak undertook the task of simplifying, purifying and popularizing the Hindu religion, which in his opinion, had become overgrown by elaborate rituals and ceremonials. He preached, as many other great teachers have done, that God is one, that he is a spirit and those who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth; that He dwelleth not in temples made with hands; and, above all things, that the latter killeth while the spirit gives life. He attacked, as all such teachers must attack, the vested interests of the priestly caste and their exaggerated pretensions. He sought to distract his disciples from the worship of the unessential and to draw them upwards to a higher, a simpler, and a purer faith. While doing so he never sought to undermine the foundations of the Hindu religion such as transmigration of souls and karma; and not only did he not do so but, as pointed out by my learned brother, he maintained a Brahman as a family priest, respected the observances of the Khatri caste, to which he belonged, and shortly before his death performed the shradh of his father. The sayings and commandments of this great teacher were not recorded in writing during his lifetime, but were handed down by word of mouth until more than a hundred years later the fifth guru compiled the sacred words known as the Granth Sahib, which is the bible of the Sikhs. This contains not only the sayings of Guru Nanak, as handed down, but hymns composed by other holy men including those of some of his successors and disciples, among whom there was one Muhammadan. Even if the actual words were in all cases accurately preserved which would be little short of miraculous, it stands to reason that in a vest anthology of this sort texts and passages can be found which, if divorced from their context, do not give a correct impression of the original teaching. I do not propose, therefore, to produce the elaborate arguments based on such selected texts but merely to give the general conclusions arrived at by us. This wonderful book, the Granth Sahib, has achieved the position which it enjoys, not only because of its intrinsic merit, its religious fervour, and literary beauty, but also because it is written in the vulgar tongue and can be read by all literate Punjabis in contradistinction to the old Hindu scriptures, which are written in Sanskrit and can only be read and interpreted by scholars. The case as presented by Counsel for the respondents, has been briefly as follows:—The plaintiffs are not Hindus but Sikhs from the beginning and from the days of Guru Nanak were not Hindus but the followers of a new religion, which has varied in essentials from the date of its birth. The udasis are a sect of Sikhs. The plaintiffs are entitled to worship at the udasi shrine at Manak and are, therefore, entitled to bring this suit. The main proposition that Sikhs are not Hindus is said to be proved in the following way :—The essentials of Hinduism without which Hinduism cannot exist, are, so says Mr. Moti Sagar, caste, idol-worship, the worship of the Vedas and Purans. Guru Nanak denounced all these.

Now this premise, on which the whole argument is built, appears to me to be redically unsound ; for a man can discard caste as understood by an orthodox Hindu or idol-worship, or both, and remain a Hindu and for this proposition I have what, to my mind, amounts to the authority of all the eminent Counsel, who appeared in this case. The great teacher Swami Daya Nanad, who founded the Arya Samaj denounced the doctrine of predetermined caste and the practice of idol-worship as clearly and as emphatically as any Sikh, and his followers most assuredly claim to be, and are universally accepted as Hindus, and to this latter proposition all Counsel appearing have agreed. If I may persume to dogmatize as to the main essentials of the Hindu religion, they are ; a belief in transmigration of souls, "karmas" and the sanctity of the cow ; and none of these was questioned by Guru Nanak nor do I believe, by any of his successors. The Granth Sahib tells us at page 1476 that full Hindu ceremonies were observed at the kiria of the third Guru Amar Das. The other faulty premise, from which the argument was developed, is that "Sikh" has always meant the same thing from the days of Guru Nanak till to-day. At first it meant a disciple, as the word implies, and a disciple of Guru Nanak." Now it is used generally to include those, who hold the same views as those disciples, and those who profess a very much more advanced and, in some cases, an antagonistic creed, a fact which has been fully dealt with by my learned brother. The most advanced are those, who, like the present plaintiffs, declare that they are not Hindus. The fact that these plaintiffs have done so simplifies our task in the present case. Had they claimed to be Hindus, and had the claim been denied, the question raised would have been far from easy to decide; but here we have a body of plaintiffs, who, on their own showing, are not Hindus, claiming to interfere with the management of institution which in its inception was Hindu. True, it was founded by a son of the reformer Nanak but it was nonetheless Hindu. The order of ascetics which he founded was a Hindu order and nonetheless so because it gave a place of honour to the Granth Sahib, when this great book came to be written. As stated by Mr. Macauliffe in the Encyclopædia Britannica the udasis were Sikhs dissenting from the main body of Sikhs of the time in certain unessentials just as the Sikhs were a sect of Hindus dissenting from the orthodox main body of their co-religionists. Now it has been established by no less an authority than that of the House of Lords that the identity of a religious community described as a Church consists in the identity of its doctrines, creeds, confessions, formularies and texts. The bond of union of a Christian association (and I take it of any other religious association) may contain a power in some recogized body to control, alter or modify the tenets or principles at one time professed by the association, but existence of such power must be proved : Free Church of Scotland v. Lord Overtoun (1).

Here we have not a case of a Hindu plaintiff contending that a Hindu foundation is not observing the tenets and principles existing at the time of the foundation or subsequently modified but of non-Hindus claiming to interfere with the management of a Hindu foundation.

It is a common place that any worshipper has a right to bring such a suit as this. It has further been held by this Court in Narinjan Singh v. Kirpal Singh (2) following the decision of a dissenting Judge in the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Ramachandra Aiyar v. Parameswara Unni (3) that any man having a right to worship can do so, but the right to worship connotes the profession by the would-be worshipper of the religion practised in the place of worship, and even though the views of the majority of the worshippers may change and develop to such an extent that they may wish to alter and even to make a radical change in the form of worship, they have no right to do so, and the minority, however, small, which adheres to the original practice retains the control and possession of the place of worship and its endowments. In the words of Halsbury, L. C. "No question of the majority of persons can affect the question but the original purposes of the trust must be the guide."

Mahant NANDKISHORDAS—
versus
KALA BAI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

*Hindu Law—Inheritance—*Guru and chela*—Deity, property belonging to—Manager, power of, to sue—Idol, status of.*

For purposes of inheritance under the Hindu Law, the relationship of a guru and his chela is that of [illegible]ther and son, and a chela is for this purpose the grandson of his guru's guru and two chelas of the same guru are brothers and so on. There is no limit to which this principle may be extended.

A manager of the property of a deity can sue as a next friend of an infant plaintiff for the recovery of property belonging to the deity even though there is a flaw in his title as the mahant of the temple in which the deity is lodged.

A Hindu idol is a 'juristic entity' and has a juridical status with the powers of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager with all the powers, which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir.

Appeal against a decree of the Second Subordinate Judge, First Class, Raipur, dated the 21st July 1924, in Civil Suit No. 11 of 1923.

Mr. J C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose and Messrs. V. Bose and P. N. Rudra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—If there were any question in this case of the plaintiff Nandkishordas being the heir of the deceased mahant Gobardhandas, it would be impossible to maintain the decision of the lower Court that he is not. It is admitted by everybody that for purposes of inheritance the relationship of a guru and his chela is that of father and son. It seems also to be accepted, as it must be, that this relationship can be carried further so that a chela is, for these purposes, the grandson of his guru's guru and two chelas of the same guru are brothers. The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, found himself unable to carry this principle as far as eight degrees, though he has not stated the number of degrees to which in his opinion it can extend. There is obviously no limit, and both Gobardhandas and Nandkishordas are, in matters of inheritance, great-great-grandsons of the same ancestor, Biharidas, that is they are third cousins.

But the question does not arise at all. The suit was brought by the manager of the properties of the deity Shri Ramchandra Swami for property belonging to that deity, and it cannot and has not been denied that Nandkishordas is in fact the manager of that property and has been so since the death of the last manager Gobardhandas in March 1922. Of the validity of his appointment also there can be no question, though we are not really concerned to enquire into that; his position in the suit is that of the next friend of an infant plaintiff and he would obviously be the person whom the Court would allow to sue as representative of the deity even if there were any flaw in his title to be the mahant of the temple.

In Pramatha Nath v. Pradyumna Kumar (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "A Hindu idol is, according to long established authority, founded upon the religious customs of the Hindus, and the recognition thereof by Courts of Law, a 'juristic entity'. It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir. It is unnecessary to quote the authorities, for this doctrine, thus simply stated, is firmly established."

The decree of the lower Court will be set aside. In its place a decree will issue ordering the defendant Kala Bai to hand over possession to the plaintiff Nandkishordas, as Manager of the properties of the deity Shri Ramchandra Swami, of Lawan and on behalf of the deity, of the whole of the village of Mudiadih with all rights appertaining thereto, and also of four bullocks, one cow and one buffalo or of their value which is Rs. 75. The defendant must pay all the costs of the plaintiff in both Courts.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No 54 OF 1923.
September 24, 1925.
Present :—Mr. Justice Fawcett and Mr. Justice Madgavkar.
ATMARAM JAMNADAS SHAH—
PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
NAZIR, DISTRICT COURT—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Disposition of Property Act (XV of 1916)—Act, whether retrospective.

There is nothing in the Hindu Disposition of Property Act to suggest that it is retrospective in its operation.

First appeal from the decision of the Joint First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 749 of 1920.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. Amin (with him Mr. M. H. Mehta), for Respondent No. 4.

Mr. Jayakar (with him Mr. N. P. Desai), for Respondent No. 5.

JUDGMENT.

Madgavkar, J.—It is argued for the appellant that the residuary legatees are the appellant and not Babli but a son of Babli, if any, in equal shares; and as no such son was in existence at the time of the testator's death the bequest to him is under the rule laid down since the Tagore case void and Atmaram becomes sole residuary legatee. The Hindu Disposition of Property Act XV of 1916 has no application to the Will which came into effect on the testator's death in 1902.

[The clauses of the Will and the postscript are omitted not being necessary for purpose of report:—] The Will and the clauses quoted above with the postscript leave no doubt as to the testator's intentions. He wanted to leave the residue in equal shares to Atmaram, and to Babli's son, if any. And whatever the confusion in cl. 45, the postscript makes it quite clear that the residuary legatee, if any, along with Atmaram, was not Babli but Babli's son, even if he was born after Atmaram attained twenty-five years and had been placed in possession of the estate.

But the law applying to this Will, which came into effect in 1902 on the testator's death is the law in the Tagore case and not Act XV of 1916 which, unlike Madras Act I of 1914 by its s. 2, is not retrospective. No son of Babli was in existence at the time of the testator's death and the provisions in his favour, therefore, entirely fail. Babli, respondent No. 5, is entitled to Rs. 2,500 in the postscript.

Fawcett, J.—I agree. I think the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916 cannot apply to the present case. It contains no words making it in any way retrospective in its operation, unlike the provisions to that effect contained in s. 2 (2) of the Madras Act I of 1914 and Government of India Act VIII of 1921. On the contrary, the heading and preamble of the Act show that it is intended only to remove existing disabilities in respect of the power of disposition of property by Hindus, etc., and it is not put in such declaratory language as the Acts operating in Madras. Consequently s. 2, in my opinion, only covers the case of a disposition made after the commencement of the Act.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 411—Receiving stolen property—Possession of accused—Witness—Hostile witness.

The accused, along with several others, was found in the house of one of them, quarrelling over the division of certain stolen property, which consisted of packages of cloth which has been cut through and were lying open in the house:

Held, that the accused was in possession of the property for purposes of s. 411 of the Penal Code. [p. 705, col. 2.]

The prosecution is not entitled to declare a witness hostile merely because he is a neighbour of the accused and does not support the prosecution storey unless there is something in his deposition which conflicts with earlier statements made by him, and which would afford ground for thinking that he has been gained over by the defence. The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The petitioner is one of eight persons who have been convicted under ss. 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code, in connection with the theft of three large bales of cloth and one box containing packages of medicine bottles from the Railway Station at Bhagalpur. The stolen property was recovered in a house rented by one of the accused, Singheswar Lal, situated near the Railway Station.

The first contention on behalf of the petitioner is that there is no evidence or finding that the petitioner was in possession of any of the stolen goods; and as regards s. 414, there is no evidence of any overt act done by the accused towards disposing of or making away with the property. Now the findings of the Appellate Court are that "the evidence to implicate the appellants is that they were all in this house on the 9th of March 1925 disputing as to what was to be done with the booty"; and, again, that "about a dozen people were seen discussing as to how the cloth was to be divided." The findings of the Trial Court are more detailed and are that the witnesses have proved that the packages were found cut through and the cloth in the bales was lying open in the house of Singheswar Lal and all the first nine accused were sitting inside the house and quarrelling over the division of the property, and were claiming a share in the same. There is a further finding that there is also sufficient evidence to show that the accused had cut open the packages of cloths and assisted in concealing or disposing of the stolen property. The learned Counsel for the petitioner referred to the case of Reg. v. John Wiley (1). In that case the Jury convicted the accused but the case was reserved for the opinion of the Court of Appeal. There was a division of opinion, and the majority of the Court held that the conviction was wrong. The facts are thus stated by Baron Martin "Two men stole some fowls, which they put into a sack, and carried to the house of Wiley's father, for the purpose of selling them to Wiley. All three went together from the house to an outhouse; the bag was carried on the back of one of the thieves; and when the Policemen went in, the sack was found lying on the floor, unopened, and the three men around it as if they were bargaining, but no words were heard. Now I am of opinion that Wiley, under those circumstances, never did receive those fowls." Lord Campbell whose opinion was that of the minority, said that "the material question is, whether there has been a possession malo animo; and all the Judges, I believe, are of opinion that there may be a sufficient possession, though there is not a manual possession." In that case there was no possession by the accused Wiley. But here possession is the basis of the finding; and the only question in debate between the accused was as to the actual division of the property. Wiley's case (1), therefore, is no authority on the present question; and, in view of the findings, I am of opinion that so far as that question is concerned the conviction under ss. 411 and 414 is sustainable.

The main question, however, relates to the case of this particular accused. His defence was that he was falsely implicated and had been brought by the Police, from outside, to the house where the stolen property was found. The learned Sessions Judge has referred to the evidence of thirteen witnesses nine of whom are Police Officers, two are search witnesses, and two are private persons who were declared hostile. Four of the Police Officers speak to the presence of the petitioner in the group of men in the house. But whereas Ramrachya Singh (P. W. No. 22) says that he assisted Ramrup Singh, who is prosecution witness No. 13, in arresting Parmeswar Dayal, Ram Rup Singh himself says nothing on this point. Prosecution witness No. 20, who identified the petitioner in the house called him Bhubneshwari. There is, therefore, some uncertainty about the case of this man on the prosecution evidence alone. Now the two witnesses who were declared hostile, Abdul Wahid (P. W. No. 19) and Madan Barhi (P. W. No. 26) in their cross-examination made statements consistent with the defence raised by the petitioner. They say that Parmeshwar Dayal was brought subsequently by the Police from outside, from the direction of his own house. The contention on behalf of the petitioner with regard to this evidence is that there was no justification for declaring these witnesses hostile. The learned Sessions Judge has said nothing on this point and the reasons given by the Trial Court are, in my opinion, no reasons at all. What the Trial Court said was that these witnesses do not support the prosecution story, but they are admittedly neighbours of the accused and they have been won over by them. Witness No. 19 is a tout and witness No. 22 is a man of straw and quite unreliable. These are no reasons for declaring the witnesses hostile; and, unless there is something in their depositions which conflicted with earlier statements made by them, which would afford ground for thinking that they had been gained over by the defence, the prosecution is not entitled to declare them hostile. Now Abdul Wahid was only examined to prove that he had let his house to Singheswar and he did make that statement. He was then cross-examined by the defence; and, apparently because of statements made in that cross-examination, he was allowed to be cross-examined by the prosecution. Madan Barhi was not examined in chief, but only tendered for cross-examination; and it was after his cross-examination by the defence, that he was allowed to be cross-examined by the prosecution. This procedure was, in my opinion, erroneous; and the fact that these witnesses are neighbours of the accused is not sufficient ground for treating them as hostile in order to discredit the statements that they made favourable to the defence. Apart from this, a large body of evidence was given on behalf of Parmeshwar Dayal to show the circumstances in which he was arrested. It is true that some of the witnesses are persons of little consideration and others are his own relatives; but one of the witnesses is a Sub-Registrar whose evidence was prima facie entitled to considerable weight. The learned Sessions Judge has not discussed the evidence of this or any other defence witness with a view to showing why it should not be relied upon he has merely said that he prefers the prosecution evidence, and has considered certain probabilities. The Trial Court disbelieved the Sub-Registrar on the ground that he is a caste-fellow of the petitioner. This reason is, in my opinion, insufficient: and the evidence of this witness ought to have received fuller consideration.

In view of the doubt that is thrown on the prosecution case by the defects of the prosecution evidence itself which I have referred to above, it seems to me that there is a distinct element of doubt as regards the complicity of the petitioner. I would, therefore, allow this application and set aside the conviction and sentence of Parmeshwar Dayal and direct that he be acquitted and released from bail.

NAG KYAING—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—Statement of accused by gesture in Police custody—Admissibility.

Section 162, Cr. P. C., prevails over the provisions of s. 27 of the Evidence Act.

A statement can be made by means other than words. Therefore, the gesture of the accused in pointing out to the Police where revolver lies is inadmissible in evidence.

Criminal revision from the judgment of the Special Power Magistrate, Tharrawaddy, in Criminal Regular Trial No. 81 of 1925.

JUDGMENT.—U Ba Pe, Circle Inspector of Police (P. W. No. 1), has stated that, while Maung Kyaing was in custody, acting on information received from Maung Kyaing, he took him to Inspector of Land Records, U Nge's house. He said to Maung Kyaing "please point out the revolver as you promised." Maung Kyaing pointed out a piece of Plank and when it was opened the Circle Inspector said to Maung Kyaing "Take up your own thing.". Maung Kyaing picked up a packet, which was found to contain a revolver and 8 loaded cartridges.

Maung Kyaing pleaded guilty to having under his control a revolver and 8 cartridges and was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

U Ba Pe should not have been allowed to state in the witness-box that he had received information from Maung Kyaing. He should not have been allowed to state that Maung Kyaing pointed out a Plank and said "It was under this."

The utmost that could be proved against Manng Kyaing was that he accompanied the Police to the house of U Nge and that a revolver was found there. His gesture, in pointing out to the Police where the revolver was, was inadmissible as it, to all intents and purposes, was a statement. It must not be forgotten that statements can be made by other means than by words. There was really no admissible evidence on which Maung Kyaing could be convicted, since s. 162 of the Cr. P. C. must be taken as overriding s. 27 of the Evidence Act.

The conviction and sentence are, therefore, set aside and Maung Kyaing is acquitted as far as this case is concerned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 350 (1) (2)—Magistrate, transfer of—Accused, application of, for de novo trial—Subsequent waiver—Mere cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, effect of—Re-trial, privilege of, whether claimable by complainant.

Where an accused, on a transfer of a Magistrate, claimed the privilege of re-trial under s. 350, Cr. P. C., but when the prosecution witnesses appeared, changed his mind and was content to cross-examine the witnesses:

Held, that the procedure adopted was not irregular and the Court was free to exercise its statutory option and act upon the evidence recorded by its predecessor. [p. 708, col. 1.]

The privilege under s. 350, Cr. P. C., is that of the accused and not of the complainant and if the accused declines to act under sub-cl. (1) (a) the complainant of necessity must suffer any disadvantage which follows upon the Magistrate electing to proceed upon the evidence already recorded. [ibid.]

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439, of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment, dated the 16th September 1925, of the Taluk Second Class Magistrate, Sivaganga, in Calendar Case No. 60 of 1925.

Mr. A. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The petitioner seeks to revise an order of acquittal in C. C. No. 60 of 1925 on the file of the Court of the Second Class Magistrate of Sivaganga. After the case was charged, there was a transfer of Magistrates, and in exercise of his privilege under s. 350, Cr. P. C., the accused asked that the prosecution witnesses might be re-summoned and re-heard. When they appeared, he said he would be content to cross-examine them. The question raised is whether his original application had the effect, as it were, of cancelling the evidence recorded by the Magistrate's predecessor, so that on the adjourned date of hearing the only course was to examine the witnesses afresh, or whether on the contrary the accused could change his mind and leave the Court free to exercise its statutory option and act upon the evidence recorded by its predecessor. The petitioner relies upon the rulings in Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor (1) in which it was held, no doubt, that the accused has no right to change his mind.

My difficulty in following these rulings is that they seem to assume that the ordinary procedure under the Code when the Magistrate is transferred in the course of the hearing, is a re-trial, and if there is no re-trial, the accused must be held to be gravely prejudiced. "It is impossible to say that the accused have not been materially prejudiced by the procedure adopted, for it is evident that the Honourary Magistrate has arrived at the conclusion on the evidence the whole of which was not recorded by himself" page 139. "If the law requires that there should a trial de novo on the transfer of a case from one Magistrate to another the waiver of the accused goes for nothing." Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghose (2). The short answer to these observations is that the law requires no such thing, and if an accused is materially prejudiced by the Magistrate passing judgment on his predecessor's record, it is a prejudice by the Statute. It would be a very different case if the Statute forbade the Magistrate to act upon this record and the accused was induced to plead that he would allow the recorded evidence to go in spite of the Statute. That was the point in In re Kothammal Kolathingal Ummar Hajee (3), which has no reference to s. 350. If a Magistrate acting under s. 350, sub-cl. (1) says that he is prepared to act on his predecessor's record, and the accused states that he does not wish to press his privilege under sub-cl. (1) (a) but would like some witnesses recalled for cross-examination, it could be done quite regularly under s. 540, Cr. P. C. Of course in that case it would still be open to a superior Court to consider, whether a material miscarriage of justice had resulted from the act that the Magistrate who convicted had not seen and heard the winesses but his procedure could not be said to have been ipso facto irregular. In Narayan Reddy v. Enmula Bogamma (4) on which petitioner also relies, it seems that the accused exercised his privilege under the proviso and the Magistrate confined him to cross examination which was clearly wrong. The present is a case where the accused did not exercise his privilege. Of course the complainant has no privilege under s. 350, and if the accused declines to act under sub-cl. (1) (a), the complainant of necessity must suffer any disadvantage which follows upon the Magistrate electing to proceed upon the evidence already recorded. To try to get an acquitted man again put upon his trial, because he failed to insist upon the prosecution witnesses being re-heard is a recourse chiefly commendable for its ingenuity.

Under sub-s. (3) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. a copy of the preliminary order made by the Magistrate must be served on the parties and must also be published by being posted on the land itself. The failure to serve and publish the order in this manner is, however, an irregularity which is curable under the provisions of s. 537 of the Code and does not by itself vitiate the proceedings.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Nyaunglebin, in Criminal Miscellaneous Trial No. 89 of 1924.

Mr. Vertannes, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Choon Foung, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Counsel for the petitioner has pointed out that the Magistrate did not comply with the provisions of s. 145, Cr. P. C. This is so. Clause (1) of the section requires the Magistrate to make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute exists which is likely to cause a breach of the peace. The Magistrate did this. But cl. (3) requires a copy of the order to be served on the parties and this was not done. The notice actually issued was not a copy or translation of the order and gave no grounds. And no copy was published by being posted on the land itself, as is also required by cl. (3).

These are decided irregularities, but I think that they are cured by s. 537, Cr. P. C., and do not invalidate the proceedings. The Magistrate should, nevertheless, see that thay do not recur in future cases. These provisions appear to be very generally overlooked.

[The remainder of the judgment is not essential for the purposes of this report.—[Ed.]

versus

EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Accused discharged—Further enquiry, when to be ordered.

Further enquiry should not be ordered unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or is based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete. The opinion of the Court that the prosecution evidence requires more careful attention than it has received is no ground for ordering further enquiry.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Ferozepur, dated the 26th May 1925.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a Magistrate had discharged a complaint brought by Sucha Singh against Harnam Singh and Mangal Singh under s. 342, Indian Penal Code. The complainant moved the learned District Magistrate who, in the exercise of his revisional powers, directed a further enquiry. Harnam Singh and Mangal Singh have come up to this Court in revision through Mr. Anant Ram.

The learned District Magistrate says as follows:—

"There is a good deal of evidence in support of this story. The Magistrate had discharged the accused on the ground that the evidence is discrepant, and that certain additional witnesses were produced before the Court though it was stated by one of the earlier witnesses that only he and Arjan Singh were present. I consider that the Magistrate has given insufficient ground for rejecting a considerable volume of evidence recorded against Mangal Singh and Harnam Singh." He then goes on to say: "I consider that the evidence produced by Sucha Singh requires more careful consideration than it has yet received."

Now, it had been held more than once by this Court that further enquiry in cases of this nature should not be ordered unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish, or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete. It has not been suggested that the record of evidence in the present case is incomplete nor had the District Magistrate found that the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish. In this connection reference may be made to Nabi Bakhsh v. Emperor (1). In the circumstances, in my opinion, the order of the learned District Magistrate is erroneous and accepting the petition, I restore the order of discharge passed by the Magistrate and quash the further proceedings ordered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 148 (3), 423 (d), 439—Dispute with regard to immoveable property—"Forcibly and wrongfully," meaning of—Order confirming possession, duration of—Revision—Costs, whether can be awarded.

Per Marten, J.—The distinction drawn in the first proviso to sub-s. (4) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. is between forcible entries which are rightful and forcible entries which are wrongful; and that depends on whether the person entering was entitled to use force, and not merely on whether he had a legal right to possession. [p. 710, col. 2.]

Per Pratt, J.—The phrase "forcibly and wrongfully" used in the first proviso to sub-s. (4) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. has the same meaning as forcible entry without due warrant of law; in other words "wrongfully" means no more than "otherwise than in due course of law." [p. 712, col. 2.]

Possession taken by a show of force is a forcible dispossession within the meaning of the first proviso to sub-s. (4) of s. 145. [ibid.]

Per Fawcett and Madgavkar, JJ.—Sub-s. (6) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. and the connected form No. 22 of Sch. V to the Code allow a Magistrate to give directions as to possession with a legal effect that is valid until actual eviction or ouster by due course of law and not merely until the institution of a civil suit for the purpose of determining the legal right to the property [p. 713, col. 1.]

The High Court has power, under s. 439 read with ss. 423 (d) and 148 (3) of the Cr. P. C. to pass an order for costs incurred in the hearing of a revision petition arising out of a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code. [p. 714, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Resident Magistrate, First Class at Nadiad.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J.—This case raises a dispute under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. It is eminently a beneficial section passed with the express object of preserving the peace. But in many cases it is apt to result in the parties treating it as a sort of preliminary suit with reference to the merits of their respective claims to certain immoveable property, though both parties know that those disputes cannot finally be determined except by a Civil Court. I feel, therefore, that when one gets a dispute of that nature, as we have in fact here, there is an unfortunate waste of money by the litigants, and to some degree a waste of public time, in considering detailed facts or difficult points of law, because after all the only order that can be passed by the Court is a temporary order to preserve the peace, while the civil rights of the parties to the property in dispute are being settled.

In the present case it appears that one Shivlal died on January 9, 1922, leaving a widow Jiba and a brother Bapalal. The widow Jiba alleges that she was in sole possession of the property after the death of her husband, and remained so with the consent of Bapalal, who was the heir to the property subject to the widow's right of maintenance. It is further alleged that the widow was the manager of the property. She brought these proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., against one Chandulal, alleging that Chandulal had wrongfully taken possession of the property and dispossessed her (Jiba) of that property. The learned Magistrate does not find definitely whether the act of dispossession was on November 21, 1923, or on November 22, 1923. He says if it was on November 21, then no force was used. So it was not a forcible dispossession within the meaning of the proviso to sub-s. (4) of s. 145. But if it was on November 22, then it was a forcible dispossession.

The ground on which the learned Magistrate came to his decision to dismiss the application was that whether the date was the 21st or the 22nd, and whether it was a forcible entry or whether it was not, it was not a wrongful dispossession within the meaning of the above proviso, because Chandulal was then rightfully entitled to possession of the property under an agreement for sale which Bapalal, the heir, had entered into on September 12th, 1923, and under a further document of November 21, by which Bapalal had purported to give him the possession of the property.

The view the learned Magistrate took of that word "wrongful" was that it involves that the dispossessor has no legal right to the possession of the property. In support of that view he referred to the definition of "wrongful gain" in s. 23 of the Indian Penal Code. Before us it has been conceded by Counsel on both sides that this view of the proviso in question cannot be supported. If one considers for a moment the general principles applicable to a forcible entry into a building, one will see the reason why, one main anxiety of the law is to preserve the King's peace. Accordingly even a rightful owner, such, for instance, as a landlord who is entitled to possession in a case where his tenant is wrogfully holding over, can only take possession peaceably. If his possession is opposed however wrongfully, then the landlord has no right to break down the doors, to assault the inmates and to turn them vi et armis out of the building. He must go to the Civil Court and get the necessary warrants or ejectment orders to enable, if necessary, the proper authorities to effect a forcible entry or a forcible ejectment according to law.

But, if the view of the learned Judge was to prevail, then it would not matter for the purpose of this proviso whether the landlord came with an armed force and broke down the doors and forcibly turned the inmates out or not. That, I think, is not the true view of the section. I think the distinction drawn is between forcible entries which are rightful and forcible entries which are wrongful: and that depends on whether the person entering was entitled to use force, and not merely on whether he had a legal right to possession. If, for instance, a landlord came armed with a writ or a warrant in his favour to eject his former tenant then although force might in the end be used, it would not be a wrongful dispossession. If, on the other hand, he took the law into his own hands and used force without any such legal sanction by means of a warrant as I have referred to, then that would be an instance to my mind of where he would have forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed his former tenant.

I appreciate of course that the words are "forcible and wrongful." On the other hand, the construction which I prefer, receives assistance, I think, from the opening part of sub-s. (4). The proviso in question is only a proviso to that particular sub-section, and that sub-section opens by saying that "the Magistrate shall then, without reference to the merits or the claims of any of such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute" do certain things. But if the opposite construction was to prevail, then for the purposes of determining whether any particular case came within this proviso, the Magistrate would have to determine that very thing, viz., whether on the merits or on the claims put forward, A or B had a legal right to enter into possession.

In the view, therefore, which I take, the ground on which the learned Magistrate dismissed the application cannot be supported.

But we then come to this difficulty which, speaking for myself, I have not been able to surmount, and that is whether facts are so found as to enable us to make a definite order on this application. In the first place, as regards the date of dispossession, and whether it was forcible or not, there is, as I have already pointed out, no finding. The learned Magistrate says it may be one day or another day. If it is the first day no force was used. If it is the second day, there was force. We, therefore, think we must have a definite finding on that point before we can decide what is the proper order to make having regard to our decision on the point of law.

Speaking for myself, I also feel another difficulty, viz., what is the learned Magistrate's finding as to who was in possession of the property immediately prior to the date on which Chandulal took possession. The finding on page 11 of the judgment is; "Thus we find that oral evidence on both the sides is almost useless for arriving at any definite conclusion about the actual possession of the dehla under dispute." It may be that the learned Magistrate is there referring to the oral evidence as opposed to some of the rest of the evidence. What I should like to have is a definite finding on all the evidence in the case as to who, the learned Magistrate is of opinion was in possession at this date, viz., whether it was Jiba and Bapalal or either and which of them or how otherwise. For instance, at page 9 of the judgment, the learned Magistrate finds out that the ownership of Bapalal was not denied by Jiba. Then he refers to certain rent-notes passed apparently in favour of both of them. He then states he believes the deposition of the Pleader entirely, who states that Bapalal told him that the whole property was in possession of Bai Jiba. Then later on the learned Magistrate says:—"The only thing that is established from the evidence of Bai Jiba and her witnesses is that the dehla under dispute was of the joint ownership of Jiba and Bapalal and that Bapalal was using it for sitting purposes whenever he was at Nadiad." But the learned Magistrate had already found, as I understand it, that the ownership as distinct from possession was in Bapalal alone. Whether thus in this last quoted passage he intended to refer to joint possession and not joint ownership I am not altogether clear. I merely mention these passages to show why I am unable to see clearly the conclusions of fact which the Magistrate has arrived at. I, of course, follow that in the view he took, these points were not essential because he decided the case on the point of law. But as we are unable to take the same view on that, it necessarily follows that we must be definite on the findings of fact.

I would, therefore, as is suggested by the learned Government Pleader, remand this case to the learned Magistrate for his findings on the definite issues which will be mentioned in the judgment of my learned brother.

Speaking for myself, I would like to add this, that one or the other of the parties had much better file a civil suit to determine their rights and then have the present proceedings stayed. Otherwise what will probably happen is that they will go back to the Magistrate and incur further expense, and come back here with more expense, and even then the rights of the parties will not finally be determined. That can only be determined in a Civil Court. But of course if the parties choose to go on fighting and spending moneys in this way, I regret I do not see my way to stop them doing it.

Pratt, J.—The Magistrate has not found whether the opponent took possession on the 21st or 22nd.

If possession was taken on the 22nd he says it was forcible but not wrongful because the opponent was acting under, or under colour of, an authority signed by the owner, But this is a misconstruction of the word "wrongfully" in the first proviso to s. 145 (4). The section makes it clear that the Magistrate is not concerned with title or with claims of right. The phrase "forcibly and wrongfully" has the same meaning as forcible entry without due warrant of law under the English Statute. A forcible entry must be wrongful unless it is in execution of a legal process. It was held in Frankum v. Earl of Falmouth (1) that in an action for trespass the word "wrongfully" does not put title in issue. The word "wrongfully," therefore, means no more than "otherwise than in due course of law" in s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The proviso was inserted because under the Code of 1872 the Courts were embarrassed by having to recognise a forcible possession. The case of In the matter of the petition of Mohesh Chunder Khan (2) is an instance where the Court overcame the difficulty by declaring that the possession to be recognised must be peaceful possession.

On the other hand, if possession was taken on the 21st the Magistrate says the proviso does not apply as the possession was not forcibly taken—but the Magistrate found Pathans on the premises and it is not clear whether he has understood possession taken by a show of force is a forcible dispossession. The case of Edwick v. Hawkes (3), is a clear exposition of the law on this point.

I am inclined to think that the Magistrate intended to find that the petitioner was in possession. But his judgment on this point is not very clear and I would, therefore, remand the case to the Magistrate for findings on the following issues:—

(1) Whether the possession was taken by the opponent Chandulal on November 21 or 22, 1923?

(2) Whether the possession was taken on either of those dates forcibly and wrongfully?

(3) Whether immediately prior to such dispossession by opponent the dehla in dispute was in possession of Bai Jiba or how otherwise?

Findings to be returned within two months.

The case was accordingly sent back to the Trial Magistrate for necessary findings. Meanwhile Chandu Lal filed a suit in the Civil Courts for the specific performance of a contract of sale for the property in dispute entered into with Bapalal the petitioner's husband's brother. On the case being returned to the High Court, the following judgment was pronounced:

Fawcett, J.—The present application for revision was before this Court in December last and the case was remanded to the Magistrate, First Class, Nadiad, for findings on certain issues. It was explained in the judgment of this Court that the Magistrate had placed a wrong construction on the word "wrongfully" in the first proviso of sub-s. (4) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., and as the exact facts were not sufficiently ascertained this remand was necessary. The result of the Magistrate's findings is that he holds that the opponent Chandulal took forcible and wrongful possession of the premises in question on November 22, 1923, from the petitioner Bai Jiba, who was in possession immediately prior thereto. He had in his previous order held that the conditions of s. 145 were satisfied and that he had jurisdiction to pass an order under that section. In view of his misconstruction of the word "wrongfully," the order that he passed was one in favour of the opponent Chandalal Ambalal, declaring him to be entitled to possession of the premises until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and forbidding all disturbance of such possession until such eviction under s. 145, sub-s. (6), Cr. P. C. It follows from the findings of the Magistrate, and this is not disputed by Mr. Velinker for the opponent, that the applicant is entitled to have that order set aside and to have an order in her favour substituted under sub-s. (6) of s. 145, Cr. P. C., unless this is prevented (as he contends it is) by certain events that have happened since the Magistrate gave his findings. These findings were given on June 13, 1925, and affidavits have been put in yesterday that a suit was filed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Nadiad, by the opponent against the petitioner and her brother-in-law Bapalal for specific performance of a written agreement, under which the opponent claims to be entitled to the premises in question, and that an interim injunction has been granted by the Subordinate Judge in that suit, restraining the defendants from taking possession of the building or from disturbing the plaintiff or his tenants in its possession. Mr. Velinker urges that, in view of this injunction, the Court should, at any rate, not act under the latter part of sub-s. (6), namely, exercise its power of restoring possession to the petitioner. He also urges that, in view of this injunction, the Court should refrain from passing an order even under the first part, declaring the petitioner to be entitled to possession until evicted in due course of law and forbidding all disturbance of such possession until such eviction.

It is, of course, desirable to avoid a conflict of authority between a Criminal and a Civil Court, and Mr. Thakor for the petitioner does not object to the question of restoration of possession being held over until the petitioner has had an opportunity of appearing in the injunction matter and endeavouring to get that injunction dissolved, or at any rate, not continued. That, in our opinion, is the best course to adopt. It is quite possible that, when the Subordinate Judge has considered the effect of the proceedings between the parties under s. 145, Cr. P. C., he will not continue the injunction, in view of the fact that sub-s. (6) and the connected form No. 22 in Sch. V, allow a Magistrate to give directions as to possession with a legal effect that is valid until actual eviction or ouster by due course of law. But in saying this, I do not of course in any way wish to prejudge the question, which will have to be determined by the Subordinate Judge and which it is entirely for him to decide. But in regard to the other question whether we should not substitute the declaratory order that we should normally have passed for the Magistrate's order which is the subject of our revision, it seems to me clear that it would be unfair to allow the opponent all the advantage of his forcible and wrongful dispossession, merely because he has, since the Magistrate's findings, gone to the Civil Court, almost at the very last minute before the matter came before us for final orders. Proceedings under s. 145 are generally taken as a preliminary skirmish before the actual battle in a Civil Court. One side or the other generally gets some advantage out of the proceedings. But, in the present case, the advantage should, under the decision of the Magistrate as now finally settled, be given to the petitioner, and any subsequent civil suit ought to start on the basis of her having obtained that advantage. I am certainly against any action which would allow her to be jockeyed out of this advantage by manœuvres of the kind that have taken place in the present case, and I think that the matter should be disposed of on the basis as if the Magistrate himself had had jurisdiction to alter his previous order on June 13, 1925, when he recorded his findings. Subject to the decision in a subsequent civil suit between the parties, he could then have passed an order in favour of the petitioner just as he had passed an order in favour of the opponent in the original proceedings. Again, this Court could, in December 1924 have passed a similar order, had it not been necessary to clear up some of the facts. Therefore, in spite of the interim injunction, I think that this Court should at once pass an order substituting the petitioner for the opponent in the actual order that the Magistrate passed, that is to say, declaring that the petitioner should be treated as being in possession of the property in dispute inasmuch as she was forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed thereof by the opponent on November 22, 1923, and so entitled to retain what the law considers in the circumstances to be her actual possession, until ousted by due course of law, and strictly forbidding any disturbance of her possession in the meantime. Of course in view of the subsequent suit and the undesirability of any judicial conflict, this last prohibition is without prejudice to what may be decided in the injunction matter and what we may further order about it, when the matter comes up before us again.

The other question before us, namely, whether we should actually direct the Magistrate to restore possession to Bai Jiba, is adjourned for three weeks.

After hearing Counsel we think that the Magistrate's order that each party should bear his own costs should also be revised and that, as the petitioner has substantially succeeded and it has been held that she was wrongfully dispossessed by the opponent, we should substitute for that order an order that the opponent should bear the petitioner's costs incurred in the Magistrate's Court, including any costs in connection with the remand to his Court in December 1924: the Magistrate to assess the costs so recoverable by the petitioner.

Mr. N. P. Desai, for the Applicant.

Mr. Velinker (with him Mr. C. N. Pandya), for the Opponent.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

[The Subordinate Judge who was trying the civil suit dissolved the interim injunction on July 27, 1925, and Chandu Lal appealed against that order in the Court of the District Judge. Jiba applied in revision to the High Court and the following judgment was delivered:—]

JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J.—The First Class Subordinate Judge of Nadiad has now passed an order on July 27, 1925, dismissing the application for a temporary injunction with costs. This means that the interim injunction that he had granted is dissolved. That being so, there is nothing now to prevent our directing the Magistrate under sub-s. (6) of s. 145 to restore possession of the premises to the applicant Bai Jiba, who (it has been held) was forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed thereof. The only request that is made to us is that we should restrain our hands at present, on the ground that an appeal has been made to the District Judge from the Subordinate Judge's order. An affidavit has been filed which states that such an appeal has been made and shows that the District Judge has refused to grant an interim injunction ex parte. We think that there is clearly no sufficient ground for our not now passing the order that we would have done on July 1 last, but for the impediment that existed owing to the Subordinate Judge's interim injunction. That being cleared out of the way, we do not think that there is any reason why the opponent, who resorted to the Civil Court at the very last stage, should benefit by this manœuvre. The restoration of possession, just like the injunction, will be subject to the decision of Civil Courts in the matter, and, therefore, no undue hardship is caused to the opponent by giving the applicant the full benefit of the proceeding under s. 145, Cr. P. C., in which she has succeeded. Accordingly, we refuse to grant a further adjournment, and now direct the Resident Magistrate, First Class, Nadiad, to restore possession of the premises in question to the applicant Bai Jiba, the widow of Shivlal Maganlal.

In this case we think that costs should be allowed to the petitioner on the ordinary appellate side scale. It is no doubt true that the powers of the C. P. C. as to costs cannot be imported into criminal proceedings. But in the present case the Magistrate can award costs under the express provisions of s. 148, sub-s. (3), and costs have in fact been so awarded. It is argued that we have no power in revision to pass an order for costs incurred in the hearing of the application to this Court. I think, however, that such an order is covered by the wide powers given in s. 439, Cr. P. C. This refers to s. 423, and the present case can be held to fall under cl. (d) of that section. As the Magistrate has power to award costs, it is a consequential order that is just and proper to allow the applicant the costs incurred in the application to this Court, which was necessitated by a misapprehension of the Magistrate and in which she has succeeded. There is also a precedent in the order passed by this Court in Revisional Application No. 149 of 1924, in which a similar order of costs was made. The applicant is, therefore, allowed her costs, as already mentioned.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Vakalatnama—Criminal cases—Appearance by Advocate or Vakil on behalf of accused—Written authority, necessity of filing—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 340, 419.

There is no provision either in the Cr. P. C., or in the rules of the Patna High Court requiring an Advocate or Vakil of that Court to file a duly stamped appointment in writing in order to enable him to present an application or appeal or conduct a criminal case on behalf of the accused. [p. 716, col. 2.]

Mr. S. M. Gupta, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—Mr. S. M. Gupta, an Advocate of this Court, presented an application for revision on behalf of Subda Santal and another, under the provisions of ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C. The application was admitted and notice was ordered to issue. Mr. Gupta was thereupon asked by the office to supply an authority on behalf of the petitioners duly stamped. He objected on the ground that in criminal cases no authority in writing was necessary. The Registrar has referred the matter to us; and the question for decision is whether a duly stamped appointment in writing is necessary to be filed by an Advocate or a Vakil of this Court appearing on behalf of accused persons in criminal cases.

As the matter was of importance we thought it necessary to issue notice to the Government Advocate and we have heard the Government Advocate as well as Mr. Gupta. Mr. Gupta contends that no authority in writing is necessary for an Advocate or a Vakil in criminal cases and the Government Advocate supports him.

The office has drawn our attention to the rules of this Court. Rule 21 of Ch. XII of the High Court Rules provides that "a criminal appeal which is to be presented to the Court shall in the first instance be given to the trial clerk, who shall note on it whether it is properly stamped, is within time and is admissible and shall return it at once". Rule 1 of Ch. XII prescribes "that the rules in Ch. III shall apply as far as possible to applications made under Ch. XII which deals with the procedure in criminal cases. Rule 4 (iv) of Ch. III provides that every petition shall be presented either by the petitioner or declarant or his recognised agent or his Pleader or some person appointed in writing in each case by such Pleader to present the same"; and the note attached to this rule says that "Pleader" means Advocate, Vakil or attorney. These rules do not prescribe that in criminal cases an authority in writing has to be filed by an Advocate or Vakil when presenting a criminal appeal or application.

Rule 5A of Ch. XVII of the High Court Rules prescribes that "notwithstanding anything contained in O. III, r. 4 (3) of the First Schedule of the C. P. C., 1908, no Advocate shall be entitled to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person unless he presents an appointment in writing, duly signed by such person or his recognized agent or by some other agent duly authorized by power-of-attorney to act in this behalf; or unless he is instructed by an attorney or Pleader duly authorized to act on behalf of such person". This rule refers to civil cases governed by the C. P. C., and has no reference to criminal cases. There is, therefore, nothing in the High Court Rules requiring an Advocate or a Vakil to file an appointment in writing when presenting a criminal appeal or application.

Section 340 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, provides that "Any person accused of an offence before a Criminal Court, or against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code in any such Court, may of right be defended by a Pleader". The word "Pleader" is defined in s. 4 (r) of the Code, when used with reference to any proceeding in any Court, to mean "a Pleader or a mukhtar authorised under any law for the time being in force to practise in such Court, and includes (1) an Advocate, a Vakil and an attorney of a High Court so authorised, and (2) any mukhtar or other person appointed with the permission of the Court to act in such proceeding". Section 419 of the Code prescribes "every appeal shall be made in the form of a petition in writing presented by the appellant or his Pleader". The Cr. P. C., unlike the C. P. C., nowhere prescribes the mode of appointment of Pleaders; and I find no authority for the proposition that in criminal cases a Pleader must file an authority from his client in order to enable him to present an application or appeal on behalf of his client, and to act for him in criminal cases.

Article 10 of Sch. II to the Indian Court Fees Act prescribes a fee for mukhtarnamas and vakalatnamas when presented for the conduct of any one case to any Civil or Criminal Court including a High Court. This merely means that when an authority is filed, such authority must be stamped. It does not make it necessary that a vakalatnama or mukhtarnama must be filed in criminal cases.

When we examine the older enactments relating to procedure in criminal cases, we find it provided that persons accused of criminal offences are entitled as of right to be defended by Pleaders. Act, XXXVIII of 1850, which was known as the Mofussil Prisoners' Counsel Act, provided that in all Courts and before all Magistrates, every person on trial for commission of any offence shall be admitted to defend himself either personally or by his authorised agent; and it provided that "in those Courts in which any person now has by law the right of employing whomsoever he can employ as Counsel or Pleader nothing in this Act shall be deemed to restrict that right; in all other cases those persons only shall be deemed authorised agents within the meaning of this Act who are either Advocates of one of the Supreme Courts of Justice established by Royal Charter, or authorised Pleaders of the Civil Courts of the East India Company, or, by leave of the Court, Magistrate or other person before whom the prisoner is on trial, any other person who is employed by the prosecutor or prisoner as his agent." This Act does not prescribe the mode of appointment of authorized agents, and it enacted that Advocates of the Supreme Court and authorized Pleaders of Civil Courts were deemed to be authorized agents of an accused person.

In the Cr. P. C., (Act XXV of 1861) no provision was made as to the mode of appointment of Pleaders, although s. 432 of the Act provided that "every person charged before any Criminal Court with an offence may of right be defended by Counsel or authorized agent".

Act XXXVIII of 1850 was repealed by Act XVII of 1862 in places where the Cr. P. C. was brought in force; but it did not in any way affect the right of an accused person to employ a Pleader, and no provision was made for the mode of appointment of such Pleader.

Act VIII of 1869 which was the Cr. P. C., Amendment Act gave the same right to persons charged with an offence before any Criminal Court to be defended by any Barrister or attorney of a High Court, or by any Pleader duly qualified under the provisions of Act XX of 1865, or any other law in force for the time being relating to Pleaders. Section 11 of Act XX of 1865 authorized Pleaders to practise in Criminal Courts. Here also the mode of appointment was not prescribed.

Act X of 1872 which was an Act for regulating the procedure of the Courts of Criminal Judicature provided in s. 186 that "every person accused in any Criminal Court of an offence may of right be defended by any Barrister or attorney of a High Court, or by any Pleader duly qualified under the provisions of Act XX of 1865, or any other law in force for the time being relating to Pleaders."

The question was raised in the Madras High Court as to whether an Advocate or attorney of the High Court, or an authorised Pleader appearing in defence of an accused person under s. 186 of the Act of 1872 was required to file a vakalatnama, and the High Court ruled that no vakalatnama was in such a case required [vide High Court Proceedings, 23rd November 1874 (1)].

We have referred to the provisions of the present Cr. P. C., relating to the right of an accused person to be defended by a Pleader; and we find that from the earliest time the Legislature has refrained from making any provision prescribing the mode of appointment of a Pleader to act for a person accused of an offence in Criminal Courts. The Legislature did think it fit to make such provisions for appointment of Pleaders in civil cases, but refrained from making any such provision as regards criminal cases.

I, therefore, find no provision either in the Cr. P C., or in the rules of the High Court requiring an Advocate or Vakil of this Court to file a duly stamped appointment in writing in criminal cases. It has been the invariable practice in this Court to allow Advocates to appear and act for accused persons in criminal cases without any authority in writing. The new r. 5-A of Ch. XVII of the High Court Rules makes it obligatory for an Advocate of this Court to file an appointment in writing in civil cases; but it did not in any way interfere with the practice in criminal cases. It may be observed that in some criminal cases, such as capital sentence cases, the Crown appoints a Pleader to represent a person accused of an offence, and in those cases clearly no appointment in writing from the accused person is required. I am of opinion that it will unduly restrict the right of an accused person to be defended by a Pleader in a criminal case if he is required to file a stamped authority enabling the Pleader to defend him.

I, therefore, am of opinion that no appointment in writing is necessary in order to entitle an Advocate or a Vakil to act for an accused person in criminal cases; and that no appointment in writing was necessary to be filed in the present case.

Ross, J.—I agree.

This is an application in revision against an order passed under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. Section 340 of the Code provides that any person accused of an offence before a Criminal Court, or against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code in such Court, may of right be defended by a Pleader; and it makes no difference to the present question whether the petitioner is a person accused of an offence or a person against whom proceedings have been taken under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. There is nothing in that Code which requires any written authority to defend an accused person, and it differs in this respect from the C. P. C. Whereas the former Code entitles an accused person to be defended of right by a Pleader without more, O. III, r. 1 of the latter Code enacts that any appearance, application, or act in or to any Court, required or authorised by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognised agent (defined in r. 2) or by a Pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf. While, therefore, an accused person can either defend himself or be defended by a Pleader, a party to a civil suit can appear either in person or by a recognised agent or by a Pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf. The present question has arisen out of r. 5 (a) which has been recently added to Ch. XVII of the Rules of the High Court. Now while it may be argued that although that rule refers to O. III, r. 4 cl. 3 of the C. P. C., yet that reference does not limit its application to civil proceedings and the rule, in terms, is of general application; still, I think that when the language of the rule is considered, it must be held to have been framed with reference to O. III of the C. P. C. The language closely follows that of O. III, r. 1, and the object of the rule apparently was to abolish the special privilege conferred on Advocates by r 4 of that order. I, therefore, do not think that the rule should be construed in a general sense or as intended to affect or alter the criminal practice in this Court

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 100 (1) (c), 233, 235, 254, 360—Conspiracy—Sameness of transaction—Complaint, offence disclosed in—Joint trial—Joint charges—Non-compliance with s. 360, whether illegality.

The offence of conspiracy and offences committed in pursuance of that conspiracy form one and the same transaction. [p. 720, col. 1.]

Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Manmohan Roy, 26 Ind. Cas. 307; 19 C. W. N. 672; 21 C. L. J. 195; 16 Cr. L. J. 3 and Emperor v. Nga Aung Gyaw, 76 Ind. Cas. 830; 1 R. 604; 2 Bur. L. J. 224; A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 98; 25 Cr. L. J. 270, followed.

When a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence upon complaint, it is competent for him to take cognizance of any offence that is disclosed by evidence. [ibid.]

Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress, 1 C. W. N. 105, Raghub Acharjee v. Empress, 3 C. W. N. cclxxix (279), Queen-Empress v. Deokinandan, 10 A. 39; A. W. N. (1887) 264; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 26 and Ahmed Esoof Bhaymeah v. Crown, 10 Bur. L. R. 77; 1 Cr. L. J. 370, distinguished.

Therefore, where a Magistrate acting on the facts disclosed in the evidence for the prosecution adds a second charge in respect of an act alleged to have been done in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy contained in the complaint, his action is not only justified under s. 235, Cr. P. C., but such initiation taken by him is on the original complaint and not upon his own knowledge or suspicion. [p. 720, col. 2.]

Abdul Salim v. Emperor, 69 Ind. Cas. 145; 49 C. 573: 35 C. L. J. 279; 26 C. W. N. 680; A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 107; 23 Cr. L. J. 657, referred to.

Where an act of the accused is done in pursuance of the conspiracy mentioned in the original complaint, a charge in respect of that act may be framed without any further complaint. [p. 720, col. 1.]

Where the offences form part of the same transaction and law allows their joint trial, it is immaterial whether the two offences are included in one charge or whether they are separated and each of them made the basis of a charge [p. 721, col. 1.]

Subrahmania Aiyar v. King-Emperor, 25 M. 61; 11 M. L. J 233; 3 Bom. L. R. 540; 28 I. A. 257; 5 C. W. N. 866; 2 Weir 271; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 160 (P. C.), construed.

Bam Subhag Singh v. Emperor, 30 Ind. Cas. 465; 19 C. W. N. 972; 16 Cr. L. J. 641, Quinn v. Leathem, (1901) A. C. 495; 70 L. J P. C. 76; 85 L. T. 289; 50 W. R. 139; 65 P. J. 708; 17 T. L R. 749 and Moharuddi Malita v. Jodu Nath Mandul, 11 C. W. N. 54; 4 Cr. L. J. 415, referred to.

Where the Magistrate has tried to consult the convenience of the defence Counsel and also at the same time tried to comply with the requirements of s. 360, Cr. P. C., as far as possible and it is not alleged that failure to comply with this provision of law has resulted in any inaccuracy in the deposition of any of the witnesses, the defect is a mere irregularity curable under s. 537, Cr. P. C., and not an illegality vitiating trial. [p. 724, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Maung Ba, J.—The history of this case is briefly as follows:—

S. P. S. Mani Aiyar (1st appellant) filed an insolvency petition on the Original Side of the High Court on 12th December 1923, in Insolvency Case No. 258 of 1923, praying that D. K. Cassim and Sons might be adjudicated insolvent on the ground that certain immoveable properties belonging to the said firm had been under attachment for over three weeks in C. E. Nos. 98 and 99 of 1923 of the Sub-Divisional Court of Insein. The respondents opposed the application and at the conclusion of the enquiry it was dismissed on the ground that the period of attachment was less than three weeks. In the course of that enquiry the learned Judge, who decided that case, found that the attachment warrants in the two execution cases mentioned above had been tampered with and the dates of execution altered from the 27th November to the 20th and 21st November. Acting under s. 476, Cr. P. C., he took action against Abdul Rahman, Mani Aiyar and Guruswamy, and forwarded a complaint to the District Magistrate's Court of Insein on 10th March, 1924. That complaint reads as follows:— "In Insolvency Case No. 258 of 1923 of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon in its Original Civil Jurisdiction under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), which was heard before me........... on the 21st and 22nd January, and the 13th and 15th February, 1924, the 2nd accused filed a petition whereby he sought to have his debtors, D. K. S. Ebrahim and two others, persons, carrying on business in partnership as merchants and boat-owners under the name of "D. K. Cassim and Sons" at No. 64, Tsekay Maung Tewlay Street, Rangoon, adjudicated insolvents under cl. (e) of s. 9 of the said Act on the ground that certain immoveable properties belonging to the said debtors had been under attachment for over three weeks in C. E. Nos 98 and 99 of 1923 of the Sub-Divisional Court of Insein; (2) that at the hearing of the said insolvency case instituted on the petition of the 2nd accused, S. P. S. Mani Aiyar, there were produced and given in evidence two warrants of attachment of immoveable property issued by the Sub-Divisional Court of Insein in its Execution Cases Nos. 98 and 99 of 1923, which warrants are marked in the said insolvency case proceedings as Exs. 3 and 4 respectively, (3) that as will appear from the judgment pronounced by me as such Judge as aforesaid in the said Insolvency Case No. 258 of 1923, on the 22nd day of February, 1924 (a certified copy whereof is hereunto annexed and marked "A") the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon recorded its finding that:—

(a) Some person or persons connected with the Sub-Divisional Court of Insein in conjunction with the accused hereinabove named appeared to have conspired together to alter the dates on the warrants. Exhibits 3 and 4 in the said insolvency case proceedings, so as to make it seem that they had been executed on the 20th and 21st November, 1923, that is, to commit the offence of forgery described in s. 463 of the Indian Penal Code; and that

(b) In the opinion of the Court it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into the said offence which is punishable under s. 120B read with ss. 466 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code, with rigorous imprisonment which may extend to seven years.

Guruswamy and Abdul Rahman appealed against the above order in Civil Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 41 and 42 of 1924. The result of the appeal was that the complaint, so far as it affected Abdul Rahman and Guruswamy, was set aside. The learned Chief Justice remarked that it was open to the Court, if it saw good grounds for so doing, to take action against them, or to Mahomed Ebrahim to lay a complaint before the Magistrate in respect to them. That appeal was decided on the 19th May, 1924.

Accordingly Mahomed Ebrahim on the 26th June, 1924, made a complaint to the District Magistrate, Insein, against Abdul Rahman and Guruswamy charging them with offences under s. 120B, read with ss. 465, 466 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code. The two cases were by consent amalgamated, and the three accused tried together. Guruswamy was discharged, but Abdul Rahman and Mani Aiyar were charged, but charged only under s. 120B, Indian Penal Code. At that stage Mani Aiyar and Abdul Rahman again came up to the High Court in revision. It was then held that the District Magistrate was wrong in framing that charge without a complaint or consent of the Governor-in-Council or of the Local Government. Consequently all the proceedings against Abdul Rahman were set aside. In the case of Mani Aiyar also, the charge under s. 120B alone was set aside with a direction to the Magistrate that he had jurisdiction to frame a charge against Mani Aiyar under s. 120B read with ss. 466 and 109, Indian Penal Code, which were mentioned in the original complaint of the Hon'ble Judge. The proceedings were remitted to the Magistrate to be continued so far as Mani Aiyar is concerned as from the stage they were in when the charge was framed and to frame a charge in accordance with the complaint laid. It was further pointed out that it was open to the Magistrate to frame an additional charge under ss. 466 and 109 if he saw fit.

Mahomed Ebrahim then filed a fresh complaint in January, 1925, against Abdul Rahman after having obtained the sanction of the Governor-in-Council under s. 196 (a), Cr. P. C. In that complaint Ebrahim charged Abdul Rahman with the following offence:—That the accused in collusion and in conspiracy with S. P. S. Mani Aiyar instigated and abetted some person or persons unknown to alter the dates of the execution of the warrants of attachment in C. E. Nos. 98 and 99 of 1923 of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Judge, Insein, from the 27th November, 1923 to the 20th and 21st November, 1923 respectively and has thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 120B read with ss. 466 and 109, Indian Penal Code, or in the alternative with having abetted the offence of forgery, an offence punishable under ss. 466 and 109, Indian Penal Code.

The case against Abdul Rahman and that against Mani Aiyar were amalgamated and tried together by the District Magistrate, Insein. Before much progress had been made the case got transferred to the District Magistrate, Rangoon, and the trial started de novo. That District Magistrate abandoned the charge of conspiracy under s. 120B altogether and framed two charges against each of the accused.

The charges against Mani Aiyar are as follows:—

"That you between the 7th and 12th December, 1923, jointly with Abdul Rahman or some other unknown Indian did instigate some person or persons unknown to forge certain false dates and serial number on two documents purporting to be made by a public servant, namely, the warrants, Exs. N-2 and O-2, issued by the Sub-Divisional Judge of Insein in C. E. Nos. 98 and 99 of 1923 so as to make it appear that those warrants had been executed on the 20th and 21st November, 1923, instead of the 27th, and inasmuch as the said forgery was committed in consequence of the instigation, you thereby committed an offence punishable under ss. 466 and 109, Indian Penal Code ond within my cognizance. Secondly that you on or about the 8th December, 1923 jointly with Abdul Rahman or some other unknown Indian at Insein instigated the Head Process-Server, San Pe, to forge the Register kept by him as a public servant, namely, Register 4-B, Ex. Q, so as to make it appear, that the warrants, Exs. N-2 and O-2, issued in C. E. Nos. 98 and 99 had been received on the 20th and 21st November instead of November 26th, 1923 and thereby inasmuch as the forgery was committed in consequence of the said instigation, you committed an offence punishable under ss. 466 and 116, Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance."

The charges against Abdul Rahman were the same except that in those charges the words "or some other unknown Indian" were omitted.

Both the accused were found guilty of both the charges, but they were punished only under the first charge, no sentence being passed under the second. Both the accused have now appealed, and they have taken certain legal objections to the validity of the trial. The first objection taken on behalf of Abdul Rahman is that the subject-matter of the second charge framed against him not having been disclosed either in the complaint or in the examination of the complainant the learned Trial Magistrate could only have taken cognizance of that offence under s. 190 (1) (c), Cr. P. C., and that the learned Magistrate not having followed the provisions of s. 191 of the said Code, his proceedings in connection with the charge are illegal and void. To consider this objection it is necessary to refer back to the original complaint made by Mahomed Ebrahim. That complaint is as follows :—"The accused in collusion and in conspiracy with Mani Aiyar instigated and abetted some person or persons unknown to alter the dates of the execution of the warrants of attachments in C. E. Nos. 98 and 99 of 1923 of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Judge of Insein."

From the above it will be seen that the charge which the complainant brought against the accused, Abdul Rahman, was one of abetment by conspiracy. The evidence of the prosecution witnesses, San Pe and Shwe Tun, if believed, would disclose an attempt on the part of Abdul Rahman to induce San Pe to alter the dates in the Process Register, Ex. IV, so that the alteration of dates on the warrants might not be detected. In other words, this alleged attempt of Abdul Rahman was in the nature of an act done in pursuance of the above conspiracy.

In the case of Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Manmohan Roy (1) it was held that the offence of conspiracy and offences committed in pursuance of that conspiracy form one and the same transaction.

The same view was held in Emperor v. Nga Aung Gyaw (2).

When a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence upon complaint, it is competent for him to take cognizance of any offence that is disclosed by the evidence. It is, however, urged that such manner of taking cognizance fall within cl. (c) of s. 190 (1). In support of this contention several rulings have been quoted, one of which was Khudiram Mookerjea v. Empress (3). It was a case where a Magistrate took cognizance of an offence against a witness upon the facts disclosed by the evidence of another witness. It was held that the case fell within cl. (c) and not cl. (a). The judgment was a short one, and no reason was given for coming to that conclusion.

The next one was Raghab Acharjee v. Empress (4). That case is quite different from the present one. In that case the 2nd accused was brought in upon the evidence adduced on behalf of the defence of the orginal accused ; so it was held that such a proceeding could not be regarded as a proceeding upon complaint or any other foundation upon which the case originally proceeded, and that the case, therefore, fell within the terms of cl. (c), sub-s. (1) of s. 190.

The third case was Queen-Empress v. Deokinandan (5). The facts in that case are not similar to those in the present case. The first complaint was under ss. 352 and 504 of the Penal Code. It contained no charge of defamation, but the Magistrate added a charge of defamation upon statements made by the complainant in his examination under s. 200, Cr. P. C. So it was held that no legal complaint had been made by the aggrieved person within the meaning of ss. 4 and 198 so as to enable the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence.

The next case was Ahmad Esoof Bhymeah v. Crown (6). In that case the prosecution of a witness, an excise case, was sanctioned for the offence of giving false evidence with regard to a certain statement, but, when the accused was charged, an entirely new state of facts was made the basis of the charge. It was held that the accused had been prejudiced, and that there was a failure of justice by reason of want of a proper trial.

In the present case, as already pointed out above, the Magistrate, acting on the facts disclosed in the evidence for the prosecution, added a second charge in respect of an act alleged to have been done in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy contained in the complaint of Mahomed Ebrahim. His action was not only justified under s. 235, Cr. P. C., but such initiation taken by him was on the original complaint and not upon his own knowledge or suspicion.

In the case of Abdul Salim v. Emperor (7) it was held that a charge under ss. 120 (b) and 420, Indian Penal Code, of conspiracy to cheat between certain dates may be legally joined with individual charges of every distinct offence committed in pursuance of the conspiracy by different members of it on different intermediate dates. It was further held that the legality of the joint trial depends on the accusation, and not on the result of the trial.

The second legal objection taken on behalf of appellant, Mani Aiyar, was to the effect that the proceedings were void under the provisions of cl. (h) of s. 530, Cr. P. C., inasmuch as the Magistrate was not empowered to frame the second charge without the complaint of the Hon'ble Judge of the High Court sitting in insolvency.

It is contended that the Bailiff's Register No. IV-B, Ex. Q, had been produced or given in evidence in the insolvency proceeding, and that in consequence a complaint of the Insolvency Court is necessary under cl. (c), sub-s. (1) of s. 195, Cr. P. C. In my opinion that contention is not tenable because the act imputed to Mani Aiyar was done in pursuance of the conspiracy mentioned in the original complaint. The reason for omitting cl. 5 of the old s. 195 in the amended section was to do away with sanctions granted to private persons under the old section. Under that clause a Court taking cognizance might frame a charge of any offence as disclosed by the facts different from the offence mentioned in the sanction. Such an amendment of s. 195 evidently is to stop private persons from obtaining sanction as a means of wreaking vengeance and to give the Court concerned full discretion in deciding whether any prosecution is necessary or not.

The scope of a sanction is much more limited than that of a complaint. In s. 254 it is laid down that, after evidence for the prosecution and examination of the accused has been taken and made, the Magistrate is to frame a charge of " an " offence which the accused appears to have committed, and which the Magistrate is competent to try. The Magistrate is not restricted to the orignal offence which he has taken cognizance of. Moreover, s. 235, Cr. P. C., permits a joinder of charges in respect of offences arising out of the same transaction.

The third objection taken is common to both the appellants. It is that two distinct offences committed in relation to the two attachment warrants have been lumped together in one charge in contravention of s. 233, Cr. P. C. It is urged that this joinder of two distinct offences in one charge is an illegality fatal to the trial.

On this point there is a conflict of judicial opinion. In some cases it was held that such a misjoinder amounted to an illegality while in others it was held that it amounted to a mere irregularity. The former opinion appears to have been based upon the Privy Council ruling in Subrahmania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (8). In that case offences spreading over a period exceeding twelve months were joined together in contravention of ss. 233 and 234. Their Lordships held that the disregard of an express provision of law as to the " mode of trial" was not a mere irregularity such as could be remedied by s. 537, Cr. P. C. They further held that such a phrase as "irregularity" is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for more different offences of the same kind, and that those offences being spread over a longer period than allowed by law could have been joined together in one indictment.

Different interpretations have been put on that ruling since 1901 when that case was decided. The interpretation put by the learned Judges who decided the case of Ram Subhag Singh v. Emperor (9) was that the words " mode of trial " had reference to the constitution of the trial, and not to a formal defect in the proceedings in the trial which was properly constituted. So they held that the omission to frame two separate charges instead of one was an irregularity curable by s. 537, Cr. P. C., and that the case of Subrahmania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (8) is not an authority for the proposition that the failure to observe the first part of s. 233 is fatal to the trial. They further held that the effect of the words "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained in s. 537" cannot be that the section is to have no application if there has been any departure in any of the previous sections of the Code, and that those words must be read as having reference only to ss. 529 and 536, and not referring to the entire Code that precedes that section. The misjoinder dealt with in Ram Subhag Singh's case (9), was of framing only one charge in respect of hurt caused to two different persons. Here also the defect complained of was of framing one charge in respect of the alterations made on two warrants.

Lord Halsbury in Quinn v. Leathem (10), has indicated how far a judgment is to be regarded as an authority. He said: "Every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved or assumed to be proved since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but are governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found.

A case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it."

In Subrahmania Ayyar's case (8), what was decided was that where the Code expressly laid down that only three offences of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months whether in respect of the same person or not could be joined and tried together, it was nothing short of an illegality to disregard that plain provision of the law and to frame charges in respect of offences spreading over more than twelve months, and to try them together. In other words, the disobedience in that case was more than an irregularity; it was an illegality going to the root of the trial. The main consideration should be whether any error, omission or irregularity would cause any embarrassment either to the defence or to the Court, whether it would prejudice the accused in his defence, and whether it had caused a miscarriage of justice. "Irregularity" has not been defined, but the Judicial Committee have said that the illustration to the section itself sufficiently shows what was meant. The illustration shows that where a signature by the Magistrate is required, but he only initials, it is purely an irregularity not affecting the validity of the proceeding. Explanation to s. 537, Cr. P. C., clearly lays down that in determining whether any error, omission or irregularity in any proceeding under this Code has occasioned a failure of justice, the Court shall have regard to the fact whether the objection could and should have been raised at an earlier stage in the proceedings.

In the present case in the District Magistrate's Court Mr. Campagnac appeared for Mani Aiyar, while Sir Hari Singh Gour Messrs. de Glanville and Mahomed Auzam appeared for the second accused, Abdul Rahman. Those eminent lawyers raised no objection when the two charges were framed by the District Magistrate. This joinder of the two charges does not seem to have in any way prejudiced either of the accused. It cannot be said that they have had no notice of the charges which they have had to meet, and that they have been embarrassed by having to meet charges which are in no way connected with each other. The offences form part of the same transaction, and the law allows that they can be tried together. It is immaterial whether the two offences were included in one charge or whether they were separated and each of them was made the basis of a charge. It should be remembered that the appellants have been punished as if the alterations on the two warrants constituted only one offence. This irregularity, if any, has in a sense benefited the appellants since they have escaped double punishment for the two offences.

In the case of Mohasuddi Malita v. Jadu Nath Mandul (11) three offences of theft were included in one charge, and the accused were convicted and separately sentenced for the three offences of the theft, though they had been charged with having committed "an offence." Even for such a more serious irregularity the learned Judges who decided that case held that it was an error of form, but not an irregularity or illegality.

Mr. Campagnac has also raised an objection that his client Mani Aiyar has been grossly prejudiced by being jointly tried with Abdul Rahman. The learned Advocate seems to have been inconsistent. In the Court of the District Magistrate of Insein when Mahomed Ebrahim filed his complaint against Abdul Rahman and Guruswamy, Mr. Campagnac gave his consent to the amalgamation of the case against Mani Aiyar with that against Abdul Rahman and Guruswamy, and to the joint trial of the three accused. Had Mr. Campagnac considered such a procedure prejudicial, he should have raised an objection at that time. Not only did he fail to raise an objection, but he also gave his consent to that procedure being adopted.

Another objection common to both the appellants is that, having regard to the facts disclosed in the affidavit of Naravan, a clerk of Abdul Rahman, the mandatory provisions of s. 360, Cr P. C., have not been complied with and that the trial has been vitiated thereby. That affidavit is reproduced below:—

"I, P. T. Narayan, son of Pandit Govinda

---

(11) 11 C. W. N. 54; 4 Cr. L. J. 415.

Prasad Panday, aged 29 years, Hindu, clerk to Mr. V. M. Abdul Rahman, on solemn affirmation say as follows:—

1. I say that I am a clerk employed by Mr. V. M. Abdul Rahman and that from the commencement of the case against him, viz., Cr. Reg. Trial No. 18 of 1925 of the Court of the District Magistrate, Rangoon, I looked after the case on his behalf till its conclusion.

2. I say that I was present on all the dates on which witnesses were examined before H. F. Sitzler, Esq., the District Magistrate, Rangoon, throughout the said trial.

3. I say that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate in the said trial and in relation to the reading over of the depositions to the witnesses, who did not know English was to hand over the depositions to the Interpreter who read over and interpreted the same to the witnesses and that while such reading over and interpretation was going on, the learned District Magistrate went on recording the depositions of other witnesses. I say that in the case of English-speaking witnesses who gave their depositions in English, their depositions were handed over to them to read and the said witnesses read the depositions to themselves silently.

I say that in the case of some witnesses who were examined in Burmese and could read English, namely, Po Shin, Head Clerk, Ba Kyaw, the Copyist, and Shwe Htun, the Process-server, the depositions were handed to them and they read their depositions to themselves silenly.

I say that in none of those instances where the witnesses read over their depositions to themselves silently, the depositions as recorded were read over and explained to the accused.

I say that even in the case of Burmese depositions, the statements of witnesses were at no time read over and explained to the accused.

4. I say that my master, Mr. V. M. Abdul Rahman, does not know Burmese."

In connection with this affidavit the learned District Magistrate has been asked by us to send in a formal report, and he has done so. It is as follows:—

"Sir H. S. Gour was extremely anxious to get the trial over as quickly as possible, so anxious indeed that he wished to go on when I wished to question a witness about his depositions. When the deposition of a witness was finished, another witness would be called and Dr. Gour would then at once prepare to cross-examine him and I had to interrupt him in order to check and sign the deposition of the witness that had been previously given. The procedure adopted in getting the depositions recorded and read over was as follows:—

"1. In the morning if the evidence of a short witness was taken, he was made to step down from the box and if his deposition was in English it was given to him to read and if it was in Burmese, it was given to the Interpreter or to the Bench Clerk to read over to him. Then the next witness was called into the box and as soon as I saw that the reading of the deposition to the first witness had been finished, I used to interrupt the recording of the deposition of the second witness and call up the first witness and ask him whether his statement was correct. If the deposition of the first witness was too long, to make this course convenient, as often happened, I would wait till the examination of the second witness has been finished and then call up the first witness and sign his deposition on satisfying myself that it had been interpreted correctly and that he had understood the deposition. Whenever corrections were made, they were always made in the presence of the accused or his Advocate.

2. Some time, owing to the desire of the parties to get on with the case, it was impossible to follow the procedure indicated above and, on such days, it was my practice to stop in the morning at 1.45 P. M. instead of at 2 P. M., the usual hour for lunch and remain on the Bench till the depositions were read out to the three or four witnesses who had been examined, one after another in the presence of the accused. Similarly, at the afternoon sitting, I used to sit on the Bench after the Advocates had left and insisted on every deposition being read over in my presence and in the presence of the accused and any correction that had to be made was explained to the accused. On the first day, as far as I can remember, when the morning sitting was over, Sir H. S. Gour, Mr. Campagnac, Mr. de Glanville and all the other parties in the case proceeded to leave the Court although I was still on the Bench and, at the same time, the accused tried to follow them. I then pointed out that in order that the law might be complied with, it was necessary that either the Advocates or the accused should remain. Mr. de Glanville also pointed out this to Sir H. S. Gour and on the position being explained to Dr. H. S. Gour, he left the Court with Mr. Campagnac and Mr. Glanville leaving his clients behind. It follows, therefore, that the course adopted was one approved by the Advocates and the parties and they can in no way claim that it has led to a failure of justice............

3 Depositions were read by witnesses themselves when they were acquainted with English, but the Interpreter was standing by all the time ready to explain anything they did not understand and in the case of Shwe Tun, the Interpreter was consulted and he read over portions to him.

4. As all depositions were taken down in English, that is to say, if the witnesses gave evidence in English I recorded it almost in their own words, and if the witnesses gave evidence in Burmese or in other languages I recorded them almost in the very words used by Interpreters, there was no need to consider whether Mani Aiyar and Abdul Rahman knew Burmese or not.

5. I have ascertained that copies of all the depositions were supplied to the accused's Advocates............

It appears to me that if the question of the correctness of the deposition was to be raised it should have been raised at the time as soon as the parties had been supplied with copies.

6. I would remark in conclusion that in a certain number of instances, the depositions of witnesses as recorded by me were examined and read by the Advocates during the morning or ofternoon sitting before I signed them."

From that report it will appear that the learned District Magistrate tried to consult the convenience of the defence Counsel, and also at the same time tried to comply with the requirements of s. 360, Cr. P. C., as far as possible. It has nowhere been alleged that his failure to comply strictly with that provision of the law has resulted in any inaccuracy in the deposition of any of the witnesses. In the absence of such an allegation the objection taken becomes one of a purely technical or academic nature whereby neither appellant has in any way been prejudiced in his defence, nor a miscarriage of justice has been occasioned. The question is whether such a failure should be treated as a mere irregularity which does not go to the root of the trial, and which is curable by s. 537, Cr. P. C., or whether it should be under any circumstance treated as an illegality vitiating the trial.

Mr. Chowdhury has urged that such a failure amounts to an illegality which vitiates the trial, and, in support of that argument, he has cited among others two recent cases of the Calcutta High Court decided by Newbould and Mukerji, JJ.

The first case is Hira Lal Ghose v. Emperor (12). In that case seven witnesses were examined. The record of the depositions of five prosecution witnesses, who were Vakils, showed only their signatures, but there were no certificates endorsed that the evidence had been read over to the witnesses in the presence of the accused and admitted correct. The depositions of the remaining two witnesses bore neither such certificates nor the signatures of the deponents. Newbould, J., observed: "The general object to be secured by Ch. XXV of the Code, which includes s. 360, is to ensure the accuracy of the record, and also that the accused should know and understand what evidence is given at the trial. The reading over of the evidence to the witness is so essential to the framing of an accurate record that I feel bound to hold that the direction in s. 360 that the evidence shall be read over to the witness is imperative, and not only directory. It follows, therefore, that the omission to read over their evidence to these two witnesses was an illegality which vitiated the trial. It is not necessary to consider whether this omission has in fact caused a failure of justice since s. 537 can have no application" Mukerjee, J., observed: "The wording of the section is mandatory. The object of the provisions being to ensure the accuracy of the record, and also that the accused should know and understand the evidence that is given at the trial, the provisions must be held to be obligatory and not merely directory...... .... In the case before us the evidence was not read over to the witnesses at all. The depositions of five of the prosecution witnesses bear at their foot the signatures of the witnesses, and we are asked to presume from those signatures alone that the witnesses had actually read the depositions before they put their signatures down; and as regards two of the prosecution witnesses their signatures even do not appear, and it is admitted that, so far as their depositions are concerned, there was no attempt made to comply even with the spirit of the section. There is, therefore, no escape in the present case from the conclusion that the whole trial was conducted in utter disregard of the imperative provisions of the law as contained in s 360 of the Cr. P. C., and was, therefore, a nullity."

The other case is Dargahi v. Emperor (13), where it was held that the reading over, in the presence of the accused, of the deposition to a witness during the examination of another witness by the Court, is not a compliance with the provisions of s. 360 of the Cr. P. C., and that the trial is vitiated.

The sole object of this provision of the law seems to be to ensure the accuracy of the record. With great respect for the learned Judges who decided those two cases, I am of opinion that the proposition that failure to strictly comply with the provisions of s. 360 will under any circumstances vitiate a trial, no matter whether it has caused a failure of justice or not, is too broad. To take an extreme case, if this failure has occurred with reference to the deposition of a formal witness in a trial where several other material witnesses have been examined in strict compliance with the provisions of the section, should the trial become vitiated? I think it should not; but the failure should be considered as a mere irregularity curable by s. 537. Each case should be decided on its own merits. But of course it is the duty of every Magistrate to avoid such omissions, and the plain provisions of the law should not be disregarded for the sake of convenience.

In Bechu Chaube v. Emperor (14) the effect of the Privy Council ruling in Subrahmania Ayyar's case (8) was discussed with reference to a failure to comply with the provisions of s. 342, Cr. P. C., Stuart, J., observed: "I do not understand their Lordships to have laid down that an error, which has not in any way prejudiced a person convicted, may not be condoned under the provisions of s. 537 if it is not fatal to the validity of the decision and is concerned with the proceedings rather than the mode of trial. Their Lordships in that particular case were considering neither an error, nor an omission, nor an irregularity but an illegality. In that case the trial was vitiated in its inception. A provision of the Cr. P. C. had been transgressed, and the result of the transgression was that the Court had actually no jurisdiction to hear the case. The Court had only jurisdiction to try in one case a person for three offences of the same kind committed within a period of twelve months, and it actually had tried a person for 41 offences committed during a period of two years. Their Lordships held that the course pursued was plainly illegal, ... The tests to be applied in considering whether a particular infringement of the provisions of the Cr. P. C. is one which does or does not come within the purview of s. 537 appear to me to be these: Does the error go to the whole root of the trial? Does it in effect vitiate the proceedings? Has the Court assumed an authority which it does not possess? Has it broken the vital rules of procedure? If the error is of such a nature, the proceedings are vitiated in their very inception and s. 537 has no application. But the mere fact that a certain provision of the Code is imperative does not in itself indicate that a breach of that provision vitiates the whole proceedings." This view was accepted by Brown, J., in the case of Nga Hla U v. Emperor (15). I am also inclined to accept this view, and decide that in the present case the learned District Magistrate has committed an error which may be condoned under the provisions of s. 537, Cr. P. C., and that, as observed with reference to the third objection, the learned Counsel for the defence could and should have raised this objection at an earlier stage in the proceedings as required by the Explanation to s. 537, Cr. P. C. This view was held also by the Patna High Court in Mohiuddin v. Emperor (16), decided in January, 1925.

Now it remains to consider the merits of the case. The points involved appear to be simple enough. They are: (1) whether the attachment warrants in question have been tampered with; (2) if so, who has done it; and (3) whether Abdul Rahman and Mani Aiyar are in any way concerned with it.

As regards the first point, material evidence should be looked for in the documents themselves. Exhibit N-2 is the original warrant issued in Civil Execution Case No. 98 bearing date 19th November, 1923. It is a copy returned to the Court after execution. It was for the attachment of a certain garden land in Sawbwagale Kwin, Kondan Circle, Insein Township, valued at Rs. 10,000. It bears an endorsement of return made by the Process-server, Shwe Htun, showing the date and manner of execution. The endorsement was in ink. A cursory examination of that endorsement may not detect an alteration in the figure showing date in that endorsement, but a close scrutiny can not fail to detect that the figure has been altered. There is a distinct erasure, and a portion of the original figure is easily discernible. The original figure was a "7" in Burmese; the leg of it has been rubbed out and the head hidden under a thick blot of ink, which forms the lower curve of the new figure "o" so the altered date reads 20 instead of 27. There are other alterations noticeable on the right top corner. The original issue numbers were written over with new numbers. The original numbers were 10599 and 10602. The new numbers are 10423 and 10425. On the left quarter margin under the signature "Shwe Htun" the date has been altered from 26 to 20. It is in evidence, and it is also common ground, that Maung Htat, Headman of Sawbwagale, was present at the time of the execution of the warrant. The Exhibit shows his signature and a date under it. Both were written in pencil. So the alteration, if any, will not show up well. However the figure "o" looks much darker than the figure "2" preceding it.

The second warrant, Ex. O-2, is a Court-copy in Civil Execution Case No. 99. It was for the attachment of another portion of the same garden land, and it was executed by the same Process-server, Shwe Htun, in the presence of the same Headman, Myung Htat. It bears date 21st November, 1923. The endorsement of Shwe Htun was in ink. In that endorsement also, an alteration in the date is manifest. By a similar process the figure "7" has been altered to "1". The erasure is plainly discernible, and an attempt has been made to hide it by a blot of ink on the other side of the paper. So the date, as altered, was intended to show that the warrant was executed on the 21st November instead of the 27th. In this warrant the issue numbers have not been altered. So, as has rightly been pointed out by the learned Counsel, Mr. Chowdhury, the first charge is partially incorrect, so far as this warrant is concerned. As regards the date purporting to be that of receipt of the warrant by the Process-server, Shwe Htun, its alteration is plainly discernible. As a faint impression of the Court seal happens to be on that spot, it is now difficult to guess what the original number might have been; but the writing shows that the figure "2" and the figure following it were originally written with one stroke of the pen. The second figure has now been rubbed off, and a big figure "1" has been written in its place. So it is evident that the alterations were intended to show that the first warrant, dated the 19th November, 1923, was received on the 20th and executed on that date, while the other one, dated the 21st November, was received and executed on that date.

Now, we have to find out when these two warrants were received in the Bailiff's office, and issued to the Process-server. Such information is to be obtained from Bailiff's Register No. IV, which is a Register of Processes, and Register No. V, Process-server's Employment Register. Register No. IV is kept in triplicate—one for civil processes, one for criminal and one for revenue—which are indicated by the Letters A, B and C, A for criminal, B for civil and C for revenue. Register IV-B, Ex. Q-1, started from the 23rd October, 1923. It shows that the warrants in question were received by the Bailiff on the 26th November, and issued to the Process-server, Shwe Htun, on the same date along with other processes. The entries in question appear to be in order; and there is nothing to show that they have been interpolated. The processes received on that day bear serial numbers from 10598 to 10648. The first number appears about the middle of page 33 and the last number ends about the third part from the top of page 36. The two entries relating to these warrants are below another entry. The first number 10598 relates to a notice from the District Court. It was shown as received on the 26th of November and issued to the Process-server, Maung Bya, on the same date. It remains to see whether the other Register No. V will support these entries in Register No. IV. Register No. V is to show how the process-servers are employed. There are 26 process-servers and they are shown separately in Register No. V, a certain number of pages being reserved for each. Entries relating to Shwe Htun begin at page 114 of Register No. V with the first serial entry starting from the 9th November. On the 26th November he was shown to have been given several processes. The processes are shown in different groups. The first group is from 13844 to 13854; the second group from 13874 to 13881; the third group from 5296 to 5301; the fourth group from 10634 to 10635; the fifth group from 5280 to 5283; the sixth group from 10599 to 10608; the seventh group 10623 by itself; and the last group 10629. These groups were written one below the other. It will be remembered that the issue numbers for the warrant in Civil Execution Case No. 98 are from 10599 to 10601, and those for the other warrant in Civil Execution Case No. 99 are from 10602 to 10605. These two serial numbers are included in the sixth group which is from 10599 to 10608; that is to say, other numbers, 10606—10608 have been included in this group. On turning to Register No. IV we find that Nos. 10606, 10607 and 10608 were shown as issued to Shwe Htun on the 26th of November. No. 10606 is a summons from the Sub-Divisional Court of Insein, that is the same Court which issued the warrants: No. 10607 is a summons issued by the Township Judge, while No. 10608 is a notice issued by the Small Cause Court. There is no reason to suspect anything about any of these entries in the two Registers. That these two warrants were issued and received by the Bailiff on the 26th of November has moreover been sworn to by the officers concerned. They are Mg. Ba Oh, Bailiff, Mg. Kya Nyun, Deputy Bailiff, San Pe, Head Process-server, Shwe Htun, Process-server, and Po Shin, Head Clerk of the Sub-Divisional Court. On that point they were positive. If from such evidence, both documentary and oral, it is held thus established that these warrants were received in the Bailiff's Office only on the 26th November, those warrants could not possibly have been executed on the 20th and 21st of November as shown by the altered dates on the warrants. In connection with those alterations another suspicious circumstance was that a page or pages in the Local Despatch Register of the Sub-Divisional Court, Ex. S, from the 15th to the 26th November, had disappeared from the book. The reason for such disappearance is not difficult to discover. Such tampering with the records and registers in a Court cannot have taken place without the knowledge or connivance or help of some of the ministerial officers of that Court. The two execution cases were closed on the 12th December when satisfaction of the amounts was certified to the Court. On his own admission Po Shin was in charge of those records as well as the Local Despatch Register. Po Shin admits that records in his charge were kept in an almirah and that he kept the key of that almirah. He also admits that he was in charge of the Local Despatch Register. So one would be justified to suspect that he was concerned with the alterations on the warrants, and also with the disappearance of the pages from the Local Despatch Register, and that, if such things had not been done by himself, they must have been done with his knowledge or connivance. It is, therefore, no wonder that he tried to put the blame upon others. It appears that a departmental enquiry was held by the Bailiff into the conduct of the Process-server, Shwe Htum. It started on the 19th of December, 1923. In that enquiry Head Process-server, San Pe, Po Shin, Ba Gyaw, a Copyist, Mudaliar (Court Interpreter) and Mahadeva Aiyar, Clerk to Mr. N. N. Burjorjee, were among those examined. As a result of that enquiry, the services of Ba Gyaw (Copyist) were dispensed with, Po Shin was censured and his increment stopped for 6 months, and Shwe Htun (Process-server), who was under suspension, was reinstated. At this juncture the circumstance under which the alterations came to light may as well be mentioned. They are as follows:—

An insolvency petition was presented by Mani Aiyar in the High Court on the 12th of December, 1923. Mahomed Ebrahim heard about it and sent his clerk, Natarajan, to Insein on the same day to get certain copies. Natarajan applied for certified copies of application for execution in the two Execution Cases Nos. 98 and 99, but those copies would not show the dates of attachment. Natarajan was sent again on the 13th of December to apply for certified copies of diaries, applications and attachment warrants in the said two cases. The copies were obtained on the 15th. The certified copies of the attachment warrants are Ex. P-1 and P-2 filed in the insolvency proceedings. Those copies are clean and show an alteration of dates in the endorsements. The dates in the endorsements are 20th and 21st of November. Mahomed Ebrahim says he showed those copies to his Advocate, Mr. N. N. Burjorjee, who then told him that the copies showed the dates of attachment as 20th and 21st of November, and advised him to ask the Ghetty's agent again. He goes on to say that he asked the Chetty, and was told that the attachment could not have been on those dates, and that he reported the result to his lawyer who then sent his clerk, Mahadeva Aiyar, to the Insein Court to inspect the records. Mahadeva Aiyar (P. W. No. 18) states that he was sent to the Insein Court on the 15th of December, which was a Saturday, that, as it was too late, he was not allowed inspection, that he went again on the 17th, had an inspection of the records, and noticed alterations on the attachment warrants, Exs. N-2 and O-2 and that he then reported the result to his Advocate. In consequence Mr. N. B. Burjorjee (P. W. No. 10), a nephew of Mr. N. N. Burjorjee, went to Insein on the 18th and inspected the records. He also noticed alterations on the attachment warrants, and brought the fact to the notice of the Sub-Divisional Judge who then initialled the entries in Baliff's Register No. IV, Ex. Q, which showed that the warrants were issued to Bailiff only on the 26th of November. Mr. N. B. Burjorjee further states that on that occasion he also inspected the Local Despatch Register, Ex. S, and found pages from the 15th to the 26th of November missing, and that he took both the registers to the Sub-Divisional Judge, and drew his attention to the fact of the pages being found missing. When the matter was brought to the notice of the Sub-Divisional Judge in this manner, the Bailiff was ordered to hold an anquiry to which a reference has already been made in the earlier part of this judgment.

Having held that the attachment warrants had been tampered with, it becomes necessary to find out who could have done it. As observed above, suspicion would necessarily fall upon Po Shin because the records of these two cases and the Local Despatch Register were in his charge, but, as the result of the enquiry made by the Bailiff shows, no definite decision was possible as to who the real offender was. It is however, almost certain that such a thing could not have been done without the assistance or connivance of some of the ministerial officers of that Court. It is also necessary to find out as far as possible the probable date or dates on which the alterations were made. If we have to rely upon the certified copies, Exs. P-1 and P-2, as correct, the only inference will be that the alterations had been made before those copies were supplied. The copies were made by Ba Gyaw, apprentice and copyist (P. W. No. 5). He states: "I did not notice the alterations on the warrants on the 13th December but simply copied the warrants as I found them." But the admits having stated to the Bailiff at the enquiry on the 26th of December this:—"I did not take notice of the corrections, but I found the alterations since I supplied copies on the 7th December." This attitude on his part was no doubt due to the fact that he had been called upon by the Sub-Divisional Judge to explain why he should not be punished for not bringing to his notice the alterations in question; and his answer, "I simply copied the warrants as I found them," is sufficient to show that the dates had already been altered, because the copies supplied by him, Exs. P-1 and P-2. are clean copies showing the new dates. I cannot for a moment imagine that Ba Gyaw would enter different dates in those copies for no rhyme or reason.

I have already pointed out that the warrants could not have been executed before the 26th of November. So the new dates, the 20th and 21st of November, in the copies, Exs P-1 and P-2, could only have appeared as such in those copies after the dates in the original warrants had been altered. I have, therefore, no doubt that the alterations on the original warrants had been made before the 13th of December.

Now we come to the most important point in the case as to whether either of the appellants had anything to do with these alterations.

Of course, the evidence is purely circumstantial as is to be naturally expected, because such a crime would be committed in the dark. It is necessary, therefore, to look to the surrounding circumstances such as motive, conduct and opportunity.

It is significant that the insolvency petition was filed just on the completion of 21 days from the date of the attachment appearing on the warrants after the alterations. Mani Aiyar has in his affidavit of the 12th December, 19-3, boldly declared as follows:—"That in Civil Execution Cases Nos. 98 and 99 of 1923 of the Sub-Divisional Court of Insein certain immoveable properties belonging to the insolvents have been under attachment for over three weeks." He made the same declaration in para. 3 of his petition and in verifying it he has declared: "I, S. P. S. Mani Aiyar, the petitioner above named, do hereby declare that all the facts put in the above petition are true to my own knowledge." From the above it is clear that Mani Aiyar professed to know personally that the properties of D. K. Cassim & Sons had been on the date of the petition under attachment for over three weeks. Now to complete three weeks the last date of attachment should be not later than the 21st of November, 1923. It is admitted by him that through Guruswamy (accused discharged) he applied for on the 7th December and obtained the certified copies of the warrants in question, Exs. R-1 and R-2, on the same date. It is also admitted by him that through the same person he had applied for on the 3rd December, 1923, and obtained copies of the diaries and description of the properties attached in the two execution cases on the 5th of December, 1923.

Another significant fact is that the copies of the warrants, Exs. R-1 and R-2, show similar alterations, that is to say, the dates, as altered, read 20th and 21st of November. A reasonable inference will be that the alterations on these copies took place after the copies had been obtained on the 7th; so the truth of Ba Gyaw's first statement became apparent. That attachment was that he noticed the alterations since he supplied the first copies (on the 7th).

In view of the declarations made in the insolvency petition and the affidavit attached to it, it was in the interest of Mani Aiyar that the attachment should be held to have taken place not later than the 21st of November. Further seeing that the dates of the warrants were 19th and 21st of November, it was not possible to make the dates of attachment appear earlier than those dates. The effect of the alteration is that the warrant, dated the 19th of November, appears to have been executed on the 20th and the other one, dated the 21st of November, appears to have been executed on the 21st. The existence of this interest supplies the motive in the case of Mani Aiyar.

In the case of Abdul Rahman it would appear that Mahomed Ebrahim and his two brothers have been behaving very badly towards Abdul Rahman. They are the sons of one Dubash Kadar who died about 1912. Abdul Rahman was the husband of their step-sister who is now dead. Dubash Kader did stevedoring business with the B. I. S. N. Company. He took two partners, Abdul Rahman and Naina Rowther, who are his sons-in-law. After the death of Dubash Kader these brothers refused to join Abdul Rahman, and so Abdul Rahman had to start business separately as "Abdul Rahman Brother and Company," while these brothers started a separate business under the style of "Cassim Brothers and Co." Both firms have since changed their names and they are at present known as "Abdul Rahman and Sons" and "Cassim and Sons". Both parties tried to secure the contract with the B. I. S. N. Co., but only Abdul Rahman's party obtained the contract. That contract runs ordinarily for five years at the time. The Ebrahim Brothers did not give in but tried to secure the contract in 1918 and 1923, and on both occasions they were defeated by Abdul Rahman Brothers and Co. It appears that in 1918 both firms were members of an association called "Cargo Boat Owners' Association," which was formed for the mutual benefit of the members and to prevent one member from competing with another in business. Clause 3 of the agreement provides that no member of the Association should either directly or indirectly accept tender or attempt to secure any contract work or business which was at that time held or being done by any other member. In spite of that agreement Cassim and Sons attempted to secure the B. I. S. N. contract which was held by Abdul Rahman and Sons. In consequence Abdul Rahman and Sons made a complaint to the Association, and one of the Ebrahim Brothers gave an undertaking not to offend again. But of course in view of the previous conduct of the Ebrahim Brothers, Abdul Rahman might not think it safe to place implicit reliance on that undertaking The danger was not entirely over yet for in a letter written by Mr. Campbell, Agent of the B. I. S. N. Company Ex. 2-N, on the 29th of September, 1923, he, in no unmistakable terms informed Abdul Rahman that though the Company were going to renew the contract for another five years from the 1st of August, 1923, they reserved the right to give a share of the contract to D. K. Cassim and Sons, if later on they considered it advisable to do so. This decision on the part of the Company, coupled with the fact that D. K. Cassim and Sons have been indefatigable in their efforts to obtain the contract in rivalry with Abdul Rahman and Sons were calculated to make Abdul Rahman uneasy in mind with regard to the contract which his firm had all along been holding since 1913. It is, therefore, reasonable to think that Abdul Rahman would seize any opportunity that might come in his way to get his rivals out of his path if possible. In the present case such an opportunity presented itself to him. Cassim and Sons were in financial difficulties, and furthermore, their properties were attached. Under cl. (e) of s. 9 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act a debtor may be adjudicated insolvent if any of his property has been attached for a period not less than 21 days in execution of a money decree.

Chellasawamy Chetty's clerk (P. W. No. 20) says that Messrs. Cowasjee and Das were their lawyers, that he used to visit their office on business, that some time in December 1923, he went there to take legal advice and met Abdul Rahman and Mani Aiyar sitting side by side with one Sundaram Aiyar, and that he overheard a part of their conversation to the effect that there would be adjudication of D. K. Cassim and Sons. This evidence goes to show that Abdul Rahman was interested in the adjudication of his rivals. As remarked above he appeared to have seized the opportunity to get rid of his business rivals.

Mr. A. B. Banerjee, Advocate (P. W. No. 12) acted for the Chettiar Firm of S. R. M. A., the decree-holder in the two Execution Cases Nos. 98 and 99 in which the attachment was effected. He states that on one occasion when the Agent of E. P. R. firm came to his office for consultation, he noticed Abdul Rahman and Mani Aiyar coming in and going out again together. E. P. R. firm is the firm which endorsed a Rs. 15,000 pro-note on 13th November 1923, to Mani Aiyar who then sued Cassim and Sons in C. Reg. No. 590 of 1923 of the High Court on 26th November 1923.

Abdul Rahman maintains that he bore no grudge against Mahomed Ebrahim and his brothers. Though he may not entertain feelings of enmity as asserted by him yet from the business point of view it is to his advantage to remove his persistent rivals out of his path should chance permit. So there is in his case also a motive, but the existence of this motive alone is not sufficient to support the charge of conspiracy to commit the alleged forgeries. Further proof is necessary to connect him with the crime. That connection depends upon the evidence of Po Shin, San Pe, Shwe Htun, Ba Gyaw and Mudaliar, and also upon their reliability.

At the Bailiff's enquiry which started on the 19th December 1923 and lasted till the 6th January 1924, no reference was made by the witnesses, with the exception of Shwe Htun and San Pe and Mudaliar, to the two appellants. On the 5th of January 1925, Shwe Htun put in a written statement to the effect that in December the Copyist (Ba Gyaw) asked him if he had executed the warrants, and that, on his re-plying in the affirmative, he asked him the name of the Headman who was present, saying that somebody had applied for copies of the warrants. Shwe Htun further states that some time afterwards three kalas came and asked him when he executed the warrants, that he told them that he executed them about the 27th of November and that the Court records and registers would show the exact date, that the three kalas then asked him to show them the register, and he referred them to San Pe, that the kalas went to San Pe and, on finding in the register, the date 26th November, suggested to San Pe that he must have made some mistake, and asked San Pe to alter the date of issue from the 26th of November to the 19th and 21st of November in the register, and that San Pe replied that it could not be done because the same date had been entered in other books. The Bailiff examined San Pe on the 6th of January, 1924. He then stated that three Indians did come to him in the Bailiff's Office in December 1923, and asked him to correct the date in the register according to the dates of issue in the warrants. Shwe Htun was examined again in the insolvency case on the 13th of February 1924. On that occasion he repeated his story contained in the above written statement. He identified Mani Aiyar in Court, and, as regards the other two Indians he referred to them—one as a fat man with a red cap on, and the other with a Madrasi cap and spectacles on. He further said that subsequently he learnt their names to be Mani Aiyar, Abdul Rahman and Guruswamy. That story was repeated again when he was examined on the 21st April 1925, before the District Magistrate. In the case of San Pe also, he repeated his former story given to the Bailiff on the 6th January 1924. In the insolvency case on the 13th of February 1924, he came out with the same story, and on that occasion he mentioned Mani Aiyar, and referred to the other two as a fat Muhammadan and a thin man (a kala) with spectacles on. To the District Magistrate he gave the same story on the 21st April 1925. Mudaliar, the Court Interpreter, supports those two witnesses. He is positive that the three Indians referred to were Guruswamy, Abdul Rahman and Mani Aiyar.

As regards the alleged visit of these three persons to the Insein Court, all the witnesses made reference to it in the insolvency case. Ba Gyaw (copyist) states that, on the occasion copies of attachment warrants were applied for, three Indians came. He identified Mani Aiyar who was present in Court at the time. When he was examined by the District Magistrate on the 21st April 1925, he struck to the same story, but added that the Court Interpreter Mudaliar brought those three Indians. He further stated that Guruswamy was one of them, and that Mani Aiyar was another.

It has been urged that this story is entirely false, and that these witnesses are quite unreliable. It is to be conceded that this visit of the three Indians came out at a late stage of the enquiry, and further that some of these witnesses have not shown up well. But Pleader Mr. Agar who signed the applications for copies of the warrants admitted in his examination in the insolvency case on the 22nd January 1924 that the applications were brought to him for signature by Interpreter, Mudaliar, and that Mudaliar was then accompanied by three men. He described one of them as a man with a red cap on, the other with a turban, and the third as a short man wearing spectacles. He, however, stated that he could not recognise them.

When he was examined before the District Magistrate he struck to his story. He then said that Mani Aiyar might have been one of those men, but that he was certain that Abdul Rahman was not one of them.

So in the case of Abdul Rahman the question is whether Mr. Agar should be believed in preference to the other five witnesses.

I have given a careful consideration to the evidence of those witnesses and the probabilities of the case. Notwithstanding some defects noticed above it has, on the whole, satisfied me that Abdul Rahman was one of those three Indians. The seemingly strange conduct of these witnesses may have been due to their anxiety not to get mixed up in this crime. As soon as the alterations came to light, there was a deparmental enquiry. That enquiry was followed by a trial of the insolvency case in the High Court and then by criminal proceedings before the District Magistrate of Insein. The mental state in which Shwe Htum, San Pe and Mudaliar were in is to be gauged from their efforts in seeking for protection, as disclosed in their petitions to the District and Sessions Judge of Insein. Exhibits Q 2, R-2 and S-2. Those petitions show how Abdul Rahman tried to win them over to his side, that they did not consider it safe to do so, and that in consequence they apprehended danger to themselves. So it is no wonder that they should have behaved in the manner they did. Their evidence appears to contain some exaggeration here and there, but, considering the details, it on the whole savours of truth so far as the main issues are concerned.

In his petition Mudaliar refers to a visit of Abdul Rahman to his house late on the night of the 12th of December. In that connection he made these allegations: "Abdul Rahman told me that as he has no other course he has presonally come, that he is now in a fix, that he never expected that things would turn to such a worse condition, that he solely relied on a Burman clerk to whom he brought an introductory letter from an intimate friend of his at Rangoon and I should only save him without any negative reply whatever, and that as for the Process-server, he would make necessary arrangements as he has already done with Mr. Agar, Pleader, Insein." Now, as regards this visit, Mudaliar in his evidence states that about 10 or 15 minutes after Abdul Rahman's departure he went over to the D. S. P., Mr. Hardie, that, finding Mr. Hardie out, he left a chit for him, that on the following morning Mr. Hardie sent for him and he made a report to him.

Mr. Hardie (P. W. No. 18) admits that Mudaliar came to his house in his absence and left a chit, that he sent for Mudaliar the next morning and Mudaliar told him something. Mr. Hardie says he cannot remember the conversation at all well, but, as far as he can remember, Mudaliar asked him to send a Police Officer to watch his house as some people were loafing about it.

I have already pointed out that the first person to be suspected was the Head Clerk, Po Shin. In his case too he remained silent until he was examined before the District Magistrate, Insein. He now said that three Indians came, that the applications signed by Mr. Agar were brought to him and that they came with Mudaliar, the Court Interpreter. He was positive that the two appellants were two out of three Indians, and that the third Indian was Guruswami. He further stated that four of them came to his room and stood in front of his table. He had also mentioned the visit of these Indians in his statement to the District Magistrate, Insein. For his previous silence Po Shin has offered this explanation: "After I had read Mr. Justice Rutledge's orders and found that he did not believe my evidence because I had not mentioned them (meaning Indians) I revealed what I knew and mentioned them in the Insein Court."

Shwe Htun has also given an explanation, and that was that he made the disclosure because he was afraid of a prosecution.

Mudaliar is a Tamilian; so is appellant Mani Aiyar. Abdul Rahman is a Chulia. There is nothing extraordinary that Mudaliar should have been taken into confidence by them; but, as ill-luck would have it, Mudaliar is a friend of Ponnia Pillay (P. W. No. 22), an employee of Mahomed Ebrahim. Another employee Ponnia Aiyar (P. W. No. 23) happens to live with Subbiah, a typist working in the office of Messrs. Cowasjee & Das Lawyers of Mani Aiyar. So there is reason to believe that Ponnia Aiyar and Subbiah kept both sides informed of everything that was going on. Ebrahim admits that even before the insolvency petition was filed in Court, he came to know of it; so it is not improbable that Mani Aiyar would know about the payment of the decretal amounts by the Ebrahims to their decree-holder. Possibly Mani Aiyar was under the impression that the dates of issue, 19th and 21st of November, on the warrants were the starting points for computing the period of attachment, and the idea of getting the alterations made was conceived only after the mistake had been found out. It is impossible to ascertain the exact date on which the alterations were made; but it is certain that the alterations were made before the copies, Exs. P-I and P-2, were given to Natarajan. The application for those copies was made on the 13th and, according to the endorsement on the copies, they were ready for delivery on the 14th and delivered on the 15th of December. Copyist Ba Gyaw has admitted that he copied the warrants as he found them. As the copies are clean and show the new dates the alterations must have taken place previous to that. As the copies of the warrants given on the 7th of December had originally 27th November, it would follow that the alterations must have taken place between those two occasions. I have already pointed out that the alterations must have been brought about for some purpose. It has been strongly urged by the defence that purpose was no other than that of the Ebrahim Brothers to bring about the downfall of Abdul Rahman, and to secure the B. I. S. N. Co's contract. This contention sounds highly improbable. The warrants do not support such a theory. The date of execution of the warrants was the 27th of November, and Mahomed Ebrahim paid off the decretal amounts and satisfaction was certified to the Court on the 12th of December. The Company has decided to give a portion of the contract to them whenever they are found good. Mani Aiyar has petitioned to the High Court to have them adjudicated insolvents, the ground put forward being that their properties had been under attachment for not less than 21 days. If they are adjudged insolvents, their prospect of securing any portion of the contract will be destroyed. In these circumstances the Ebrahim Brothers could not have been so blind to their own interest as to manufacture evidence which will help Mani Aiyar to accomplish his object. On the other hand Mani Aiyar has sworn to an affidavit to the effect that to his personal knowledge the properties of Cassim & Sons had been under attachment for over 21 days. It was to his interest to show that such was the case otherwise he would run the risk of being prosecuted for perjury. It has been urged on his behalf that if he had altered his own copies to make them correspond with the originals he would not have been foolish enough to produce them after the alterations on the originals had been detected. But it must be remembered that he had taken the copies, and adverse inference would surely be drawn against him in case he failed to produce them. As the Bailiff's registers, Exs. IV-B and V, coupled with the evidence of the witnesses are clear that the warrants did not reach the Bailiff's Office until the 26th of November it would follow that the attachment could not have been effected prior to that date. So the evidence of the Headman, Mg. Htat, that both the warrants were executed in his presence on the 21st of November has been rightly discarded. He admits that a revenue notice was served on him after the Tazaungdaing festival. That festival lasted two days—the 21st and 22nd of November. Register No. V shows that the revenue notice was served on the 27th of November, the same date on which the warrants were also executed. To sum up, there has been proof that Abdul Rahman was associating with Mani Aiyar in this matter. He has a strong motive to remove Cassim & Sons out of his way. His two letters written to Mr. Campbell on the 8th and 12th of September 1923, Exs. 2-J-16 and 17, will show how much he felt against Cassim & Sons and also how much he tried to poison the mind of Mr. Campbell regarding Cassim & Sons. Those letters were written evidently in consequence of a letter dated the 20th of August 1923, Ex. 2-J 5, written to Mr. Campbell by Mr. Bell of Calcutta. In that letter this passage occurs: "We might, of course, make it clear to Mr. Abdul Rahman that we reserve the right to give a share of the contract to Cassim if later on we consider it advisable to do so." After receiving those two letters from Abdul Rahman, Mr. Campbell wrote a letter dated the 17th of September 1923, Ex. 2-J-14, to Mr. Bell. Mr. Campbell wrote thus—"Abdul Rahman is rather distressed that the Company should consider giving a part of his contract to D. K. Cassim" To that letter a list was attched-ed purporting to show the insolvent condition of Cassim & Sons. That list was prepared on information given by Abdul Rahman and others. Mr. Bell's reply, dated the 20th of September, 1923, Ex. 2 J-19, to Mr. Campbell gives a reason for the company's decision. That reason was that the introduction of fresh blood in connection with the Company's stevedoring arrangements at Karachi produced excellent effect. Apart from this business point of view, the Company, as would appear from Mr. Bell's letter; dated the 6th of July, 1923 Ex. 2 J-1, to Mr. Campbell, wanted to do something for the children of Dubash Kader Cassim in recognition of his services to them, and Abdul Rahman was given the contract after the death of Dubash Kader because the Ebrahim Brothers were at that time considered to be too young and inexperienced. In spite of Abdul Rahman's protest contained in the two letters Exs, 2 J-16 and 17, the Company decided to reserve their right to give a part of the contract to D. K. Cassim and Sons should they desire to do so. This appears in Mr. Bell's letter dated the 27th of September, 1923 Ex. 2 J-21, to Mr. Campbell. That Abdul Rahman felt aggrieved at that decision is to be seen from the fact that he made a complaint to the Cargo Boat Owners' Association. A meeting was held on the 12th of November, 1923, when Syed Ebrahim gave an undertaking not to attempt to secure the works that were being done by Abdul Rahman and Sons. Since the death of his father-in-law Dubash Kader in 1912, Abdul Rahman has enjoyed the contract with the B. I. S. N. Company and has flourished over it. Now a possible danger has arisen and he may be robbed of a portion of that contract by his rivals. As pointed out above, an opportunity has presented itself to him for removing his rivals from his path by getting them adjudicated insolvents. As is naturally to be expected, a man who has shown himself to the world as a philanthropist, could not very well crush his enemies openly, especially enemies who are the children of his benefactor; so he has chosen to remain in the background as far as possible, and has employed Mani Aiyar as his tool. Mani Aiyar himself could have derived no advantage, as far as one can see, by getting Cassim and Sons declared insolvents. Moreover, Mani Aiyar, who had to borrow a small sum of money, namely, Rs. 100, from one Ramanathan Chettiar at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per mensem on the 14th of December, 1923, wished it to appear that he was able to buy a Rs. 15,000 promissory note on the 17th of November. He then filed a suit on it against Cassim and Sons. It is unfortunate that the Chetty who transferred that promissory note has left Burma and that his evidence is not available.

In a charge of abetment by conspiracy it is not necessary that all those engaged in it should consult together. It is enough if they did an act or acts in pursuance of that conspiracy. In the present case the conspiracy proved is that of fabricating evidence to support the ground put forward for adjudicating Cassim and Sons insolvents.

As regards the alleged visit of the appellants to Insein on the occasion on which they were alleged to have attempted to induce San Pe to make alterations in Register No. IV, the learned District Magisrate has put it on the 8th of December, 1923. As regards this date the evidence is far from being convincing. The Process-server, Shwe Htun, in his written statement, Ex. 35, given to the Bailiff during the enquiry used the words (atan ngat uchain Kyapyee thee nowk) "a little while afterwords". Those words were used in a relation to the visit of the three kalas. He said Ba Gyaw came and enquired who the Headman was and a little while afterwards the three kalas came. So from that one would have to take it that the visit of the three Indians, and the enquiry made by Ba Gyaw took place on the same day. But when Shwe Htun was examined by the District Magisrate, Rangoon, he stated that the three Indians came to him three or four days after Ba Gyaw had asked him the Headman's name. If the second statement is to be accepted, this second visit of the appellants would fall on the 10th or 11th of December. Mudaliar put that visit on the 8th of December. As no sentence has been passed on the appellants for the second charge, no useful purpose would be served by trying to fix the date of that visit, but it is only important to decide whether the alleged attempt was made at all.

The evidence of Ba Oh, Bailiff, shows that San Pe kept the key of the almirah in which Register No. IV was kept and that San Pe was responsible for the maintenance of that register. It is, therefore, not unreasonable to think that, if any alteration was to be made in that register, San Pe must be approached. As it has turned out the present cirme has in no small decree been proved by the fact that the entires in the registers have remained intact. The persons engagad in the crime must have been alive to that circumstance, and would have doubtless made some attempt to remove it. The attempt was in a way a necessary act in pursuance of the conspiracy to commit forgery to create evidence that the attachment took place on the 20th and 21st of November, 1923.

By way of rebutting evidence Abdul Rahman has examined some witnesses to prove that he was laid up and not fit to move about for ten or fifteen days beginning from the 27th of November, 1923. According to Dr. Carlos (D. W. No. 10) he first visited Abdul Rahman on the 27th of November and repeated the visits on the 29th and 30th of November and 1st of December. According to Dr. Suzuki (D, W. No. 11) he saw Abdul Rahman, on the 30th November, 1st, 5th and 7th of December, and that Abdul Rahman was better, but still weak, on the 7th of December. According to both the doctors, he was suffering from bronchitis; but we have an admission by Maricar (D. W. No. 9) that Abdul Rahman went out of his house and attended a meeting on the 9th of December for about three hours from 7-30 P. M.

Both the appellants deny having visited the Insein Court as alleged by the prosecution, and also having made any attempt to induce San Pe to alter the register. Guruswamy, who was discharged by the District Magistrate of Insein, even denied that he was with Mudaliar when Mr. Agar's signature was taken on the application forms. He stated that Mudaliar alone went and got Mr. Agar's signature. He admits that he was a Despatcher in the Secretariat, but was dismissed on a charge of having offered a bribe to a Police Officer in a case to which he was not a party.

Mr. (now Mr. Justice) Das was examined for the defence. He was responsible for the drafting of the counter-affidavit of Mani Aiyar filed in the insolvency case. He admits that he cannot read Burmese, and when the copies, Exs. R.-1 and R-2, were shown to him, he said he could not say whether they were in the same state then as when he saw them at the time he prepared the affidavit. In fact the alteration of dates on those copies has been fairly well carried out. It is hardly possible for one not acquainted with Burmese to notice it.

In my opinion the case for the prosecution remains unrebutted, and, judging from the surrounding circumstances such as motive, conduct and opportunity, I am of opinion that the first charge has been brought home to the two appellants.

Abdul Rahman is a leader of the Chulia community and the founder of the Chulia Moslem School. He has been an Honorary Magistrate since 1913 and a Municipal Commissioner since 1918. For his useful public service, in those capacities as well as for his useful work in connection with War Loans, the title of Khan Bahadur was conferred upon him. Unfortunately he has fallen, he has yielded to temptation; but he cannot be classed as a man steeped in crime. He is now 52 and to a man of his social standing any sentence of imprisonment will be a severe punishment. In view of his age and public service a reduction in the sentence seems proper. Mani Aiyar was a mere tool in Abdul Rahman's hands and there is no reason why he should be more severely punished than his principal. I, therefore, reduce the sentence of each of them to one of rigorous imprisonment for nine months.

Doyle, J.—His Lordship after dwelling upon the facts thus proceeded:—

As a preliminary to a discussion of the various law points which have been raised in the present appeal, it is necessary to consider the distinction between an "irregularity" and "an illegality in procedure". In the Privy Council ruling of Subramania Aiyar v. King-Emperor (8) it was laid down that disobedience of a definite prohibitory provisions of the Cr. P. C. constituted an illegality and was, therefore, not curable under s. 537 of the Cr. P. C. There has been a tendency in subsequent decisions of the Indian High Courts to construe this decision as signifying that disobedience of mandatory provisions of the Cr. P. C. was generally not curable under s. 537 of the Cr. P. C. Mandatory directions may be either imperative or directory. They deal either with what shall, or with what shall not be done. It is possible to have degrees of disobedience of positive but not of prohibitory directions; as an illustration may be quoted, taken in their literal sense, the two Commandments "Honour thy father and thy mother," and "Thou shalt not kill." Prohibitory directions offer very little difficulty, since disobedience amounts nearly always to an illegality.

In considering positive directions, it must be remembered that the distincion between "simple irregularities" and "illegalities" is one not of degree, but of essence. If, therefore, the disobedience of a mandatory injunction is measurable, so to speak, quantitatively, and, if a minor infringement of that mandatory injunction which does not go to the root of a trial may be admitted, a general infringement of the same nature constitutes an irregularity which may necessitate the annulment of the particular trial, but is not an illegality incurable under s. 537 of the Cr. P. C.

Inverting and applying this proposition, if failure to read over the depositions of witnesses is an illegality, failure to read over the deposition of a single witness, however, unimportant, or even to read a single line of the deposition of such a witness, would constitute an illegality vitiating the trial, reductio ad absurdum which, in my opinion, destroys the case stated. To allow the alternative view to prevail is to embalm Indian Procedure in the sacrosanct formalism of the Twelve Tables. I hold that a disobedience of s. 360 of the Cr. P. C. is an irregularity not amounting to an illegality, and, as in the present case, there is no suggestion that the record was either defective or inaccurate or that failure to read it over resulted in any injustice to the accused. I hold further that the trial has not been vitiated. At the same time I must point out that the convenience of Advocates, or a desire to accelerate the disposal of a case are not sufficient reasons for disobeying a mandatory injunction. Expediency per se has never been regarded as a warrant for a deliberate violation of law.

The objection that the first charge against Mani Aiyar is defective, as it embraces a charge of two different offences with respect to two different documents, does not demand serious consideration. The offence was instigation to forge, and it was immaterial how many documents were forged, or, for that matter, whether any documents were forged at all. The forgeries were to be a series of acts, all directed to a single purpose, and the instigation must, therefore, be regarded as a single offence.

The plea of illegality of the joint trial has been dealt with in detail by Maung Ba, J., and I desire merely to add that the joint trial was not only legal but, under the circumstance, highly proper.

As to the argument that the omission of s. 195, sub-section (5) in the Code as amended precluded the Court from taking cognizance of any other offence than that disclosed in Mr. Justice Rutledge's complaint, it must be pointed out that sub-s. (5) was omitted because it was superfluous. "Prosecution on sanction" had been re-placed by "prosecution on complaint," and as proceedings consequent on action under s. 476 are to be treated as of upon complaint under s. 200, the provisions of s. 254 would apply, these provisions being sufficiently general to justify the action of the Magistrate.

As to the objection that the Magistrate could not frame the second charge against Abdul Rahman without following the provisions of s. 191 of the C. P. C. justification for his action is to be found in s. 235 and s. 254, Cr. P. C., Even had the original proceedings commenced against Mani Aiyar alone, the learned Magistrate had full power to add Abdul Rahman as an accused, vide the Full Bench ruling of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma in Nga Chan Tha v. Emperor (17) a fortiori, having Abdul Rahman before him, he had power to frame an additional charge.

For the above reasons I consider that the convictions were correct, but I am in agreement with my learned brother, Mg. Ba, J., that some reduction of sentence is proper.

Abdul Rahman is not, as suggested, a criminal of the type of Jabez Balfour or Horatio Bottomely, masking a career of crime under the garb of smug sanctimoniousness or pinchback patriotism. He is a man of previously unblemished character who, in the past, has rendered substantial public service, and who has been tempted fortuitously into the error that has caused his downfall. Any sentence of imprisonment will be a lasting disgrace.

Mani Aiyar is merely a subordinate actor in the matter and should not, under the circumstances, be punished with a severer sentence than his principal.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 187 OF 1925.

July 9, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy and Mr. Justice Panton.

SAMSERALI HAZI—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 360—Depositions of witnesses, reading over of—Procedure—Reading over of deposition of witnesses in interval and after close of day—Effect.

The evidence of a witness must be read over to him after it is completed and before the examination of another witness is started.

Where the depositions of witnesses who are examined one after another until the midday adjournment are read over to them during the interval and the depositions of the witnesses examined in the afternoon are similarly read over to them in the afternoon after the close of the day there is no compliance with the provisions of s. 360, Cr. P. C., and the trial is vitiated.

Abdul (Bari) Mallick v. Emperor, 92 Ind. Cas. 887; 42 C. L. J. 585; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 157; 27 Cr. L. J. 375, followed.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Faridpur, dated the 7th March 1925.

Babu Mrityunjoy Chatterjee (with him Babu Nirmal Chunder Chukerbutty), for the Appellants.

Mr. Khundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The only point raised for the purpose of this appeal is that the provisions of s. 360 of the Cr. P. C. have not been complied with. It appears on the allegations made by the appellants, as well as from the explanation submitted by the Trying Judge together with the affidavit sworn by the Sessions clerk, that the witnesses were examined one after another until the midday adjournment, when their depositions were read over to them during the interval: and the depositions of the witnesses examined one after another in the afternoon were similarly read over to them in the afternoon after the close of the day. In Abdul (Bari) Mullick v. Emperor (1) we have held that the evidence of a witness must be read over to him after it is completed, and before the examination of another witness is started; and we have further held in that case that the reading over of the depositions of witnesses at the close of the day is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 360 of the Cr. P. C. The result, therefore, is that this trial must be held to be vitiated by this irregularity. In this view it is not necessary to consider the other points raised in the case. The conviction of the appellants and the sentences upon them are set aside, and it is directed that they be re-tried. The appellants will remain in Jail pending further order of the Trying Court.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 322 OF 1923.
September 24, 1925.
Present:—Mr. Justice Fawcett and
Mr. Justice Madgavkar.

MADHAVRAO RASTE—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
IMAM BAPU SHERKAR AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Grant—Saranjam—Nature of grant—Alienation, whether binding beyond lifetime of alienor—Mirasi grant, nature of.

An alienation beyond the lifetime of the saranjamdar, who makes it, is not ordinarily binding on his successors. [p. 738, col. 2.]

In cases when the object of the saranjam grant is to make a permanent provision for the maintenance of an important family, the saranjam or jagir although ordinarily hereditary, is not alienable beyond the life of the actual holder. But in cases where the object of the grant is purely personal, e. g., to ensure the rendering of certain services to the State or to reward an officer on retirement for faithful services, then the grant, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, is one of an absolute estate and alienation made by the holder for the time being is binding upon his successor. Cases of the latter type are, however, exceptions rather than the rule. [ibid.]

[Case-law discussed.]

A grant of mirasi rights is not necessarily an alienation which will not be binding beyond the lifetime of the saranjamdar making the grant. [p. 740, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P. at Satara, in Appeal No. 239 of 1921, confirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge, at Wai, in Civil Suit No. 101 of 1920.

Mr. G.S. Rao (with him Mr. H. B. Gumaste), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Bakhale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J.—These appeals arise out of three Suits Nos. 101, 102 and 103 of 1920. They were tried together, and the appeals from the decision therein were also dealt with together in the lower Appellate Court. Here also the three appeals can conveniently be disposed of in one judgment.

The plaintiff in each of these suits is Sirdar Raste, a saranjamdar residing at Poona, and he sued to recover possession of the plaint lands, alleging in each case that it was part of his saranjam property; that Umabai, as guardian of the previous minor saranjamdar, had let it under a kabuliyat to the defendants' ancestor; that this act of hers was beyond her authority and against the rule that a saranjamdar's estate is only a life-estate which is resumed by Government on the death of the saranjamdar and granted again to his successor, and that accordingly the plaintiff is not bound by these particular grants or leases.

The material facts are that in 1862 a young boy named Gangadharrao was adopted by Umabai, the widow of the last saranjamdar and so he became the saranjamdar. On February 26, 1862, Umabai granted the miraspatra, Ex. 16, to the ancestor of two of the defendants in Suit No. 103, and in 1863 she granted a kabuliyat Ex. 31, to the predecessor-in-title of the defendants in Suit No. 101. In 1866 Gangadharrao died a minor. In the same year the saranjam was attached and managed by Government up to 1873. While it was so under attachment, Umabai granted the kabulayat, Ex. 18, to the ancestor of the defendant in Suit No. 102. In 1873, Umabai, with the permission of Government adopted another boy named Anandrao. In 1896, Anandrao came of age and presumably took over the management of the saranjam. He died in 1908, leaving the plaintiff, his son, a minor. The saranjam was resumed by Government and re-granted to the plaintiff on August 4, 1908. The plaintiff came of age in February 1917, and he brought these three suits within three years of his thus attaining majority. The Trial Court dismissed all the three suits and this decision has been confirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The lower Court has held that the lands in question are part of the plaintiff's saranjam estate, and this is supported by Ex. 19, which shows the lands as such.

As regards the defendants' interest in the land, the lower Appellate Court has not come to any finding, except that the recitals in the documents Exs. 31, 18 and 16, as to the existence of any prior interest in the land cannot be taken as conclusive. So far as the Yerande defendants in Suit No. 103 and Appeal No. 333 are concerned, their title-deed, Ex. 16, is in terms a miraspatra, and their tenancy (apart from any question as to the validity of the grant) is of permanent nature. The Sherkar defendants in Suit No. 101 and Appeal No. 332, and the Dhanwe defendants in Suit No. 102 and Appeal No. 334, are not in so secure a position, because the documents Exs. 31 and 18, though mentioning previous possession, do not in terms grant permanent tenancies of a mirasi or other kind. But in view of the facts that the plaints seek to recover possession of the lands only on the ground that the kabuliyats, Exs. 31, 18 and 16, are not binding on the plaintiff, and that his mukhtyar, Ex 24, expressly admitted on the plaintiff's behalf that the Sherkar and Dhanwe defendants were treated as permanent tenants under the kabuliyats, they must be taken to be also mirasdars. To hold otherwise would be to make out a new case for the plaintiff contrary to the pleadings.

The main issue, therefore, is the third one framed by the lower Court, viz., what is the effect of resumption and re-grant of the saranjam on defendants' interest in the property. The First Class Subordinate Judge held that it had none. Dewan Bahadur Rao for the appellant contends that the granting of a permanent lease is an alienation; that no saranjamdar can validly alienate the saranjam estate, which, as laid down in No. 5 of the Saranjam Rules is only a life-estate, for any period beyond his lifetime; that the recognition of these permanent leases by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title was only a continuance of the tenancy for the saranjamdar's life; and that the plaintiff, having sued within three years of his attaining majority, is entitled to a declaration that the kabuliyats in question are not binding upon him.

In support of these contentions he has mainly relied upon Madhavrao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venkatesh Deshpande (1) and Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (2). The first of these cases related to service watan lands, the alienation of which was prohibited by s. 20 of Regulation XVI of 1827 and is now prohibited by s. 5 of Bombay Act III of 1874. It, no doubt, affords clear authority, for the contention that the grant of a right of permanent tenancy is an alienation within the meaning of those enactments. But the applicability of this ruling to the present case is clearly open to question. There is no direct prohibition by the Legislature of alienation of saranjam lands as there is in the case of service watan lands. All that is enacted is that, as being lands held on political tenure, they are resumable and continuable in such manner and on such terms as Government on political considerations, may from time to time see fit to determine: see Bombay Act VII of 1863, s. 2, cl. (3); Act XI of 1852, Sch. B, r. 10, read with Bombay Act II of 1863, s. 1, cl. (2) and s. 16 (c), Hari Sadashiv v. Sheikh Ajmudin (3) and Shekh Sultan Sani v. Shekh Ajmudin (4). In the Saranjam Rules of 1898, there is also no express prohibition against alienation beyond the lifetime of a saranjamdar, though r. 5, no doubt, implies that a saranjamdar is a life-tenant and cannot alienate, mortgage or otherwise charge the estate beyond his lifetime; while r. 10 provides for the removal of Civil Court attachments, or other processes, which operate to divert the saranjam or its revenues from the saranjamdar. This implied prohibition is in accordance with the view taken by this Court in Krishnarao Ganesh v. Rangrao (5) and Dosibai v. Ishwardas Jagjivandas (6) and by the Privy Council in Gulabdas Jagjivandas v. Collector of Surat (7). In cases where the object of the saranjam grant is to make a permanent provision for the maintenance of an important family, the saranjam or jagir although ordinarily hereditary, is not alienable beyond the life of the actual holder as laid down in these rulings. But in cases where the object of the grant is purely personal, e.g., to ensure the rendering of certain services to the State or to reward an officer on retirement for faithful services, then [as was held in Dosibai v. Ishwardas Jagjivandas (8)] the grant is, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, one of an absolute estate; and an alienation made by the holder for the time being is binding upon his successors. Such a case is a special one and clearly inapplicable to saranjams like the present one, which were entered in Col. Etheridge's Saranjam list as "continuable hereditary," under the circumstances detailed in Dandekar's Law of Land Tenures, Vol I, pages 171-173. Such saranjams clearly fall under the first category of grants made for the maintenance of an important family, and in any case are subject to the express enactments in Act XI of 1852 and Bombay Act VII of 1863 making them continuable only in accordance with rules framed by Government. In Dosibai's case (8) Lord Hobhouse in his judgment says (page 227*):—"But where there is a grant to a man and his heirs, and nothing to control the ordinary meaning of the words, the grantee takes an absolute interest." That principle was clearly applicable to the personal grant made by the Bombay Government in 1830 to Ardeshir, which was then under consideration. But in cases of saranjams of a date prior to 1751, settled under Bombay Act VII of 1863, there are the clear provisions of s. 2, cl. (3), to control any words there may be in the original grant, purporting or operating to give an absolute title; and, therefore, the ordinary rule applies that the saranjam is to be considered a life-estate, as mentioned by Lord Hobhouse in the course of his judgment. With great respect, I think that this distinction has been overlooked in the judgment in Sakharam Gopal v. Trimbakrao Ram Chandra Mantri (9) where Dosibai's case is relied upon as an authority for the view that the saranjamdar takes an absolute interest in the subject-matter of the grant and I adhere to my criticism of this ruling in Secretary of State for India v. Girjabai Shivdeorao (10). As pointed out by Shah, Ag. C. J., in the same case (at page 137), the Saranjam Rules of 1898 donot in effect state anything more than what were ordinarily known to be the customary incidents of a saranjam grant. So far, therefore, as Sakharam Gopal v. Trimbakrao Ram Chandra Mantri (9) is based on the view that a saranjamdar like the plaintiff has an absolute and not merely a life-estate, I respectfully differ from it; and I agree with Diwan Bahadur Rao that an alienation beyond the lifetime of the saranjamdar, who makes it, is not ordinarily binding on his successors. I would, however, except cases where estoppel, res judicata, limitation, or other legal impediment, may prevent this general rule applying.

I also agree with Diwan Bahadur Rao that, in view of the Privy Council ruling in Madhavrao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venkatesh Deshpande (1) and Nainapillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (11) the plea of adverse possession by the defendants, who have all along held the lands as tenants, must fail; and this was conceded by respondents' Pleaders. There was no precise plea of estoppel raised by the defendants nor any issue raised about it; and the mere fact that plaintiff's guardian and his predecessor-in-title have raised no prior objection to defendants remaining in possession cannot operate as an estoppel.

The main contention of Mr. Bakhale and Mr. Shingne for the respondents was that the kabuliyats did not constitute any real alienation of the saranjam estate, but were given in the ordinary and proper exercise of the management of the saranjam estate, which was for the time being in Umabai's charge. In considering this point, I revert to the Privy Council decision in Madhavrao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venkatesh Deshpande (1). It was there held, as already mentioned, that the granting by a watandar of permanent tenancy in lands of his watan would, undoubtedly, be an alienation within the meaning of s. 20 of the Bombay Regulation XVI of 1827. But in the same case, in dealing with the Full Bench ruling of Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant Deshpande (12) their Lordships distinguish between the case of an alienation by a lease of a permanent tenancy to a tenant of the watan and the case of a sale and absolute assignment to a stranger to the watan. In the present instances, none of the kabuliyats confers a rent free estate. The saranjam estate continued, therefore, to get revenue from the lands, and (except in the case of the miraspatra Ex. 16, which contains a stipulation against raising the rent) the saranjamdar has the ordinary right to enhance the rents within the limits of custom: cf. Prataprao Gujar v. Bayaji Namaji (13) and Vishvanath Bhikaji v. Dhondappa (14). There is no subjecting of the estate to a 'debt' or 'charge,' such as is mentioned in saranjam rule No. 5. And, as has been pointed out in Madhavrao Hariharrao v. Anusuyabai (15) this rule No. 5 does not provide for freedom from all tenures, rights, incumbrances and equities created in favour of another person, such as is contained in s. 56 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. Diwan Bahadur Rao's contention that even the grant of a lease from year to year extending beyond the saranjamdar's lifetime would not bind his successor would lead to many difficulties, and is not, in my opinion, correct. The case-law on the subject does not (so far as I am aware) contain any authority for holding that a grant of mirasi rights is necessarily an alienation which will not be binding beyond the life-time of the saranjamdar making the grant: Sakharam Gopal v. Trimbakrao Ramchandra Mantri (9) is in fact an authority to the contrary, though I dissent from the main ground on which the judgment is based. No doubt in Trimbak Ramchandra v. Ghulam Zilani (16) Scott, C. J. says at page 341*: "It was conceded that a saranjamdar would not, except possibly for necessity, have power to create a mirasi lease to enure beyond his life-time." But, no such concession has been made before us, and, in my opinion, each case must stand on its own facts. A permanent lease may undoubtedly amount to a sale, or be otherwise so detrimental to the estate, as to constitute a clear case of alienation. But, on the other hand, as the passage I have just cited shows, it may be justifiable from necessity, or as a bona fide act of management benefiting the estate. Here we have to deal with agreements passed some fifty-five or sixty years ago, which have been acquiesced in by plaintiff's predecessor-in-title and his own guardian during his minority. Owing to the length of time that has elapsed, it is impossible now to get evidence as to the exact circumstances in which the grants were made. Conditions then were different to what they are now; and, in view of the acquiescence already mentioned, it seems to me to be a case where the Court should presume that the grants were made for necessary purposes and, therefore, are binding on the present saranjamdar. This is a presumption that was made as to a permanent lease granted by the manager of a temple in Chockalingam Pillai v. Mayandi Chettiar (17) and approved by the Privy Council in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (2). Even on the view taken by Scott, C. J. there is, therefore, in my opinion, legal ground for upholding the decision of the two lower Courts. I hold that they are right in deciding that the resumption and re-grant of the saranjam to plaintiff did not give him an estate freed from the defendants' rights under the documents, Exs. 31, 18 and 16.

I would, accordingly, dismiss all three appeals with costs.

SANTOSH KUMAR ROY AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
RAKHAL CHANDRA HAZRA AND OTHERS
—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 22 (2), 50 (2)—Ejectment suit—Fixity of rent—Uniform payment for 20 years—Presumption, applicability of.

Sub-section (2) of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to suits which are not suits under that Act but are suits under the general law for ejectment of an alleged trespasser.

The mere fact that the operation and effect of s. 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act has to be considered in a suit does not make a suit in ejectment a proceeding under the Act.

Though the special presumption laid down in cl. (2) of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act may not be applicable to a case not under the Act, a presumption may arise, apart from the Act, that where there has been a uniform payment of rent for more than 20 years the original contract was a contract to hold at fixed rate.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 18th April 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court at Burdwan, dated the 18th January 1921.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose and Babu Panchanan Chowdhury, for the Appellants.

Mr. Charu Chandra Biswas and Babu Narendra Krishna Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs who are the appellants before us brought a suit for khas possession of what they alleged to be a non-transferable occupancy holding. It is unnecessary to state all the facts of this case since it is conceded that the suit must fail if we hold that the holding was transferable and there was a valid transfer to the principal defendant.

It is not disputed that the holding has been held at an unchanged rate of Rs. 9-6-0 for more than 20 years. It is contended, however, that the lower Court was wrong in applying the presumption under cl. (2) of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the present case. So far as that argument goes it appears to us to be sound. It seems hardly necessary to quote authorities in support of the proposition that sub-s. (2) of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application in suits, which are not suits under that Act but are suits under the general law for ejectment of an alleged trespasser. We may cite, however, the case of Jagabandhu Saha v. Magnamoy Dasi (1), where this statement of the law is made as an undoubted proposition. Further also we cannot agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the fact that the operation and effect of s. 22, cl. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, has to be considered makes this suit in ejectment a proceeding under the Act. But although the lower Appellate Court was wrong on this point of law he has based his finding that the tenancy in suit is an occupancy holding at fixed rent on other grounds which cannot be assailed in second appeal. Though this special presumption of cl. (2) of s. 50 does not apply it has been frequently held that in cases not under the Bengal Tenancy Act a presumption may arise apart from the Act that where there has been a uniform payment of rent for more than 20 years the original contract was a contract to hold at fixed rates. The learned Subordinate Judge has considered the case from this point of view and he has considered that in addition to there being evidence of no change of rent for a fixed period there is also the fact that the pro forma defendants who are also landlords of a considerable share made by recognizing the transfer not only admitted the transferability of the holding but also the fixity of the rent, as he points out this is something more than a mere forbearance on the part of the landlords to enhance the rent. Sitting as a Court of Second Appeal we are not prepared to hold that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in drawing this presumption.

The only other point urged on our expressing our opinion that the tenancy was transferable is that the interest transferred was that of a Hindu widow and expired after her death. We hold that this contention which was not raised in either of the lower Courts cannot be raised in second appeal. It is pointed out that there is some reference to this made in the plaint. But issues were framed in the presence of parties and none of the issues framed raised this question.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

MARUTI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

UKARDA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Life-estate — Lease-money — Personal debt—Rent, when due.

Rent due by a lessee to a lessor holding a life-estate is a personal debt to which a personal heir of the lessor would succeed on his death even though the property in respect of which the rent is due cannot be inherited by such heir.

The rent of a leased property is due as soon as the lease is granted, although it may not be payable till a particular time.

Haridas Acharjia Chowdhry v. Baroda Kishore Acharjia Chowdhry, 27 C. 38 at p. 41; 4 C. W. N. 87; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 26, referred to.

The fact that a life-estate-holder dies before the rent in respect of the estate becomes payable would not make it any-the-less his personal debt.

Appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 31st of October 1922, confirming that of the Munsif, Daryapur, dated the 29th of June 1922.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Banya Bai who had succeeded to certain palampat inam lands held by her father leased the same to different lessees for the year 1328 Fasli. The defendant-respondent is one of the lessees. The leases were granted on the 1st

June 1918 and the rent was payable on the 1st January 1919. Banya Bai died in November 1918. The plaintiff who is Banya Bai's husband sued for the rent as her heir. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had no right to the rent as under the Berar Inam Rules he did not succeed to the fields which were inam and had come to Banya Bai from her father. The plaintiff replied that he was entitled to succeed to the fields and further that the rent was the personal property of Banya Bai to which at any rate he was entitled to succeed.

The Trial Court dismissed the suit and the lower Appellate Court has confirmed the dismissal. The lower Courts have held that under Inam Rule V the plaintiff is not the heir to the fields. This finding is quite correct.

As to the title to the rent independent of the title to the field it was argued that the lease-money was a debt due to Banya Bai and was inherited by the plaintiff as the heir to her personal estate. The lower Appellate Court held that as the rent had not become payable in Banya Bai's lifetime there was no debt due to her which the plaintiff could inherit. This, in my opinion, is not correct; the rent was due as soon as the lease was granted but it was not payable till the 1st January 1919. It was, therefore, a debt; vide Haridas Acharjia Chowdhry v. Baroda Kishore Acharjia Chowdhry (1).

Further as between the parties to the suit the question as to who is entitled to the rent seems to me to depend upon the intention of the term in the lease reserving the rent. In this case the rent is reserved in favour of the lessor generally without mentioning her personal heirs, executors or reversioners. We have, therefore, to gather the intention from the circumstances of the case. In the present case, if Banya Bai had taken the rent in advance the reversioner would have had no claim against the tenant. The rent would have formed part of Banya Bai's estate to which the plaintiff would have become entitled. The fact that it was made payable later during the currency of the lease and Banya Bai died before the day fixed for payment is no reason why it should go to the reversioners. No such intention can be presumed from the circumstances of the case. If there is any presumption it is the other way. Banya Bai cannot have intended the money to go to the reversioners in preference to the heirs to her own property.

The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the plaintiff's claim decreed with costs throughout.

Jurisdiction of Courts—Statutory obligations and remedies—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of—Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 113—Passenger travelling without ticket—Penalty, suit for recovery of, whether maintainable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Assumption of jurisdiction—Revision.

The general rule of law (or rather of construction) is that where a general obligation is created by Statute and a specific statutory remedy is provided, that statutory remedy is the only remedy. [p. 747, col. 1.]

A suit by a Railway Company to recover from a passenger who has lost his season ticket, the ordinary fare plus excess charge as provided by s. 113 of the Railways Act, being a suit for recovery of a statutory penalty created by the said Act, and being unknown to Common Law is not entertainable by a Civil Court. The penalty can be enforced only by following the procedure laid down in the said Act. [p. 743, col. 1; p. 745, col. 1.]

Where upon an erroneous construction of a Statute, a Subordinate Court assumes a jurisdiction which does not belong to it, the High Court has the power to revise its decision. [p. 746, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, J.—The B. B. & C. I. Railway Co., hereinafter called the Company, took out a summons in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay against the defendant to answer in an action for debt—damages according to the following particulars of demand.

"Amount of fares and excess charges due and payable by you according to law, you having travelled on the plaintiff Company's Railway between Church Gate and Malad and vice versa every day by First Class from February 26, 1924, to April 1, 1924, (as per statement and particulars annexed) without having with you a proper pass or ticket during the said period for the said journeys as required by law." Rs. 342, the amount claimed, represented First Class fare for Rs. 171, and excess charges for a like amount.

(1) 27 C. 38 at p. 41; 4 C. W. N. 87; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 26.

The suit was tried by the Fourth Judge who dismissed it with costs.

The Full Court on a rule being granted to set aside the order of dismissal and to pass a decree for the Company made the Rule absolute and passed a decree for Rs. 338 and costs.

On the application of the defendant a notice was issued to the Company; under s. 115 of the C. P. C., to show cause why the decree of the Fourth Judge should not be restored, on the ground that the suit was for the recovery of a statutory penalty created by s. 113 of the Indian Railways Act, which being unknown to the Common Law could only be enforced by following the remedy provided in the said Act.

The defendant had purchased from the Company for Rs. 65-12 0 a season ticket or pass which entitled him to travel by First Class between Church Gate and Malad whenever and as often as he chose during the three months from January 26, 1924, to April 25, 1924.

The following notice was printed on the ticket: "This ticket is forfeited if transferred, and is issued subject to the Regulations of the Company, as notified in the Quarterly Time-table and Railway Guide. It should be given up on the day following the date of its expiry, otherwise the amount of the deposit will be forfeited. In the event of this ticket being lost a fresh ticket will only be issued on payment of full charges and fresh deposit.

This ticket must be produced when required."

On February 25, the defendant lost his pass which was stolen from his pocket while he was travelling from Malad to Church Gate. On February 28, the defendant notified the loss to the Company and said, "Since then I have been travelling without a ticket and I propose to do so until a duplicate pass is issued to me; having regard to the special circumstances of this case when on travelling on your Railway my purse containing the pass had been robbed, I hope you will make it a special case in issuing a duplicate pass up to April 24, and oblige."

The defendant was informed by letter of March 1, that a duplicate ticket could not be issued according to the rules and he must purchase a fresh ticket.

On March 14, the General Traffic Manager wrote to the defendant that it had been reported to him that the defendant was found travelling without a ticket and on being asked to pay the legal fare declined to do so. A demand for Rs. 42 12-0 the legal fare for Railway journeys made by the defendant after he lost his ticket up to the 6th March, was made. On March 15, the defendant replied that he had paid the Company for the use of its Railways full fare up to April 24, and he would like to know by what term of the contract or under what section of the Indian Contract Act his right to travel had been taken away. The Company replied on March 18 that the defendant by failing to produce the ticket had committed a breach of the contract, and in accordance with s. 113 of the Indian Railways Act he was liable to pay the charges demanded in the letter of March 14. He was also liable to pay the excess charges prescribed in s. 113 of the Act. As the defendant continued to travel on the Company's line without paying for another ticket or pass, the Company took out the summons in the case on April 2.

The Trial Judge said: "The only question to be determined is whether any liability attached to defendant, and, if so, what was the extent of it."

Following the decision of Jessel, M. R., in West v. Downman (1) that it was a settled rule that, if a Statute created a new right and gave a particular remedy for enforcing it, there was no other remedy, he held that the plaintiff had come to the wrong forum for a claim under that section. The section, however, did not exclude the Company's right to sue the defendant for breach of the contract. It was not suggested that defendant had transferred his ticket, and as no time-tables or guides had been published after the war, there was no obligation on the defendant to look for the regulation in other places.

With regard to the obligation to produce his ticket when required, the defendant was only required to produce his ticket on three occasions and failed to do so, but for such a breach of his contract the defendant was not liable to pay damages. Apart from the terms of the contract, the defendant having paid for his right to travel for the period in suit, there was no obligation at Common Law for him to pay again, if he lost his ticket.

(1) (1880) 14 Ch. D. 111; 42 L. T. 340; 29 W. R. 6.

Section 68 of the Indian Railways Act, IX of 1890, provides that no person shall without the permission of a Railway servant, enter any carriage on a Railway for the purpose of travelling therein as a passenger unless he has with him a proper pass or ticket.

And by s. 69 it is provided that every passenger by Railway shall, on the requisition of any Railway servant appointed by the Railway Administration in this behalf, present his pass or ticket to the Railway servant for examination, and at or near the end of the journey for which the pass or ticket was issued or in the case of a season pass or ticket, at the expiration of the period for which it is current, deliver up the pass or ticket to the Railway servant.

The Judge pointed out that the same Statute which imposed the duty imposed by s. 69 created under s 113 a remedy in favour of the Railway Company, and the three sections had to be read together. Section 113, sub-s. (1), provides that if a passenger travels in a train without having a proper pass or a proper ticket with him, or being in or having alighted from a train, fails or refuses to present for examination or to deliver up his pass or ticket immediately on requisition being made therefor under s. 69 he shall be liable to pay on the demand of any Railway servant appointed by the Railway Administration in this behalf, the excess charge thereinafter in this section mentioned in addition to the ordinary single fare for the distance which he has travelled.

And by sub-s. (4) if a passenger liable to pay the excess charge and fare mentioned in sub-s. (1), fails or refuses to pay the same on demand being made, therefor, the sum payable by him shall, on application made to any Magistrate by any Railway servant appointed by the Railway Administration in this behalf, be recovered by the Magistrate from the passenger as if it were a fine imposed on the passenger by the Magistrate and shall, as it is recovered, be paid to the Railway Administration. The Judge thought that there was nothing in s. 68 to entitle the Railway Company to make a passenger travelling without a ticket with him, even when he had paid for it before starting on the journey, pay a second time.

The Chief Judge was of opinion that on the terms of the contract with the defendant contained in the ticket, if the ticket was lost, the relative amount paid for its purchase was lost and the contract terminated. If the defendant wished to continue travelling on the Company's Railway he was bound to purchase a fresh ticket, or render himself liable for the consequences which would follow on his travelling without a ticket, that is to say, as provided by s. 113 (1), he would have to pay the ordinary fare and a certain excess fare.

The Chief Judge then considered whether the remedy provided by s. 113 (4) was cumulative or exclusive, and pointed out that in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXVII, page 189, paras. 370 and 373, it was stated that in the case of Statutes of the third class referred to, in which a new obligation was created and a special remedy provided, when a particular mode of enforcing a new obligation was specified, such obligation as a general rule could be enforced in no other manner. He seemed to consider that the words 'as a general rule' implied that there were exceptions. In the Crystal Palace Gas Company v. Idris & Co. (2), the distinction is made clear. The Company brought an action for negligence against the defendant owing to one of their lamps having been broken by the negligent driving of one of their servants. The defendant relied on s. 20 of the Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847, which directed that persons carelessly or accidentally damaging a lamp belonging to the undertakers or under their control should pay for the damage done a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, as any two Justices or the Sheriff should think reasonable.

The Court held there was nothing in that section to oust the ordinary remedy for negligently knocking down a lamp. So under the section before us there is nothing which ousts the jurisdiction of the Court in an action by the Railway Company to recover the fare from a passenger who has not paid it. But it is quite clear that there is no jurisdiction in the Court to decree the penalty provided by the section. Once the difficulty in determining whether a particular Statute comes within the third class is solved then the rule applies.

Thereafter by means of an argument, which I am unable to follow, the Chief

Judge considered that the defendant's contention, that as three demands only had been made, he was liable to pay for three journeys only, had been disposed of. It would have been more advisable, he thought, for the plaintiff to have made proper demands for the whole amount sued for either orally or by letter. However, it might be taken that the suit was a demand and its resistance was a refusal.

Though the cause of action was framed on the basis of the liability incurred under s. 113 (1) it sounded in damages. As the defendant had lost his ticket and so put an end to the contract, he was not entitled to avail himself of it, and so far all journeys at which he was unable to produce a ticket for inspection he was liable to pay. The jurisdiction of a Civil Court not having been taken away he could be sued in the Court of Small Causes.

A decree was then passed for Rs. 338, Rs. 4 less than the amount demanded, and costs thereon.

I granted a Rule as it seemed to me an open question whether defendant could satisfy this Court that the case came within the provision of s. 115, C. P. C., on the ground that the Small Causes Court had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it.

When the Rule came on for hearing, it was first contended by the Advocate-General appearing for Company that the Rule was not competent.

The question whether a Subordinate Court has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law is always a difficult one to determine, when the Court, by the construction it has put on a particular Statute, has held it has jurisdiction to decide the matter before it, and the question has been rendered more difficult by the somewhat confused reasons by which, with all due respect, the Chief Judge has justified his decision. If the suit was a suit for damages for breach of contract then the Court had jurisdiction. The Chief Judge said that though the suit was framed on the basis of the liability incurred under s. 113 (4), it sounded in damages and thereby appears to have deceived himself into thinking he was entitled to pass a decree for damages, the measure of damages being prescribed by section 113 (4). In the first instance it is necessary to draw a very definite line between the realm of contract and the realm of statutory obligation. The defendant by paying the proper fare had entitled himself to travel according to the particulars mentioned in his ticket. He was bound to produce it when required, and, if he lost it, he could not get another without paying for it. But if he did not produce his ticket, or lost it, the contract of carriage did not thereby come to an end. A passenger who pays for his accommodation but has not with him a proper pass or ticket cannot be sued, if he completes the journey without a demand being made upon him for his ticket, on an implied contract that if he travels by the plaintiff's Railway he undertakes to pay for the accommodation, because he has already paid. Having no pass or ticket he may be a trespasser, but then he is only liable to the penalties imposed on trespassers.

Chapter IX of the Act which contains s. 113 deals with penalties and offences.

Before the penalty imposed by s. 113 (1) can be enforced under sub-s. (4), there must be requisition on the passenger under s. 69, and a failure or refusal to present for examination or to deliver up his pass or ticket. Then there arises a liability to pay the ordinary fare plus an excess charge. The liability to pay does not arise from the contract but from the Statute, and the Statute prescribes the method by which the amount the passenger is liable to pay can be recovered.

In any event, the liability to pay only arose on three occasions on which payment was demanded and refused. It is impossible to view the filing of a suit as the demand which is required by s. 113 (1), and the resistance to the suit as the refusal. Obviously, it is the refusal which creates the right of action, if there is such a right, and that must have occurred before the suit is filed. But clearly it is intended by s. 113 (1) that the demand should be made by a Railway servant on the Company's premises before the passenger has departed therefrom. If the Court had confined itself to passing a decree for the fare on the ground that the original contract had come to an end, and that if the defendant had travelled by the Company's Railway an obligation arose upon him to pay for the accommodation, it might have been difficult to contest the decision under s. 115 of the C. P. C., but the Chief Judge has clearly considered that the Small Causes Court was entitled to pass a decree for the penalties imposed by s. 113 of the Indian Railways Act, Such a suit could not be a suit for debt or damages, it would be a suit to recover penalties provided by a special Act, and unless jurisdiction has been given to the Small Causes Court to try a suit for the recovery of the penalties which can be exacted under s. 113 of the Indian Railways Act concurrent with the Magistrate's jurisdiction under sub-s. (4), the Small Causes Court has no jurisdiction.

In my opinion, therefore, the Rule must be made absolute and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Coyajee, J.—The facts of this case are fully set out in the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice. The B. B. & C. I. Railway Co., sued the defendant in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay to recover the sum of Rs. 342 according to the following particulars of demand: "amount of fares and excess charges due and payable by you according to law, you having travelled on the plaintiff's Company's Railway between Church Gate and Malad vice versa every day by First Class from February 26, 1924, to April 1, 1924, as per statement and particulars annexed without having with you a proper pass or ticket during the period for the said journeys as required by law." The Company brought the claim under s. 113 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890. The defence was that the plaintiff Company was seeking to enforce a statutory right, and as the Act had prescribed the manner in which it should be enforced and also indicated a special tribunal for that purpose, the Court of Small Causes had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Trial Judge accepted the contention and dismissed the claim. His decree was reversed by the Full Court. The learned Chief Judge said: "The cause of action is framed no doubt on the basis of the liability incurred under s. 113 (1), but it sounds in damages. The remedy given by cl. (4) of that section is not as against an offence, where the aggrieved party should proceed by indictment." The Full Court held that the Act did not oust the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, and they passed a decree for Rs. 338 in favour of the Company.

The defendant has applied to us, under s. 115 of the C. P. C., asking for a revision of that decision on the ground that the said Court had erroneously assumed a jurisdiction which was not vested in it by law. In my opinion the application is competent. Where upon an erroneous construction of a Statute, a Subordinate Court assumes a jurisdiction which does not belong to it, the High Court has the power to revise its decision. In Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (3) their Lordships referred to s. 115 and said (page 267)*: "It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved." The case before us is a case of an illegal assumption of jurisdiction by the lower Court.

On the claim as made by the Railway Company, the remedy is to be found in s. 113, sub-s. (4) of the Act. The claim was in respect of "fare and excess charges" due and payable by the defendant according to law, he having travelled without having with him a proper pass or ticket. The Company relied on the following notice printed on the ticket; (1) "In the event of this ticket being lost, a fresh ticket will only be issued on payment of full charges and fresh deposit;" and (2) "This ticket must be produced when required."

It is necessary to refer to the relevant provisions of the Act, which, for this purpose, are ss. 68, 69 and 113. The first two sections come under Ch. VI which deals with the "Working of Railways." Section 68 is in these terms:—

"No person shall, without the permission of Railway servant, enter any carriage on a Railway for the purpose of travelling therein as a passenger unless he has with him a proper pass or ticket."

Then s. 69 says:—

"Every passenger by Railway shall, on the requisition of any Railway servant appointed by the Railway Administration in this behalf, present his pass or ticket to the Railway servant for examination, and at or near the end of the journey for which the pass or ticket was issued, or, in the case of a season pass or ticket, at the expiration of the period for which it is current, deliver up the pass or ticket to the Railway servant."

The consequences of a breach of these statutory obligations are made known in s. 113. It falls under Ch. IX which treats of "Penalties and Offences." The material portion of s. 113 runs thus: "(1) If a passenger travels in a train without having a proper pass, or a proper ticket with him" [this apparently has reference to s. 68] or, being in or having alighted from a train, fails or refuses to present for examination or to deliver up his pass or ticket immediately on requisition being made therefor under s. 69, he shall be liable to pay, on the demand of any Railway servant appointed by the Railway Administration in this behalf, the excess charge hereafter in this section mentioned, in addition to the ordinary single fare for the distance which he has travelled." Sub-section (3) deals with the excess charge referred to in sub-s. (1). By sub-s. (4) it is enacted that "If a passenger liable to pay the excess charge and fare mentioned in sub s. (1)......fails or refuses to pay the same on demand being made therefor......the sum payable by him shall, on application made to any Magistrate by any Railway servant appointed by the Railway Administration in this behalf, be recovered by the Magistrate from the passenger as if it were a fine imposed on the passenger by the Magistrate and shall, as it is recovered, be paid to the Railway Administration." The defendant had admittedly purchased from the Railway Company for the sum of Rs. 65-12-0 a ticket or pass which entitled him to travel on the Company's Railway in a First Class carriage between Church Gate and Malad whenever and as often as he chose during the three months from January 26, to April 25, 1924. The Company, however, alleges that the defendant has committed a breach of the obligation contained in ss. 68 and 69 that he has rendered himself liable to a further payment under s. 113 (1); it accordingly claims Rs. 342 for the fare and for the excess charge. This claim the Company could enforce only in the manner prescribed by the Act. For, "the general rule of law (or rather of construction) is that where a general obligation is created by Statute and a specific statutory remedy is provided, that statutory remedy is the only remedy." (Craies' Statute Law, 2nd Edition, page 224). The defendant's liability to pay the ordinary fare and an excess charge arises not from the contract but from the Statute. And I agree with the Trial Judge when he says: "To my mind the defendant having already paid for all these journeys is not liable to the plaintiff under the Common Law for travelling without a ticket with him." The plaintiff Company has clearly brought its claim under s. 113 of the Act; the Act provides a particular remedy for enforcing it; and the plaintiff Company should follow that remedy.

Suit on demand promissory note under O. XXXVII, C. P. C.

Mr. Kodumal Lekhraj, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Srikishandas H. Lulla, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit under O. XXXVII, C. P. C. for recovery of Rs. 1,970 with interest due on a demand promissory note executed by the Firm of Parsram Hassanand defendant in the suit in favour of the plaintiffs. The demand note is dated the 9th Mangh Sambat 1980 corresponding to the 15th February 1924. One Parsram son of Naraindas who was served as one of the partners of the defendant firm obtained leave to defend the suit and on the written statement filed by him the following issues were raised by the Court.

1. Was the defendant No. 1 (Parsram Naraindas) partner in the defendant firm.
2. Was the Bill of Exchange in suit drawn by the defendant firm and is it binding on the defendant No. 1.
3. Was there no consideration for the Bill of Exchange.
4. Had defendant No. 2 power to draw the Bill of Exchange.
5. Was the said bill presented to defendant No. 1 if not what is the result.
6. General.

On the evidence there can be no doubt that Parsram Naraindas was not only a partner in the firm but one of its principal partners and is liable on the demand note.

It appears that Parsram and Pessumal defendant No. 2 who are two brothers and one Hassanand or Assanand started their business on the divali day of 1923 in the name of Parsram Hassanand, Parsram being the name of the present contesting defendant, he being the older of the two brothers and Hassanand being the name of the third partner. The business which was in the actual management of Pessumal was carried on for a period of three or four months only resulting in a heavy loss. The defendant firm had dealings with the plaintiffs on which Rs. 1,970 was found due. Pessumal passed the demand note in favour of the plaintiffs and promised to get the plaintiffs money from Parsram who was then at Shikarpur. The plaintiffs deputed one of their servants Dewanmal Ex. 7 to Shikarpur to recover the amount. He presented the demand note for payment to Parsram. He was successfully put off by the two brothers and sent back to Karachi without payment and ultimately the plaintiffs were obliged to institute this suit. Pessumal has made himself scarce and the books of the partnership business are not forth coming.

The plaintiffs have proved by the evidence of Jessaram a servant at the defendant's firm that the business was started by the two brothers and Hassanand in partnership. His evidence finds corroboration in the evidence of Bhagwandas Ex. 9 who attended the opening ceremony of the firm and in the evidence of the plaintiffs' managing partner who is also one Parsram; that the defendant Parsram had come to his kothi to make purchases on behalf of the firm. In cross-examination of the witness Bhagwandas an attempt was made to show that the witness had never attended at the opening ceremony and his statement that he had made the customary deposit with the defendant's firm at the opening ceremony was challenged as untrue. The witness was thereupon sent to his place to produce his account books so as to substantiate his statement and within half-an-hour of the witness, giving evidence he produced his cash book kept in the regular course of business and put in entry Ex. 11 which amply corroborates his statement. The defendant Parsram has denied that he was in Karachi when the opening ceremony of the defendant's firm took place. He has been working at Karachi for over twenty years. He, however, attempted to lead the Court to believe that about this time he had temporarily gone to Bombay as a servant of one Hiranand Khushiram where he served for 5½ months and thereafter he went to Shikarpur and stayed at Shikarpur for 1½ months owing to ill health. He has failed to substantiate his evidence by the evidence of any other person. He pleaded ignorance of the business being done by his brother in the name of Parsram Hassanand and pretended that as he had not seen his brother's handwriting a long time he could not say for certain if the demand note was written by his brother though he admitted having mortgaged the family house on behalf of himself and his brother within 20 months of the date of his giving evidence, on the strength of a letter written to him by his absconding brother; that letter, however, he would not produce. I have no hesitation in holding that his evidence is false and my findings on the issues are as follows:—

Issues Nos. 1 and 2 in the affirmative.

Issue No. 3 that the demand note was for valuable consideration.

Issue No. 4 in the affirmative.

Issue No. 5 in the affirmative.

Issue No. 6. One further point has been raised and argued under this issue and which requires special notice.

The demand note sued on when it was first presented in Court bore a four-annas postage stamp. Both Parsram and Hassanand had applied for leave to defend the suit on the ground that neither of them was a partner. In his application for leave Parsram had in addition to the plea that he was not a partner raised the following further plea:—

Paragraph 3. "That a copy of the document served upon the applicant does not show that it is stamped and he consequently denies that it is valid in law."

It appears that at the hearing of the application for leave to defend he failed to urge that though the demand note bore a four-annas postal stamp it was not duly stamped and that no suit under the Summary Chapter could, therefore, be entertained. Both Parsram and Hassanand were given leave to defend on their furnishing security. Hassanand failed to give security and his application was dismissed. The order of security against Parsram was subsequently altered by the Court in view of the fact that his property had been attached and the attachment was considered sufficient security. It may fairly be assumed that the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner whose attention was drawn to the demand note at the hearing of the motion for leave to defend considered that the document was properly stamped and the learned Pleader for Parsram either waived his objection or did not consider it fit to press it. I am supported in this assumption by the fact that in the written statement filed by Parsram after he had obtained leave to defend the suit he did not raise this question or ask for a specific issue.

At the hearing when the document was being formally exhibited the learned Pleader re-agitated the question in a different form. He contended that as the document bore a four-annas postage stamp it was not duly stamped and could not be received in evidence.

Now under the Stamp Act of 1899 a demand note required the fixing of an adhesive stamp of one-anna. By Government of India Act XLIII of 1923 the duty for demand notes exceeding Rs. 1,000 in value was raised from one-anna to four annas. Under r. 16 of the Rules in force prior to the amending Act of 1923 it was permissible for the executing party to affix a stamp of one anna which was inscribed for use either for postage or for revenue or for both postage and revenue. The operation of the amending Act resulted in a two-fold hardship. On the one hand executants who were not aware of the excess duty imposed by the Legislature affixed one-anna stamp and on the other hand others, as the defendants in the present case affixed a four-annas postage stamp in ignorance of r. 16. By Act XIII of 1924 the Legislature has afforded relief in cases where the demand notes and other negotiable instruments were stamped according to the old law by declaring such documents to have been duly stamped and by r. 16 of the amended Rules promulgated on the 5th June 1925. The Legislature has further declared that the adhesive stamps affixed to a document may be those bearing the words "four-annas" or two-annas or "one-anna" or "half-anna" and such stamps may be inscribed for use either for postage or for revenue or for both postage and revenue. It would appear, therefore, that if this document had been executed after the 5th June 1925 it would indubitably have been deemed to be duly stamped. Whether r. 16 was intended to have a retrospective effect or not, in view of s. 76, cl (2) of the Act and the intention of the Legislature to remove the hardship caused by the amending Act of 1923 was a moot point. As the plaintiffs' Pleader was taken by surprise by the objection raised at the last moment, I permitted the document to be referred to in evidence subject to the decision as to its admissibility after the point was fully discussed. On 18th November 1925, I acceded to the request of the plaintiffs' Pleader to afford them an opportunity of approaching the Collector to validate the document under s. 37 of the Act and as the document had already been produced in Court directed the Registrar to send it to the Collector to enable the plaintiffs to apply to him but making it, however, clear by my order that it was for the Collector to decide and grant the necessary certificate if he considered it to be a fit case for such certificate being granted. The Collector has granted the necessary certificate. Mr. Lulla has applied for review of my order and has contended that the certificate granted by the Collector is ultra vires and therefore of no effect.

There is nothing in my order which requires to be reviewed. The course adopted by me was the one taken in Tukaram v. Sonaji (1) a case decided by the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court. It was open to Mr. Lulla to appear before the Collector and to satisfy him that he had no jurisdiction under s. 37 of the Act, which he failed to do. If he could not attend on 18th November 1925 it was open to him to get a copy of my order and to apply to the Collector that the document could not be validated and if he has failed to obtain the copy of my order up to now he has to thank himself.

The certificate having been granted by the Collector its validity can only be challenged under s. 57 of the Act on a reference by the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority by a High Court and not by me. Under the circumstances I do not consider it either necessary or desirable to discuss the question whether the document was affixed with a stamp of improper description or not and if not whether r. 16 of the present Rules should be given retrospective effect.

I pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs against the firm of Parsram Hassanand and its partners defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 for the amount in suit with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of suit to payment and costs.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 21—Administration, grant of—Applicant claiming under Will—Administration completed—Application, whether to be rejected—Person challenging Will, position of—Grant of Letters—Title, effect on.

The fact that an applicant for Letters of Administration claims under the Will, but his claim is unsustainable, would not deprive him of his right to administer the estate if he is otherwise entitled to the grant under s. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act. [p. 751, col. 1.]

The distinction between an application for Letters of Administration and for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed is important and should not be overlooked. [p. 751, col. 2.]

It is of paramount necessity that the Will should be established and the establishment of the Will is one of the functions of the Probate Court, and, in the case of an application for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed, the Probate Court cannot decline to exercise that function on the ground that there is nothing to be administered. JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—The question as to the genuineness of the Will was in controversy in the Court below, but is no longer in debate before us. The only question is whether Murli Manohar is entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. It is well-settled that the right of administration follows the right to the property. Murli Manohar claims that in the events which have happened he is now solely entitled to the estate of the deceased. By his Will the testator devised his estate to his widow and his two daughters-in-law and then provided as follows:—

"In case the said three Musammats die, Murli Manohar, son of Ram Charan Lal my brother's son shall be the heir and possessor of the properties."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that s. 124 of the Indian Succession Act is directly applicable and that the bequest in favour of Murli Manohar cannot take effect as the uncertain event specified in the Will did not happen before the period when the "fund" bequeathed was payable or distributable. Now, the "fund", in this case, the estate of the testator, was distributable on his death and it is not disputed that all the three ladies survived him. The rule enunciated in s. 124 of the Succession Act is a rule of law and not a rule of construction, and, although it is not necessary for us to decide the point, it would appear that s. 124 operates so as to bar the right of Murli Manohar to take under the Will.

But my opinion on this point does not decide this case. The estate has never been administered in due course of law and it is necessary that the validity of the Will should be established and the estate administered. Murli Manohar is not a stranger. He is the nephew of the testator and in the words of s. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act "would be entitled to the administration of the estate of the deceased if he had died intestate". The ladies are dead and there is no other applicant for Letters of Administration. In these circumstances s. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act would seem to apply. That section provides as follows:—

"When there is no executor and no residuary legatee or representative of a residuary legatee or, he declines or is incapable to act, or cannot be found, the person or persons who would be entitled to the administration of the estate of the deceased if he had died intestate, or any other legatee having a beneficial interest, or a creditor, may be admitted to prove the Will, and Letters of Administration may be granted to him or them accordingly."

It is contended by Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha that his client Kamla Prasad is at least the sister's son of the last surviving widow and is in the position of the representative of the residuary legatee and so s. 21 will not operate in favour of Murli Manohar. There are two answers to this argument; first, the ladies were not residuary legatees but universal legatees and the representative of a universal legatee is not entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration, and secondly, Kamla Prasad is not only not an applicant for a grant of Letters of Administration, but has put it out of his power to make such an application. The position taken up by Kamla Prasad in his petition of objection is that the Will is a forgery and that the ladies were in possession not by virtue of the Will but adversely to the whole estate and had acquired a title to the estate by adverse possession. That being so we must assume that he is incapable to act in the discharge of his duties as administrator even if the term "residuary legatee" in s. 21 includes universal legatee. In my opinion s. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act is clearly applicable and Murli Manohar is entitled to the grant.

It was then contended that Murli Manohar did not base his claim on the terms of s. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act. It is quite true that Murli Manohar claimed under the Will and so far as I can see his claim under the Will cannot be sustained. But the Will has to be established and the estate has to be administered and we should not deprive Murli Manohar of his right to administer the estate if he is otherwise entitled to the grant under s. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act.

Two other points were argued before us. First, that there is nothing whatever to administer and that the Court below should on this ground have refused the application of Murli Manohar, and secondly, that the grant of Letters of Administration was in the discretion of the learned Judge and that he should not have exercised his discretion in favour of Murli Manohar. The first point raises a question of fact, a question which was not raised in the petition of objection or in the arguments in the Court below. Cases have been cited to us to show that the delay in the application should put the Court on an enquiry as to whether there is anything to be administered and the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Lalit Chandra Chowdhury v. Baikuntha Nath Chowdhury (1) was referred to. That was a case where the application was for Letters of Administration, not for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. The distinction is important and should not be overlooked. It is of paramount necessity that the Will should be established and the establishment of the Will is one of the functions of the Probate Court and the Probate Court cannot decline to exercise that function because the administration is complete. In this case the widows were in possession for many years without applying for Letters of Administration. It is the case of Kamla Prasad that the Will is a forgery, that the widows acquired a title by adverse possession and that he, as the heir of the last surviving widow, is entitled to the whole estate. If we refuse to entertain the application, then the Will is put out of the way and there is nothing in the world to prevent Kamla Prasad from claiming a title to the property adversely to the estate of the testator. In my opinion the argument is an impossible one and should not find favour in this Court.

The last contention is that the learned Judge in the Court below should not have exercised his discretion in favour of the applicant for Letters of Administration. This is a matter not for us but for the Court below and this Court will not interfere with the discretion exercised by the learned Judge unless it is satisfied that that discretion was unreasonably exercised. I am not prepared to say that that discretion was unreasonably exercised. On the contrary having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case I am clearly of opinion that the discretion was properly exercised. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The appellant in F. A. No. 264 of 1924 is the brother of Murli Manohar and he is anxious that nothing should be decided in these proceedings to affect his title to the estate. A grant of administration does not decide any question of title. It merely decides the right to administer. There is no substance in this appeal which must be dismissed with costs.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 168 OF 1923.
September 2, 1925.
Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Coyajee.
JINABHAI NATHABHAI RASHIA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
THE COLLECTOR AND TALUQDARI SETTLEMENT OFFICER—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Gujarat Taluqdars' Act (VI of 1888), s. 33—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 111, 150—Land revenue, meaning of—Taluqdari Settlement—Officer's powers to recover arrears of rent.

The term 'land revenue' as used in s. 150, Bombay Land Revenue Code, is not confined to one particular kind of land revenue, namely, assessment but covers every other kind of revenue from land payable to Government by any person on account of land held by or vested in him. [p. 752, col. 2; p. 753, col. 1.]

Section 33, Gujarat Taluqdars' Act, gives complete powers to a Government Officer in the temporary management of a taluqdar's estate to recover arrears of revenue including rent. [p. 752, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree passed by the Joint Judge, at Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 7 of 1921.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dave (with him Mr. R. J. Thakor), for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 57-4-9 which the defendant's officers were alleged to have unjustly and unlawfully levied from him on September 22, 1920, and to have a permanent injunction restraining the defendant in future from recovering either by himself or through his officers any amount in excess of what he had been paying for the land in his possession. The first question was whether the plaintiff as a tenant of the suit land was a permanent tenant of the taluqdar of Dehwan at a fixed rent or a tenant-at-will. It can hardly be disputed that the Judge was right in holding that the plaintiff failed to prove anything in the nature of a permanent tenancy.

The next question then was whether the arrears of rent which had been recovered by the defendant were illegally recovered under powers not possessed by the defendant who was a Taluqdari Settlement Officer. Section 111 of the Land Revenue Code has been incorporated in s. 33 of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act VI of 1888 and now runs as follows:—

"In the event of any taluqdar's estate coming under the temporary management of Government Officers, it shall be lawful for the Collector, Taluqdari Settlement Officer, or other officer appointed by Government in this behalf, subject, in any case, to which it applies, to the proviso to s. 29 of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act, 1888, to let out the lands thereof at rates determined by means of a Survey Settlement or at such other fixed rates as he may deem to be reasonable, and to sell the occupancy of unoccupied lands by auction, and otherwise to conduct the revenue management thereof under the rules for the management of unalienated lands not comprised within a taluqdar's estate, so far as such rules may be applicable and for so long as the said estate shall be under the management of Government Officers."

It would appear that that section gives complete powers to a Government Officer in the temporary management of a taluqdar's estate to manage the revenue in the same way as the Collector would manage the revenue of an unalienated village. The contention is that in this case the payments exacted from the plaintiff were payments of rent and not land revenue, and that under s. 150 of the Land Revenue Code only arrears of land revenue could be recovered by the process mentioned in that section. There is no definition of the term "land revenue" in the Land Revenue Code, although in the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act which was passed three years before the Land Revenue Code, "land revenue" is defined as meaning "all sums and payments, in money or in kind received or claimable by or on behalf of Government from any person on account of any land held by or vested in him, and any cess or rate authorised by Government under the provisions of any law for the time being in force." It seems to me that we cannot restrict the meaning of the term "land revenue" in s. 150 to one particular kind of land revenue, that is to say, assessment, so that, if any other kind of revenue from land is payable to Government by any person on account of any land held by or vested in him, and he falls into arrears in the payment of such revenue, it cannot be recovered from him under s. 150. But in any event the words of s. 33 of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act are wide enough to give the Collector full powers of management for the collection of revenue in the same way as the Collector enjoys for the management of unalienated land. It would certainly be a very strange thing if the Taluqdari Settlement Officer in charge of the taluqdar's estate should have to proceed by the ordinary process of the Civil Courts before he could recover the arrears of revenue. A reference may be made to s. 86 by which "superior holders shall upon written application to the Collector, be entitled to assistance, by the use of precautionary and other measures, for the recovery of rent or land revenue payable to them by inferior holders, or by co-sharers in their holdings, under the same rules, except that contained in s. 137, and in the same manner, as prescribed in Ch. XI for the realization of land revenue by Government." It would be still more remarkable if, when a superior holder is entitled to get such assistance from the Collector, the Collector himself when in charge of a taluqdari estate had not the same powers for the recovery of arrears of revenue due from persons by whom lands within the taluqdar's estate are held.

Reference may also be made to Daluchand Fulchand v. Gulabbhai Kanthadji (1) in which it was held by Mr. Justice Heaton that the provisions of the Land Revenue Code would apply in cases where a taluqdar's estate came under the temporary management of Government Officer, so that he would be empowered thereunder to attach and recover all arrears. In that case the arrears to be recovered were arrears of assessment, but the ratio decidendi that s 33 gave the Collector the same powers which he had under the Land Revenue Code to recover assessment, would apply to this case, so that, in my opinion, the Collector had power to enforce the payment of arrears of revenue. I think that the judgment of the Court below is right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Coyajee, J.—I agree. By s. 33 (2) of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act, 1888, it is enacted that the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code when applied to any estate to which that Act extends "shall be subject to the following modification, namely:—(e) for s. 111 the following section shall be deemed to be substituted, viz.:—

"Section 111. In the event of any taluqdar's estate coming under the temporary management of Government Officers, it shall be lawful for the Collector, Taluqdari Settlement Officer, or other officer appointed by Government in this behalf...to let out the lands thereof at rates determined by means of a Survey Settlement or at such other fixed rates as he may deem to be reasonable, and to sell the occupancy of unoccupied lands by auction, and otherwise to conduct the revenue management thereof under the rules for the management of unalienated lands not comprised within a taluqdar's estate so far as such rules may be applicable."

In my opinion the expression "rules for the management of unalienated lands" occurring in that section, whatever else it may mean, includes the relevant provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. Section 111, as thus substituted, provides for the revenue management of taluqdari estates, which may be temporarily under Government management. It does not say that the powers of the Taluqdari Settlement Officer during his management are only those possessed by the taluqdar himself before the management begins. He is expressly empowered to let out the lands of the estate at such fixed rates as he might deem to be reasonable, to sell the occupancy of unoccupied lands by auction "and otherwise to conduct the revenue management thereof under the rules for the management of unalienated lands."

He is, in my judgment, empowered when necessary, to take action under ss. 150, 152 and 154 of the Land Revenue Code. This construction is in consonance both with the object and the provisions of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act. The object apparently is that the management should be conducted expeditiously and economically within the legal rights possessed by the Collector or the Taluqdari Settlement Officer as the case may be. In this case a detailed survey was introduced in the village of Gou-a where the lands in suit are situated, in the year 1912, some time after the Government management began. All the holdings were then treated as tenancies-at-will. This led to the institution of Suit No. 22 of 1913 as a test case, in which Dola Jita and another asked for a declaration that their holdings were held by them on permanent tenure, and that they were not liable to ejectment while they paid the salami. The suit failed both in the District Court and, on appeal, in the High Court. Thereafter the notice, Ex. 40, was served on the plaintiff in this case in December 1918. On his failing to comply with it, the Taluqdari Settlement Officer adopted the measures of which the plaintiff now complains.

In my opinion, the conclusions arrived at by the Trial Judge are right; and I would add that in the Trial Court the defendant's Counsel stated that his client had no intention of evicting the plaintiff and, therefore, the Judge did not consider the third issue in the case.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Kanhaiyalal sues on a mortgage, dated the 20th July 1909, executed by one Sultan deceased and his sons Sarwar, Fattu and Chhotoo. Fattu and Chhotoo are dead. Sarwar is defendant No. 1. Mulanbi widow of Sultan is defendant No. 2. Minubi and Asabi widows and Kamru, Nasru and Rahmu sons of Fattu are defendants Nos. 3 to 7. Musammat Nazim widow and Sheikh Chand son of Chhottoo are defendants Nos. 9 and 10. Defendant No. 8 Minaruddin is a transferee from defendants Nos. 3, 5, 6 and 7.

The defence pleas with which we are concerned in this appeal are two. The first is that the mortgage-deed is not duly attested and the second that Minubi, Asabi and Nazimbi being in possession of the mortgaged property under a claim of dower since 1920, when their husbands Fattu and Chhotoo died, their lien of dower has priority over the mortgagee's lien. Both pleas have failed in the lower Court and the three widows have appealed.

[The discussion of first defence plea is not necessary for purposes of this report and is, therefore, omitted:—Ed.]

As regards the second point it is argued that the right of widows to retain possession is available against everybody including even the secured creditor of her husband. A claim for dower is a debt and ranks with unsecured debts of the husband: Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1). But when a widow has lawfully and without force or fraud taken possession of her husband's estate in lieu of dower she has the right to retain it till the dower is paid. The right has no analogy to a mortgage for the widow has no estate or interest in the property: Maina Bibi v. Vakil Ahmad (2). The cases cited in support of the right are cases between the widow and the heirs of her deceased husband where the right was held available against the heirs. No authority has been quoted where it has been held to prevail against creditors holding the security of the husband's property. The reason for allowing the right of retention as against the heirs appears to be that dower has priority over the rights of the husband's heirs and the legacies bequeathed by him.

In Ameer Ammal v. Sankaranarayana Chetty (3) the property of which the widow was in possession had been mortgaged by the husband and the mortgagee had it sold in execution of his decree. It was held that the widow was not entitled to retain possession of it against the purchaser. This case has been cited without comment or disapproval in their books on Muhammadan Law by Mulla and Tyebji though Ameer Ali in his book expresses the opinion that the view taken in that ruling is rather strained. Ameer Ali's opinion is based on the view that once the widow lawfully obtains possession in lieu of her dower, her position becomes that of a mortgagee in possession. This view, however, has not been endorsed in Maina Bibi v. Vakil Ahmad (2). The case has also been referred to in Beeju Bee v. Moorthiya Sahib (4) apparently with approval.

I am, therefore, of opinion that a Muhammadan widow in possession of her deceased husband's estate in lieu of dower has no right to retain possession against a creditor of her husband whose debt is secured by that estate.

The appeal fails and is dismissed. The costs of respondent No. 1 will be paid by the appellants.

JUDGMENT.—A question has been raised as to whether mesne profits subsequent to the date of the High Court decree, which have been awarded to the decree-holders, can be taken into consideration in making an estimate of the value under para. 2 of s. 110 of the C. P. C. In our opinion, the answer to this is that they cannot. It has been held in Raoji Bhikaji v. Lakmibai (1) following the case of Surendra Nath Roy v. Dwarka Nath Chakrabutty (2) that the value under s. 110 ought to be ascertained as at the date of the High Court decree under appeal, and on that principle mesne profits subsequent to the decree cannot be taken into account. There is no practice of this Court allowing such mesne profits to be taken into account and the practice of the Calcutta High Court referred to in Mahabir Prasad Singh v. Anup Narain Singh (3) covers only mesne profits up to the date of the decree of the Appellate Court. The decision of the Privy Council in Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (4) that interest subsequent to a decree should not be allowed to be included,—would seem applicable to the case of mesne profits, as has been held in Subramania Aiyar v. Sellammal (5) and the old rulings of the Privy Council in Gooroopershad Khoond v. Juggutchunder (6) and Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58—Construction of document—Sale of property with right to re-purchase—Sale or security for money.

A person executed a sale of certain properties to another for Rs. 3,500 and on the same day obtained a counter-agreement from the vendee providing that at the end of any fasli before three years from date, the vendor might re-purchase the property conveyed on paying the total sale price. The property sold was worth very much more than Rs. 3,500. The vendor was to bear the expenses of the deed of re-conveyance and was also to pay interest on a sum of money payable to a third person to whom the property had been usufructuarily mortgaged and whose mortgage had two years more still to run. There was no defeasance clause on the grantor or vendor failing to pay by the fixed date. There was a power in the vendee to recover the sum named as the price of re-purchase. Moreover the price payable by the grantor on the re-purchase was not fixed but was subject to an account for the cost of a well and for repairs. The two deeds were executed within two hours of each other. They were registered together and the stamp papers bore consecutive numbers:

Held, that the documents really and substantially formed a single transaction and the conveyance was not intended as an absolute sale but only as a security for the money. [p. 757, col. 2; p. 758, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Court, North Arcot at Vellore, in O. S. No. 74 of 1920.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Narasimha Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—In this case the parties are Muhammadans. The plaintiff is the son of defendant No. 1 his mother. Defendant No. 2 is said to be the foster daughter's husband of defendant No. 1. The plaintiff came of age at the end of 1916. His mother and as he alleges, defendant No. 2 managad his properties during his minority. In O. S. No. 55 of 1911 on the file of the Sub-Court, North-Arcot, the plaintiff brought a suit against defendant No. 1 to recover the value of alienations improperly made by her of his property during his minority and got a decree for Rs. 3,885-14-0. On 19th July, 1908, defendant No. 1 executed to defendant No. 2 an ostensible sale-deed of her own properties (Ex. A) and on the same day a counter-agreement Ex. B for the re-purchase of these properties was executed between the same parties. On 27th November 1919, two days after the institution of the suit O. S. No. 55 of 1919 above referred to, defendant No. 1 executed another deed (Ex. G) in favour of defendant No. 2 whereby she purported to release to defendant No. 2 her right of purchase under Ex. B. The plaintiff seeks to have it declared (a) that defendant No. 1's right of redemption in her properties still subsists and, therefore, that it is liable to attachment to satisfy plaintiff's decree in O. S. No. 55 of 1919, in other words that Exs. A and B are in fact a mortgage by conditional sale and not a sale with an option of re-purchase and (b) that Ex. G is voidable and should be avoided under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Defendant No. 1 has been ex parte throughout.

The District Judge found that the transaction was not a mortgage but a sale with option of re-purchase and further that Ex G did not offend against the provisions of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. Hence this appeal by plaintiff.

The first question, therefore, for decision is whether Exs. A and B really evidence n intention to effect a mortgage by conlitional sale. Exhibit A was, as stated, xecuted on 19th July, 1908, and according o P. W. No. 1 at 9 A. M. in the morning. t purports to be an out-and-out sale the onsideration being Rs. 700 in cash and the ayment of Rs. 2,800 due on a prior possessory mortgage and promissory note in avour of one Ibrahim Sahib. There is no nention of Ex. B in Ex. A. Exhibit B said o have been executed at 11 A. M. on the ame day refers to Ex. A and stipulates hat at the end of any fasli before 30th June 1911, defendant No. 1 may re-purchase he property conveyed by Ex. A, on paying the said total sale price Rs. 3,500" "according to the followings particulars, he expenses incurred by digging and constructing new wells or by re pairs to be paid back. Defendant No. 1 was to bear the expenses of the deed of re-conveyance. The executant of Ex. B defendant No. 2 was out of possession of the properties purported to be transferred by Ex. A till 30th June 1910 the possessary mortgagee Ibrahim being in possession till then. He, therefore, stipulated that defendant No. 1 should pay him 12 per cent. on the Rs. 800 (or Rs. 700) said to have been advanced by himself. The expenses for wells and repairs were also to be ascertained and re-paid. Is this a mortgage or an outright sale with option of re-purchase? To begin with, the lands purport to be sold for Rs. 3,500. They are about 8 acres in extent. Plaintiff witness No. 1 (an attestor) declares that the lands are worth more than Rs. 3,500. Plaintiff witness No. 3 says that 10 or 12 years ago (he was giving evidence in 1922) the lands would be worth Rs. 800 (a cawni). He himself purchased adjoining lands at Rs. 800 a cawni and sold them for Rs. 1,450. Four of the $5\frac{1}{2}$ or 6 cawnies of the suit lands are "best". He purchased lands in 1912 for Rs. 520 to Rs 675 an acre. Objection is made that these transactions are not supported by documents whereas D. W. No. 2 purchased lands in the same village 2 acres (Ex. 5) at Rs. 485 an acre. He had, however, to build a new well at a cost of Rs. 300. The lands of defendant No. 1 have good irrigation. Defendant witness No. 3 purchased 1 acre 64 cents at Rs. 350 per acre (Ex. VI, 1906). On a consideration of the whole evidence, on this point, I have come to the conclusion that the value of the lands in question in 1908 was about Rs. 6,500; at all events, very much more than Rs. 3,500. This is a strong indication that a sale was not intended: Narasingerji Gyanagerji v. Panuganti Parthasaradhi (1). Again interest is payable on the Rs. 800. There is no evidence of bargaining over the sale price: see Narasingerji Gyanagerji v. Panuganti Parthasaradhi (1). It is said for the respondent that this was payable for two years only as defendant No. 2 was necessarily out of possession for this period that is, of course, assuming that payment had to be made by 30th June, 1910. If time was really of the essence of the contract, what was the need for Ex. G in 1919 nine years after the lands had passed according to respondents irrevocably into the possession of defendant No. 2? Further there is no defeasance clause on the grantor or vendor failing to pay by the fixed date. Again, the grantor or mortgagor (defendant No. 1) had to pay the costs of the re-conveyance; this is a sign of a mortgage, (cf. s. 60, Transfer of Property Act), whereby the mortgagor has a right to redeem on payment of the costs. Was there a power in the vendee, to recover the sum named as the price of re-purchase? I think there was.

"I undertake to execute a sale-deed in your favour according to your request (another sign of a mortgage (cf. s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act) at your expense within the said fixed time, on condition of your paying the sale price, interest and other expenses". Moreover the price payable by the grantor on the re-purchase was not fixed but was subject to an account for the cost of the well and repairs. In addition to these facts, we have the two deeds (Exs. A and B) executed within two hours of each other. They were registered together, the stamp papers bear consecutive numbers (cf. cross-examination of defendant No. 2 as D. W. No. 4). In my opinion these two documents really and substantially form a single transaction within the ruling in Palaniappan v. Subbaraya Gounden (2) for although Ex. A does not refer to Ex. B. Exhibit B does refer to Ex. A. The question is whether Exs. A and B taken together were intended as a security for money. I have no hesitation in holding they were. Some of the indicia of such a transaction are classically set out in Butler's Coke on Litleton cited in Bapuji Apaji v. Senavaraji Marvadi (3). The passage is as follows:—

(2) 22 Ind. Cas. 4; 1 L. W. 80; 14 M. L. T. 579; (1914) M. W. N. 222.

"In many of these cases the Courts have found it necessary, not only to apply their general principles, but to determine the fact, whether the conveyance was intended as an absolute sale, or as a security for the money. If the money paid by the grantee was not a fair price for the absolute purchase of the estate conveyed to him, if he was not let into the immediate possession of the estate; if, instead of receiving the rents for his own benefit, he accounted for them to the grantor, and only retained the amount of the interest; or, if the expense of preparing the deed of conveyance was borne by the grantor, each of these circumstances has been considered by the Courts as tending to prove that the conveyance was intended to be merely pignorititious".

With many of these particulars the plaint transactions agree and the passage fortifies my own opinion of them.

As my conclusion on the first point must be in favour of the appellant, it seems hardly necessary to discuss the second as to which the District Judge has given no reasons for his finding. Exhibit G does not purport to be a release of the equity of redemption. The words translated 'right of purchase' should, it is said, more properly be "the right belonging to me" I give up. In para. 10 of his written statement defendant No. 2 denies that defendant No. 1 had any right of redemption in the suit properties or that Ex. G parted with any such right. Defendant No. 2 as D. W. No. 4 says he took Ex. G from defendant No. 1 as the period fixed in Ex. B 1919 was over and he asked defendant No. 1 for the money he had lent her.

"He said she would file a suit. She said she had time to get back the lands and frightened me with threats of a suit."

This confirms the view taken of the transactions. The threatened suit could have been nothing but a suit for redemption. Defendant No. 1 said "she had time". If the property had become the defendant No. 2's on 30th June, 1910, this was of course absurd in 1919. Defendant No. 1 does not come forward to say that it was the equity of redemption she parted with by Ex. G. Defendant No. 2 admits that nothing was paid under Ex. G the consideration for which was the amount previously paid to defendant No. 1 by defendant No. 2 under the promissory note referred to in the document. The witness to this promissory-note transaction was admittedly alive and was not called. The promissory note is not forthcoming and no reasons for the borrowing are alleged. It is said to have been delivered up to defendant No. 1 when Ex. G was executed. If it was in existence, it could have been produced though defendant No. 1 was ex parte. No reference is made in the written statement of defendant No. 2 to the promissory note but in para. 10, defendant No. 2 says he advanced defendant No. 1 money for maintenance. This he in cross-examination admits to be untrue. He says, he had no knowledge of the institution of the Suit No. 55 of 1919. No summons had been served on him at the date of Ex. G. This is by no means conclusive as to defendant No. 2's knowledge.

An effort was made to show that there was no collusion between defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 but I am not satisfied as to this. In O. S. No. 55 of 1919 it is true defendant No. 1 was ex parte. Plaintiff withdrew the suit against defendant No. 2 with liberty to bring another. He was apparently not then in a position to prove that defendant No. 2 had anything to do with the alienation of his (plaintiff's) properties. Defendant No. 2 admits that defendant No. 1 is the widow of his wife's maternal uncle. I think that under the circumstances in which Ex. G came to be executed, as far as appears from the document and from the evidence, it was a collusive and fictitious document got up between defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 for the purpose of attempting to place the property of defendant No. 1 beyond the reach of plaintiff in his execution proceedings. In my opinion it falls within the mischief of s. 53, Transfer of Property Act, and should be set aside.

The result is that the appeal is allowed with costs throughout and a decree will be passed for plaintiff as prayed.

Spencer, J.—I agree.

In a suit for possession by a mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage, a mortgagor endeavouring to get the mortgage set aside cannot be given a decree for redemption without a suit to that effect on his plea that in the event of mortgage being held to be good against him he should be permitted to redeem it.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 3rd February 1925.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghose, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Bhawani Din executed on the 2nd August, 1919, a deed of mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents. Under the terms of this deed, if he did not make a certain payment by the 2nd of September 1924, the plaintiffs respondents became entitled to the possession of the mortgaged property. He did not make this payment and the plaintiffs-respondents sued for possession. Bhawani Din was permitted to take many pleas in this suit which he should not have been allowed to take. Amongst other pleas he set up that he had sons and grandsons who, with him, were members of a joint Hindu family and that they should be made parties to the suit. They were made parties to the suit. Then various unnecessary points were gone into as to antecedent debts and the like. All that the Court had to find was whether Bhawani Din, owing to the circumstances that he had, as alleged, broken his contract, was under an obligation to give possession of the land in question to the plaintiffs-respondents. The lower Court found that he had contracted to make a certain payment which he had not made and in consequence was obliged to give possession of the land. It was both undesirable and unnecessary to go into the question as to how the accounts should be made up in the event of a suit for redemption. The Trial Judge rightly refused to decide that matter as a whole, although he, somewhat unfortunately, expressed his views as to the extent to which the deed bound the sons and grandsons of Bhawani Din who had not been originally parties to the suit, but the decree was a good decree as it simply awarded possession. We do not propose to interfere with the decree, but we wish to make it clear at the outset that this judgment should not operate in any way in the event of a suit being filed for redemption when the whole matter should come up again as res integra.

We now come to the main point, which was argued before us on appeal. Bhawani Din, while denying all liability under the mortgage and endeavouring to get the mortgage set aside, concluded his written statement with a plea that in the event of the mortgage being held to be good against him he should be permitted to redeem it in the suit for possession. His sons and grandsons ask for a similar indulgence. The late Judicial Commissioner's Court invariably refused to permit a defendant to obtain a decree for redemption in a suit of this nature. That has been laid down in many decisions. We know of no authority of any other Court, in which such a privilege was extended to a defendant in a suit for possession. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohammad Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal (1) affords no authority in support of the proposition for which the learned Counsel for the appellants contends. There the mortgagee had been decreed possession over the mortgaged land. Subsequently the mortgagor sued for redemption in a separate suit. His prayer to redeem was rejected. Before he could be permitted to redeem, the possession of the mortgagee would have necessarily had to be set aside, and for this reason, and this reason only, their Lordships of the Privy Council consolidated the two appeals, and decided them both by a decision that the mortgagor should be permitted to redeem; but they nowhere countenanced the suggestion that where no suit for redemption had been brought, a mortgagor should be given a decree to redeem in a suit, where he was sued for possession which he had wrongfully refused to give to the mortgagee under the terms of the deed. If we adopt the course which the learned Counsel for the appellants would have us adopt we should be going against the practice of the previous Judicial Commissioner's Court—a practice which has been recognised and understood in Oudh for more than 50 years. Unless we are shown very strong reasons to support our departing from the former practice we shall not be justified in making the departure. On considering the point we are of opinion that to adopt the practice suggested will do considerably more harm than good. The mortgagor in this instance and his sons and grandsons will be in no way prejudiced by being directed, as we direct them, if they wish to redeem, to institute a suit for the purpose.

CIVIL REVISION APPLICATION No. 105 OF 1925.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874), s. 10—Collector's refusal to grant certificate—Revision.

Assuming that it has power to do so, the High Court will not interfere in revision with the order of Collector refusing to grant a certificate under s. 10, Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, where there is no violent misuse of authority, obvious bad faith, or reckless disregard or wanton perversion of the law on his part. [p. 760, col. 2; p. 761, col. 1.]

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C.J.—The petitioner's father in this case mortgaged the kulkarni and Deshpande watan lands to the opponent under two mortgage-deeds, dated June 10, 1913, and August 6, 1914, respectively, the former by himself and as guardian of his minor sons including the petitioner, and the latter by himself alone, for cash consideration. The petitioner's father then instituted Suit No. 33 of 1920 in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge, Athni, against the opponent for accounts and redemption of the two mortgages under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The Subordinate Judge allowed redemption and passed an order that the plaintiff should continue to remain in possession of mortgaged land; that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant Rs. 2,210 and defendant's costs in this suit with interest on Rs. 1,460 from the date of suit till the date of realisation on or before June 8, 1921; and that on failure to pay to the defendant as stated above, defendant should apply to the Court for recovery of the sum by sale of sufficient portion of the mortgaged property.

The opponent in pursuance of the aforesaid decree filed a Darkhast No. 489 in the Civil Court at Athni and got the aforesaid watan property attached for sale. While the execution proceedings were thus going on the petitioner's father, the original mortgagor, died, and the petitioner, the son of the deceased mortgagor, applied to the District Deputy Collector for issuing a certificate under s. 10 of the Watan Act stating that the property attached for sale was, watan, and, therefore, inalienable, in order to enable the Court in which execution proceedings were pending to remove the attachment and any other process then pending against the watan or any part thereof. The District Deputy Collector made the following order on this application:—

"In the circumstances reported by the mamlatdar the Prant does not think it necessary to issue a certificate under s. 10 of the Watan Act. The applicant should be informed accordingly. If the lands are purchased by strangers the applicant may apply."

The petitioner now asks this Court to set aside this order and pass an order for issue of the certificate or such other order or orders as the Court may think proper.

In Collector of Thana v. Bhaskar Mahadev Sheth (1) the Court held that the Collector when granting a certificate, under s. 10 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874), exercises a judicial function, and is subject to the supervision of the High Court: but the High Court will not interfere with his discretion, unless there is violent misuse of authority, obvious bad faith, or reckless disregard or wanton perversion of the law on his part. In that case the Collector had issued a certificate under s. 10 of the Watan Act, and the application to the High Court was to set aside the grant of a certificate issued by the Collector.

(1) 8 B. 264; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 550.

In this case the Collector refused to issue a certificate, but it is very doubtful to my mind whether the High Court could, under s. 115 of the C. P. C., order the Collector to issue a certificate or set aside a certificate once granted. But I do not think that that question need be pursued in this case, as there is no necessity to interfere with the order made by the Collector refusing to grant a certificate, as it certainly, using the words of the case I have just cited, "was not made in violent misuse of authority, obvious bad faith, or reckless disregard, or wanton perversion of the law" on the part of the Collector. It would only be, if such conduct were proved, that this Court could possibly interfere with an order made by the Collector on an application under s. 10 of the Watan Act. Section 10 states that :—

"When it shall appear to the Collector that by virtue of, or in execution of, a decree or order of any British Court any watan or any part thereof, or any of the profits thereof recorded as such in the revenue records or registered under this Act, and assigned under s. 23 of this Act as remuneration of an officiator, has or have, after the date of this Act coming into force, passed or may pass without the sanction of Government into the ownership or beneficial possession of any person other than the officiator for the time being; or that any such watan, or any part thereof, or any of the profits thereof, not so assigned has or have so passed into the ownership or beneficial possession of any person not a watandar of the same watan, the Court shall, on receipt of a certificate under the hand and seal of the Collector, stating that the property to which the decree or order relates is a watan, or part of watan, or that such property constitutes the profits or part of the profits of a watan, or is assigned as the remuneration of an officiator and is, therefore, inalienable, remove any attachment or other process then pending against the said watan, or any part thereof, or any of the profits thereof, and set aside any sale or order of sale or transfer thereof, and shall cancel the decree or order complained of so far as it concerns the said watan or any part thereof or any of the profits thereof."

We are only concerned in this case with watan property which may not pass into the ownership of a person who is not a watandar of the same watan. What was in the mind of the Collector when he made his order was that a watandar of the same watan might purchase the property which would be permissible under the Act. If on the contrary, it was purchased by a stranger, then the applicant might apply for a certificate, and on the issue of that certificate the Court would set aside the sale.

We cannot, therefore, interfere with the decision of the Collector which was made in the exercise of his discretion. The Rule will be discharged with costs.

Coyajee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I share the doubts expressed by my Lord the Chief Justice, but assuming that we had the power of revision in a case of this nature, it is clear this is not a case for our interference under s. 115 of the C. P. C.

Custom—Alienation—Alienation by widow—Suit for declaration by reversioners—Consent by father, whether binds son.

An assent given by a reversioner to an alienation by a widow of her late husband's property is not binding on the sons of such reversioner when the consent given is not bona fide.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 9th July 1925, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 21st June 1924.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Appellants.
Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are jat

agriculturists, and the question for determination in this second appeal is whether the assent given by Bhagat Singh to the mortgage by the widow Premi of her late husband's property is binding on his (Bhagat Singh's) sons—the plaintiffs who are minors, and debars them from maintaining the present suit for a declaration that the mortgage is inoperative as against their reversionary rights. The Courts below have answered this question in the negative and the plaintiffs' suit has been decreed. The facts are briefly as below:—

Musammat Premi at first mortgaged only a portion of her late husband's land for Rs. 600 and Bhagat Singh, the nearest reversioner of her husband, obtained a declaratory decree that the mortgage was valid to the extent of Rs. 200 only. Subsequently the widow mortgaged to the same mortgagee, namely, Sundar Singh, 67 kanals and 15 marlas of land with the consent of Bhagat Singh and his two adult sons and they expressed their consent by associating their names with that of Musammat Premi as mortgagors, so that the mortgage was executed by all four. The mortgage money Rs. 8,600 was made up of (1) Rs. 7,000 left in the hands of the mortgagee for payment to former mortgagees Jhanda Singh and Bir Singh.

(2) Rs. 1,000 paid cash.

(3) Rs. 600 due to the mortgagee on the prior mortgage referred to above.

As regards item No. (1) it is alleged that only Rs. 1,350 out of it had been paid, and the mortgagee offers to pay the balance. But the payment of even Rs. 1,350 was not proved nor was there anything on the record to show that Rs. 7,000 was really payable by the widow or Bhagat Singh to the mortgagees mentioned in the deed, namely, Jhanda Singh and Bir Singh. Bir Singh was not put in the witness-box at all and Jhanda Singh when examined by the defendant Sundar Singh deposed that Sundar Singh made no payment to him.

The large amount of item No. (2) was not paid before the Sub-Registrar nor was a receipt taken for it and the Courts below found that this item as well as item No. (1) was fictitious. In view of the evidence on the record this finding appears to be unassailable. Thus the alienation being devoid of consideration it follows that the assent given to it was not given bona fide.

Counsel for the appellants contends that the suit was collusive. But this was never pleaded in the Courts below. He further contends that the mortgage should have been declared valid to the extent of Rs. 200 in respect of the third item. But there is already a declaration on this point and no further declaration is necessary.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs' suit has been rightly decreed and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Goods consigned to Railway for carriage under Risk Note Form "B"—Non-delivery—Damages, suit for—Loss, proof of—Burden of proof—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 22—Suit against Railway—Defendant described as "Agent of the Railway"—Misdescription—Amendment—Limitation.

In a suit to recover damages for non-delivery of goods consigned to a Railway Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B", the burden of proving that the case falls within the exception contained in the Risk Note viz., that the goods were lost owing to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or wilful neglect of its servants etc., is upon the plaintiff. But before the plaintiff is called upon to prove that the goods were lost by wilful neglect or by theft, it must be shown that the goods have been lost. It is for the Railway Administration to prove in the first instance that the goods have been lost, and it will be then for the plaintiff to show that the loss was due to the wilful neglect of, or theft by, Railway servants. [p. 763, col. 2.]

Except in cases where the plaintiff admits that the goods have been lost, a Railway Company is not entitled to rely upon the provisions of the Risk Note which pro tanto exempt it from liability unless and until evidence has been adduced which satisfies the Court that a loss has occurred, and the loss must be a loss of the goods by the Railway and not merely a loss to the consignor. [p. 764, col. 1.]

In a suit for damages for non-delivery of goods consigned to the East Indian Railway for carriage, the defendant was described as "Agent, East Indian Railway." The Railway Company entered appearance, put in a written statement and fought out the case and it was only in the Appellate Court that objection was taken to the description of the defendant:

Held, that as the case had been fought out on the merits by the Railway Company it was only a case of misdescription which could be rectified by a formal amendment and that, as no new defendant would be added or substituted by the amendment, the provisions of s. 22 of the Limitation Act had no application to the case. [p. 765, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Howrah, dated the 9th June 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court at Howrah, dated the 27th April 1921.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover Rs. 703-10 as compensation for goods consigned by the plaintiff's agent for carriage by Railway which were not delivered to the plaintiff.

It appears that 13 tins of ghee and one tin of mustard oil, in 7 packages were consigned by the plaintiff's agent at Shahgunj a Station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to the plaintiff at Howrah. Only one package (containing 1 tin of ghee and 1 tin of mustard oil) arrived at Howrah and the plaintiff was asked to take delivery thereof on giving a full acquittance receipt which he refused to do. The other 6 complete packages did not arrive at Howrah at all and were not delivered to the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon served a notice under s. 77 of the Indian Railways Act upon the defendants and brought the suit for compensation.

The Court of first instance allowed the claim in part. The Court of Appeal below dismissed the claim altogether. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Under s. 72 of the Railways Act the responsibility of a Railway Administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of goods delivered to the Administration to be carried by Railway subject to the other provisions of the Act is that of a bailee under ss. 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, but that responsibility may be limited by an agreement in writing signed by or on behalf of the sender of the goods in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council. The goods in the present case were sent under the Risk Note Form "B" which is approved by the Governor-General in Council. The Risk Note Form "B" states that the consignors, in consideration of a lower charge than the ordinary tariff rate chargeable for the consignment, agree to hold the "Railway Administration and all other Railway Administrations working in connexion therewith, etc., harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment from any cause whatever except for the loss of or damage to the said consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration, to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them before during and after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connexion therewith, or by any other transport agency or agencies employed by them respectively for the carriage of the whole or any part of the said consignment: provided the term wilful neglect be not held to include fire, robbery from running train or any other unforeseen event or accident".

As stated above, 6 complete packages were not delivered at all, and the seventh package was tendered but the plaintiff was asked to give a full acquittance receipt. The defence pleaded non-liability under the Risk Note Form "B." The Court of Appeal below held that the burden of proving that the case falls within the exception contained in the Risk Note, viz., that the goods were lost owing to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or wilful neglect of its servants, etc, is upon the plaintiff. That having regard to the authorities must be held to be so. But before the plaintiff is called upon to prove that the goods were lost by wilful neglect or by theft, it must be shown that the goods have been lost. Unless that initial fact is proved, viz., that the goods have been lost, we do not see how the plaintiff can be required to prove how the loss occurred.

The goods were made over to the Railway for carriage, and they have not been delivered to the consignee. How is the consignor or the consignee to know whether they have been lost. We think that it is for the Railway Administration to prove in the first instance that the goods have been lost, and it will be then for the plaintiff to show that the loss was due to the wilful neglect of or theft by Railway servants. That also must in almost every case be impossible for the plaintiff to prove, but that is what he undertakes to do under the Risk Note, at any rate the decided cases hold that it is for him to prove it.

In the recent case of the East Indian Railway Co. v. Jagpat Singh (1) Page, J., considered the question exhaustively and came to the conclusion that except in cases where the plaintiff admits that the goods have been lost, a Railway Company is not entitled to rely upon the provisions of the Risk Note which pro tanto exempt it from liability unless and until evidence has been adduced which satisfied the Court that a loss has occurred.

It is contended that that was a case of non-delivery as regards which no issue was raised in the present case. But the present case was also one of non-delivery. It is true, the learned Subordinate Judge refers to the suit as being one for recovery of goods lost in transit. Evidently he misunderstood the plaintiff's case for which the plaintiff was not responsible. The plaintiff's case (as appears from the plaint and even from the statement of the case in the judgment of the Trial Court) was that the goods were not delivered to him. The third issue, viz., "Are the plaintiffs entitled to the amount of damages claimed or any portion thereof" was wide enough, and must be taken to have been framed with reference to the plaintiff's case as stated in the plaint which was one for non-delivery. Then it is said that in the notice under s. 77 the plaintiff admitted the loss of the goods. But we do not find any such admission. The notice was merely in terms of the section which provides for compensation for "the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods."

We do not think, therefore, that there was any admission on the part of the plaintiffs that the goods were lost by the Railway.

It is contended, however, that "loss" means loss to the consignor and not loss of the goods by the Railway, in other words "non-delivery" of goods is "loss" of goods to the party. But if so, there would have been no necessity for the words, "loss destruction or deterioration" in the Risk Note Form "B." A non-delivery may be due to loss of the goods, but may be due to other causes, and it is possible to conceive of cases where goods have not been lost but not delivered. For instance 1 tin of ghee may be mixed up with thousand others in the Railway godown, and no proper search has been made for finding it out. It is unnecessary to consider whether a temporary loss is a loss within the meaning of the section, because in the present case there is not only no evidence that the goods have been lost or what became of them, but there is no suggestion of any temporary loss of the goods in the manner referred to above.

It is contended that the judgment of Page, J., is opposed to that of Smith v. G. W. Railway Co. (2). But in that case the loss of the goods was admitted by the plaintiff although the Railway Company did not offer any explanation as to how the goods were lost, and it was held that the refusal of the defendants to account for the loss of the goods was not evidence which justified the Court in inferring that the loss arose from the wilful misconduct of the defendants' servants.

In the case of the East Indian Railway Company v. Jagpat Singh (1) Page, J., has referred to a number of decisions as supporting his view as to the meaning of the expression "loss" and has considered the cases in which a contrary view was taken. We entirely agree with the learned Judge with regard to the meaning of the expression "loss".

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that the suit is not brought against proper parties, the defendants being described as "Agent, East Indian Railway" and "Agent, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. Reference is made to the cases of Ram Dass Sein v. Mr. Cecil Stephenson (3), Nubeen Chunder Paul v. Mr. Cecil Stephenson (4), Agent, Bengal Nagpur Railway v. Behari Lal Dutt (5) and East Indian Railway Company v. Ram Lakhan Ram (6).

In the first case the defendants were "Mr. Cecil Stephenson Deputy Agent of the East Indian Railway Company and Mr. W. B. Latimer, District Engineer of Rajmehal and Birbhum". Obviously there was no cause of action against Mr. Cecil Stephenson, Deputy Agent and Mr. Latimer, District Engineer, and they could not represent the Railway Company. In the second also the suit was against Mr. Cecil Stephenson, Agent of the Railway Company. In the third, the defendant was described as Agent, Bengal Nagpur Railway and it was held that the plaint could not be allowed to be amended as it was not a case of misdescription, but the substitution of one party for another who had been wrongly sued and the suit would have been barred by limitation at the date of the amendment. In the fourth, where a suit was instituted against "The Agent, East Indian Railway" it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled after the period of limitation for the suit had expired to amend the plaint by substituting the Railway Company for the defendant originally sued.

On the other hand in the case of Saraspur Manufacturing Company v. B.B. & C.I. Railway Company (7) where the defendant was described as the Agent of the Railway Company and the defendant Company appeared and filed a written statement raising various pleas in defence the Court held that it was a case of misdescription and allowed amendment. It is to be noted that in the case of Agent, Bengal Nagpur Railway v. Behari Lal Dutt(5) Suhrawardy, J., observed that on the facts of the above case he might hold the same opinion.

In the present case it is true the East Indian Railway in the written statement pleaded that the plaintiff had no cause of action nor any right to sue the defendant, but no specific objection was taken by the defendant, on the ground that the proper party had not been sued, and the Railway Company entered appearance, put in written statement and fought out the case. The question of the proper party not being sued is not ever referred to in the judgment of the Trial Court. The Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway pleaded that it being a Railway owned and worked by the Government, the Secretary of State should have been sued. But the Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway did not prefer any appeal against the decree of the Trial Court, and it was only the East Indian Railway which appealed and it cannot be said that the defence of the two Railways on this point was the same. There is no question of prejudice to the Company as it knew well the claim made against it and considered itself the party sued. The present case is stronger than the Bombay case, as in the present, no specific objection was taken in the Trial Court on the ground that the East Indian Railway had not been sued. We think that it is a case of misdescription which can be rectified by a formal amendment as the case has been fought out on the merits by the Railway Companies. By the amendment no new defendant would be added or substituted so as to attract the provisions of s. 22 of the Limitation Act. The appellant has put in a petition for amendment and we allow the amendment.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. Each party will bear his own costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They ask for an adjudication of their title to and confirmation of possession over I bigha, 9 kathas, of land situate in Mouza Yusufpatti, Pargana Morwah Khurd, bearing Tauzi Nos. 4388 and 4390,

They also seek to recover Rs. 173-8-0 as the price of sugarcane raised on the disputed land, and an injunction restraining the defendants first party from paying the price of the sugarcane to the defendants second party. The disputed land is a part of a holding consisting of 6 bighas, 9 kathas, and 1 dhur. The holding belonged to the defendants second party and one Abdhu Singh. It was sold in an execution sale and was purchased in the name of plaintiff No. 1, Parshan Sahi, on the 19th May, 1896, (vide sale certificate, Ex. M, which shows the area sold to be 3 bighas and not 6 bighas as claimed by the plaintiffs). The plaintiffs base their title upon this auction-purchase and upon a compromise said to have been filed subsequently in Suit No. 360 of 1918 whereby the defendants and Abdhu Singh relinquished their claim to the land. The plaintiffs say that in spite of the said compromise, the defendants brought a Small Cause Court suit against the defendants first party and obtained a decree for the price of the sugarcane which was supplied by the plaintiffs to the defendants first party who now refuse to give the price of the sugarcane to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs base their cause of action upon this refusal and on account of resistance of the possession by the defendants. Defendants second party, on the other hand, contend that at the auction-sale they purchased the property in the farzi name of the plaintiff No. 1 who is their close relation and that the alleged compromise is fraudulent, void and inoperative and that they and not the plaintiffs are entitled to the price of the sugarcane. The defendants first party have no objection to the payment of the price of the sugarcane to the party who may be held by the Court to be entitled to receive the same. The real contest is, therefore, between the plaintiffs and the defendants second party, and several issues were raised in the Trial Court. The only important issues tried in the lower Appellate Court are:

(1) Have the plaintiffs got any title to the disputed land? and

(2) Is the compromise decree binding on the defendants?

The Courts below have concurrently held that the plaintiffs have failed to prove their title to the land in dispute, and that in spite of the purchase being in the name of the plaintiff No. 1, the defendants continued to be in possession of the property. They have further held that the auction-purchase was only farzi; that the real purchasers were the defendants second party in the name of their close relation, Parshan Sahi whose father, Ramdihal was the maternal uncle of Ramdhari, defendant No. 5 and that Abdhu Singh is a full brother of Ramdhari. The lower Appellate Court has further held that neither any dakhaldehani was taken out by the plaintiffs nor any chalan for payment of the purchase-money has been produced and though the sale took place prior to 1896 and the finally published Record of Rights in 1897, yet the name of Parshan was not substituted therein. Similarly the batwara papers of 1915 contained the name of Awadh Singh in respect of several plots including plots Nos. 12 and 24 which are the disputed ones. His name also appears in Exs. E. J and J (a). In the criminal case (Ex. N) defendant No. 5 was found to be in possession. It has not been shown before me that the finding of the Court below as to the purchase being farzi in the name of plaintiff No. 1 and the continuity of the possession by the defendants over the property in spite of the sale is in any way vitiated by the Court in not having taken into consideration any relevant evidence on the record. The finding of the Court below that the plaintiff did not acquire any title by the auction-purchase of 1896 in the name of plaintiff No. 1, is a finding of fact and not open to challenge in second appeal. As to the compromise (Ex. 4) the Court below in concurrence with the Trial Court has come to the conclusion that it was a fraudulent one. The compromise petition was filed in a suit (No. 360 of 1919) after the aforesaid criminal case was upheld. Under this compromise, Ramdhari, defendant No. 5, and Abdhu relinquished all claims to the entire land. The compromise, as stated therein, was to be given effect to by executing a registered deed. No registered deed was, however, executed. The compromise petition has not been legally proved and defendant No. 6 who is son of defendant No. 5, is no party to it. The Court below has held that it has not been proved that the defendants had any knowledge of the terms of the compromise petition. The finding of the Court below that the compromise petition is fraudulent and inoperative is again a finding of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal.

The learned Advocate on behalf of the appellants has, however, urged that the compromise has become final and is not open to challenge by the defendants in this suit. In support of this contention he has referred to the case of Kailash Chandra Poddar v. Gopal Chandra Poddar (1). In that case, after the compromise was filed in a suit and decree prepared in accordance therewith, one of the plaintiffs applied to the Court for a review of the decree and to set aside the compromise and his application was based upon the allegation that he had not consented to the compromise. The review petition was dismissed by the Trial Court. Subsequently a suit was brought by another plaintiff along with the plaintiff who had applied for the review of the judgment. The ground of attack to the compromise taken in the suit was the same as in the review petition, viz., that the plaintiffs had given no consent to the compromise. It was further suggested that there was fraud. The alleged fraud was, however, negatived and the only ground of relief was the absence of consent. It was held that the dismissal of the petition of review was a bar to the subsequent suit contesting the validity of the compromise filed in the previous suit. It seems to me that the aforesaid case was decided upon the principle of res judicata inasmuch as the review matter and the subsequent suit were founded upon the same ground, viz., the absence of the consent to the compromise in question. The parties and the subject-matter of the relief sought were the same in both the proceedings in the suit and the review. The matter in controversy in the review proceeding and in the suit was decided and the relief sought was refused and the Court which dealt with the review-matter was competent to deal with the suit. All the conditions embodied in s. 11 of the C. P. C. were fully satisfied. The learned Advocate on behalf of the appellant, however, contends, that the principle of the aforesaid case would apply to the present case inasmuch as the defendants had challenged the compromise decree in an application made by them under s. 151 of the C. P. C., and their petition was rejected. There is no substance in this contention. The application under s. 151 was not an application which the defendants could, as a matter of right, press. It simply invoked the inherent power of the Court. In the next place the matter was not gone into in the Court below and the application under s. 151 was dismissed summarily upon the ground stated by the Munsif that he could not, under the provision of s. 151, give the defendants the relief which they sought. There was no decision as to whether the compromise was fraudulent or not in the miscellaneous application of the defendants under s. 151 of the C. P. C. and no res judicata can apply to a matter left undecided. The defendants in the present case stand on a firmer ground. They attack the compromise upon the ground of fraud. The learned Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, in the case referred to above, clearly stated that in the review question the allegation of fraud was negatived. In the present case the ground of fraud urged to impugn the validity of compromise by the Court below has heen upheld. The case will, therefore, be governed by the principle laid down by this Court in the case of Ram Ratan Singh v. Khub Lal Gope, (2). The defendants were quite competent to take the plea of fraud in order to avoid the compromise and fraud having been once established, the compromise is void and cannot stand.

The result is that the decision of the Court below is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decree, dated the 14th March, 1922, of the High Court at Madras, which was made in its Appellate Civil Jurisdiction and varied a decree, dated the 20th October, 1920, of a Judge of the same Court, which was made in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court.

The appeal arises in a suit which was instituted with the leave of the High Court on the 3rd February, 1919, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court by the plaintiffs, who live in the city of Madras, to obtain a decree against Les Tanneries Lyonnaises and their agent Monsieur, J. Marret for money alleged to be due to the plaintiffs under a contract for the sale and delivery of goat skins under a contract of the 25th May, 1917, and under a contract of the 26th January, 1918, for the sale and delivery of sheep skins. There was another defendant to the suit named, C. Sowrimuthoorya Oodayar, against whom no relief was claimed. The suit was tried and the decree of the Trial Judge was made in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court. The French Company carries on business at Oullins, near Lyons in France. Marret and Oodayar live at Pondicherry. The contract of the 25th May, 1917, was made by Marret as the agent of the French Company with the plaintiffs in the city of Madras, and the money which might become due under it was payable at a Bank in the city of Madras. The contract of the 26th January, 1918, was made by Marret at Pondicherry, and the money which might become due under it was payable to the plaintiffs at the Bank in the city of Madras. The Trial Judge made, on the 29th October, 1920, a decree for Rs. 1,76,242-0-5, with interest thereon and for costs against the French Company, and by his decree dismissed the suit against Marret and Oodayar but decreed that Marret should pay to the plaintiffs taxed costs and interest thereon. The plaintiffs did not appeal to the High Court against the decree of the Trial Judge dismissing the suit against Marret. They had obtained a decree against the French Company for their entire claim, and with that they were then content. As appears by the record, the French Company and Marret jointly appealed to the High Court against the decrees which had been made against them. On that appeal the High Court found that the French Company was not liable to pay anything in respect of the claim under the contract of the 26th January, 1918 and by its decree modified the decree against them made in respect of their liability under the contract of the 25th May, 1917, with certain costs, and dismissed the suit againt Marret and Oodayar. Against that decree of the High Court this appeal by the plaintiffs has been brought.

In the High Court Marret on behalf of the French Company and himself had filed a joint written statement. In this appeal for the first time the French Company and Marret are represented by different Counsel instructed by separate firms of Solicitors. Those learned Counsel raised preliminary objections to the appeal, the consideration of which their Lordships decided should stand over until the arguments on the appeal had been heard. Their Lordships will now state what those preliminary objections were and what is their decision on them. Each of the learned Counsel contended that the suit was not within the cognizance of the High Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction. The learned Counsel for Marret further contended that this appeal to His Majesty in Council is, in effect, an appeal against the decree of the Trial Judge dismissing the suit as against Marret, from which decree the plaintiffs had not appealed, and that such an appeal was not allowed by the C. P. C., 1908, or by the Letters Patent of the High Court. As to the objection that the suit was not within the cognizance of the High Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction, their Lordships find that the contract of the 25th May 1917 was made in the city of Madras, and it was agreed that the money payable under that contract should be paid in the city of Madras, and that it was agreed that the money payable under the contract of the 26th January, 1918, should be paid in the city of Madras, and further find that the High Court, under its Letters Patent, gave leave to the plaintiffs to bring the suit in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, and consequently hold that the suit was within the cognizance of the High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, and disallow that objection. As to the objection especially raised by the learned Counsel for Marret, that as the plaintiffs had not appealed, against the decree of the Trial Judge dismissing the suit, excepting as to costs, against Marret no appeal lay against him, their Lordships have been referred to the C. P. C., O. XLI, r. 33, Ganga Dhar Muradi v. Banabashi Padihari (1) and Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (2). Their Lordships think that this appeal to His Majesty in Council, in so far as Marret is concerned, is, in effect, an appeal direct to His Majesty in Council from the decree of the Trial Judge, which is not allowable under the C. P. C., 1908, or under the Letters Patent of the High Court and they hold that the C. P. C., 1908, O. XLI, r. 33, was not intended to apply to such an appeal, and they accordingly decide that the appeal so far as Marret is concerned, should be dismissed, but without costs.

Their Lordships will now consider the appeal so far as it relates to the French Company alone. The contract for goat skins of the 25th May, 1917, was made with the plaintiffs by Marret as the agent of the French Company, and it is now admitted in this appeal by the learned Counsel for the French Company that Marret, in making with the plaintiffs the contract of the 26th January, 1918, for sheep skins, was the agent of the French Company if he represented that he was making it as their agent.

The appeal involves the consideration of some complicated questions of fact. Before referring to the facts now admitted or proved at the trial or in the appeal to the High Court, the pleadings filed in the suit will, so far as they are material, be mentioned, and an affidavit of documents made by Marret will be referred to, and then their Lordships will state who the parties to the suit were, and briefly what was the business which each of the parties carried on, as these are matters which appear to their Lordships to be more or less material in the consideration of the appeal.

The plaintiffs, alleging in their plaint that Marret was the agent of the French Company in making with them the contracts already mentioned of the 25th May, 1917, for goat skins and of the 26th January, 1918, for sheep skins and in purchasing the goat skins and the sheep skins from the plaintiffs, claimed a decree against the French Company and Marret, or either of them for Rs. 1,70,000, and, if necessary, that a decree should be made for such sum as might be found to be due, together with interest at 7 per cent. after the dates of the respective deliveries of the skins at Pondicherry, and for costs, and for such other relief as the nature of the case might require.

No written statement in answer to the suit, under circumstances which will be later mentioned, was filed by Oodayar. The French Company and Marret jointly filed a written statement, by which they submitted that the leave to sue them in the High Court ought not to have been granted and should be revoked, and in which they admitted that the contract of the 25th May, 1917 for goat skins was entered into by the plaintiffs and the French Company through Marret as their agent; and alleged that Oodayar was a partner of the plaintiffs and in effect alleged that the moneys payable to the plaintiffs under that contract were paid either to the plaintiffs or to Oodayar as a partner of the plaintiffs, and that nothing was due to the plaintiffs. As to the claim under the contract of the 26th January, 1918, for sheep skins, the French Company and Marret in their joint written statement alleged that the French Company was not a party to that contract and was not concerned in it, and that it was a contract made by Marret on his own behalf and not as an agent with the plaintiffs, to whom it was alleged that the sheep skins never did belong and had never been purchased by the plaintiffs or on their behalf, and had been bought and paid for by Marret with his own money. As later appeared, what was pleaded in the joint written statement meant that Marret had purchased the sheep skins from Oodayar and had paid Oodayar for them, and that nothing was due to the plaintiffs in respect of the sheep skins.

Marret was examined as a witness in the suit before the Trial Judge. His credibility as a witness is one of the serious issues in the case. His examination began on the 7th October 1920. When cross-examined he stated that he had been an agent of the French Company for nine or ten years and had first begun as their agent at Pondicherry when he made the contract for the goat skins in May 1917. He also admitted in cross-examination that he told the French Company from time to time how many skins he sent to them and that he had sent to them invoices of the skins and that he used to write letters on carbon paper to the French Company in France saying how many skins were being despatched to them according to the invoices and he supposed that the French Company received those letters. Marret on 5th March 1920 signed and swore an affidavit of documents in this suit in which not one of those letters or invoices is mentioned. His explanation was that the affidavit was prepared and forwarded to him at Calcutta where he happened to be, and that he swore the affidavit of documents without noticing that it did not mention any of those letters or invoices. That is an explanation which their Lordships find it impossible to believe. Any competent and respectable Counsel, Vakil, Solicitor or other lawyer must, in order to prepare that affidavit of documents, as part of his duty have asked Marret if he had written to his principals in France any letters informing them of the skins which he was shipping at Pondicherry to them and sending them invoices of the skins. The French Company must have received those letters and invoices as they remitted to the Bank at Madras from time to time money to pay for the skins. Marret must have made and kept copies of those letters and invoices, but neither they nor any copy of them is mentioned in the affidavit of documents. But on what information or lack of information the person who prepared that affidavit acted in preparing it their Lordships do not know. Whoever prepared it, it was a misleading and dishonest affidavit. And Marret admitted, when cross-examined, that he had read through the affidavit before he signed it and that the letters which he had written to the French Company, and had not been disclosed in it, would show the amount of skins which he was advising his principals in France, the French Company, had been shipped. He also swore that the words "Account books relating to this suit transaction," in the first schedule to the affidavit, were not in the affidavit when he swore it, but he did not suggest by whom they had been added. When that affidavit was filed in Court it may have been intended that Marret should produce at the trial some account books in support of his case. That affidavit of documents was not the only matter as to which the evidence which Marret gave in his cross-examination was in the opinion of their Lordships unsatisfactory.

It is now advisable to state who the parties to the suit were and what business they respectively or in partnership carried on. The plaintiffs are two merchants at Madras and carry on business at Madras and at Pondicherry under their firm name of Mahomed Khaleel Shirazi and Sons. Part of the business of this Shirazi firm is the purchasing at Pondicherry and in various districts of India of skins of goats, sheep and of other animals, the curing of such skins and the sale and exporting of them when cured. The elder plaintiff had carried on before 1917 a business at Pondicherry of purchasing and selling skins. The plaintiffs purchasad a tannery at Pondicherry in 1917, and at Pondicherry they sold and exported skins on their own account. The plaintiffs in 1917 extended their business of tanning skins at Pondicherry by taking some tanning pits near a tannery which Oodayar had there. The plaintiffs employed Oodayar to manage their tannery at Pondicherry, his remuneration being a one-sixth share of the net profits of the turnover in that business, but Oodayar had no authority to receive money due to the plaintiffs for skins sold by the plaintiffs on their own account. The French Company carried on business at Oullins, near Lyons, in France. It is admitted that part of the business carried on by the French Company was the purchasing of goat skins in India by Marret as their agent for delivery when cured to the Government of France for the use of French troops in the war which began in August, 1914. Marret on his own separate behalf was an exporter of cured skins from India. Marret had his skins cured by a process which is described as "half-tanning" or "pickling" them, which made the skins lighter and smaller in volume and easier for shipment and more valuable. Whether he had invented that method of curing skins their Lordships do not know, but it was known and described as his process. He alleged that he held a patent for that method of curing skins, but the attention of their Lordships has not been called to any evidence that he had a patent for curing skins which was in force in British India or in French India or elsewhere. Marret and Oodayar agreed to carry on at Pondicherry a partnership business for five years from the 1st July, 1917, for the curing at Oodayar's tannery by Marret's process or other processes which Marret should find useful of goat skins, sheep skins and heifer skins for export to Japan, each to share equally in the profits. The plaintiffs did not know of the partnership between Marret and Oodayar until Marret mentioned it in giving evidence at the trial. The document of partnership was not disclosed until this suit was in appeal before the High Court.

Oodayar was not bound to devote his whole time to the business of the plaintiffs, and he and Marret were entitled to carry on that business in partnership without informing the plaintiffs of the fact; but whether it was wise or prudent under the circumstances of their connection in business with the plaintiffs to leave the plaintiffs in ignorance of their being partners in a skin-curing and exporting business is another matter. That secret partnership placed Oodayar in a conflicting position, and had much to do with the difficulties in which the plaintiffs were involved in their suit. In their Lordships' opinion the Trial Judge rightly came to the conclusion on the evidence that Marret and Oodayar had acted in collusion against the plaintiffs. Oodayar carried on a separate business on his own account at Pondicherry as a tanner.

Their Lordships do not know what books of account, if any, Oodayar kept. Presumably, as a business man, he would keep books of account in which he would enter the accounts of the tannery which he managed for the plaintiffs, the accounts of his own separate business, and the accounts of his partnership with Marret. Their Lordships do not know how business is carried on at Pondicherry, but they conceive that the plaintiffs would have been entitled to examine such accounts, if any, of their tannery business as Oodayar kept. The senior partner in the plaintiffs' firm was not called as a witness, but his son, Abdul Hussain Khaleel, the other plaintiff swore that those books of account had not been examined by him or by his father. The plaintiffs were very seldom at Pondicherry, and when they were there their time seems to have been otherwise employed than in examining accounts. They appear to have had more confidence in Oodayar than he deserved. As has been mentioned, Oodayar was a defendant in this suit, and no relief was claimed against him. He did not file a written statement. After the time had expired within which Oodayar was entitled as of right to file a written statement, he applied to the High Court for leave to file one. That application was opposed by the lawyer acting at Madras for the French Company and Marret, and was dismissed. Oodayar did not appear as a witness in this suit and no application for an order for discovery by Oodayar was made or applied for. After all the skins to which this suit relates had been delivered, and after the plaintiffs had demanded to be paid for them, Marret sent to the plaintiffs what he alleged was a copy of an account received by him from Oodyar. The evidence of Oodayar was available. He was not, however, examined as a witness at the trial, nor was his evidence taken on commission. That copy is Ex. Q, which appears to have been much relied upon by the Judges in appeal. That alleged copy of an alleged account was not evidence of transactions which it purported to represent, nor did the plaintiffs admit that it correctly represented transactions between themselves and Marret or transactions between themselves and Oodayar or between Marret and Oodayar. The plaintiffs, however, put it in evidence as an alleged copy of an alleged account which Marret had sent to them after disputes as to the liabilities of the French Company and Marret to the plaintiffs had arisen.

Before considering separately the contracts of the 25th May, 1917, and the 26th January, 1918, their Lordships will state, so far as it is necessary to do so in this suit, what is the law in India as well as in England with regard to payments of debts to a person who, as in this suit, is alleged by a debtor to have had the creditor's authority to receive them on his behalf. It is elementary law that when a creditor sues the debtor for the payment of a debt and the defence is that the debtor paid the debt to another person, it is for the debtor to prove that the other person had, or had been held out to the debtor by the creditor as having had the authority of the creditor to receive payment of the debt on behalf of the creditor.

In the joint written statement which, according to the record, the French Company and Marret filed, it was alleged that payments had been made to Oodayar as a partner of the plaintiffs. It was proved at the trial that Oodayar was not a partner of the plaintiffs in either of the contracts with which this suit is concerned. That defence was abandoned and it was alleged by Marret in his evidence, as their Lordships understood his evidence, that Oodayar had been authorised by the plaintiffs to receive the payments on their behalf and later that Oodayar had been held out by plaintiffs to him as having their authority to receive them. That authority and the alleged holding out of it is not admitted and is denied by the plaintiffs, and in their Lordships' opinion there is no reliable evidence that Oodayar ever had or had been held out as having any such authority.

Their Lordships will now consider the case as to the goat skins, and will then consider the case as to the sheep skins. The claim in respect of the goat skins arises, as has been mentioned, under a contract made on the 25th May, 1917, between the plaintiffs and the French Company through their agent Marret. That contract was made at Madras and is contained in the following two letters:—

"Madras,
25th May, 1917,

Les Tanneries Lyonnaises, Societe Anonyme, ad capital de 9,764,000 francs.

Messrs. Mahomed Khaleel Shirazi & Sons, Madras.

Dear Sirs,

With reference to our interview, we beg to confirm you herewith the conditions by which we came to a conclusion.

The raw goat skins of different places mentioned by us, will be purchased by you, on our account and deliver to us in Pondicherry

On account of buying and financing, we agree to pay you a commission of 10 per cent. (10%) on the said purchases.

Our monthly purchases may be of about thirty thousand (30,000) skins more or less, if no objections interfere with it.

Such business to begin with, on the 1st June, 1917, to finish on the 31st December, 1917, and to be continued by mutual consent.

The skins will be purchased with our consent concerning the prices and the qualities.

During the above stated period the goods-purchased will be our property.

The said skins are to be treated by our process in your tannery in Pondicherry, under our supervision and according to our instructions.

The charges for the curing, according to the above-stated process, will be Rupees seventeen and-a-half per hundred ordinary goat skins (Rs. 17-8 0).

All expenses of the tannery and for the curing, according to the said process to be borne by you.

For the cost of the goods and the costs of curing, a credit will be opened in sterling in a Bank of Calcutta, Bombay, Madras at your choice.

Such credit to be transferred to your account as soon as the goods are received by us in Pondicherry.

Exchange of the drafts, brokerage and covering expenses done with our consent will be borne by us.

If, from the time the raw goat skins are delivered in Pondicherry, the time exceed two months, an interest of 7 per cent. per annum (7%) will be charged to us.

The delivery of the goods to be done to us after due payment.

If during the way the goods going to Pondicherry, there be any Railway or Government restrictions, we will not hold you responsible for it.

We have no objections for your tanning sheep skins in the tannery as long as it does not interfere with our work.

Please confirm textually the above agreed conditions.

Yours faithfully,
Per Pro Tanneries Lyonnaises,
(Signed) J. MARRET.

14. The delivery of the goods to you after the due payment.

15. We cannot stand responsible for transmitting goods to Pondicherry, if there be any restriction by Railway or by any prohibition by Government. We can tan our sheep skins in our tannery at Pondicherry provided there would be no disturbance to your work.

Yours faithfully,
MOHAMED KHALEEL SHIRAZI & SONS."

"Our process", mentioned in Marret's letter, and "your process" mentioned in the plaintiffs' letter were the process of half-tanning for which Marret alleges that he had obtained a patent. The clauses, unnumbered in Marret's letter but numbered 10 and 11 in the plaintiffs' letter, mean, as their Lordships construe them, that the French Company should secure that the payments would be duly made by opening an account in sterling at one or other of the Banks in India mentioned and that the payments should be made to the plaintiffs by cheques or orders in their favour signed by Marret. The Bank which was chosen for that purpose was a Bank in Madras. Under that contract the plaintiffs delivered to the French Company at Pondicherry the goat skins in respect of which this suit has been brought. There is no dispute as to the quantities of goat skins which were delivered under the contract. The French Company paid through Marret direct to the plaintiffs considerable sums under the contract of the 25th May, 1917, leaving a balance due by them to the plaintiffs under that contract of the 25th May, 1917, as correctly found by the Trial Judge, of Rs. 81,737-0-9 and as incorrectly found by the High Court in the appeal of Rs. 25,824-14-2. The difference between the sums of Rs. 81,737-0-9 and Rs. 25,824-1-2 is explained by the facts that the Trial Judge believed the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiffs by Abdul Hussain Khaleel, one of the plaintiffs, and did not believe the evidence given by Marret, while the High Court in appeal believed the evidence given by Marret and did not believe the evidence of Abdul Hussain Khaleel, and drew incorrect inferences from entries in Ex. Q. The difference between the sums of Rs. 81,737-0-9 and Rs. 25,824-14-2 represents sums of money which on behalf of the French Company Marret alleged were paid to Oodayar, the receipt of which by the plaintiffs is not admitted and is not proved.

Abdul Hussain Khaleel and Marret were examined, and each was cross-examined at great length before the Trial Judge, and their Lordships, having carefully read the evidence which each of them gave, are satisfied that the evidence which was given by Abdul Hussain Khaleel may be trusted as truthful evidence, and that the evidence which was given by Marret cannot be regarded as truthful. That was obviously the view which the learned Trial Judge took of their evidence. Their Lordships find that the balance which was due by the French Company to the plaintiffs under the contract of the 25th May, 1917, for goat skins was Rs. 81,737-0-9, as found by the Trial Judge.

What may have led the High Court in the appeal to think that Oodayar had the authority of the plaintiffs to receive payments from Marret on behalf of the plaintiffs was a transaction of August, 1917, which briefly was as follows:—It will be remembered that under the contract of the 25th May, 1917, the French Company was not entitled to have delivery of any of the goat skins at Pondicherry until the contract price of them had been paid to the plaintiffs. In August, 1917, there were goat skins ready to be delivered to the French Company at Pondicherry, the contract price of which was in Rs. 10,800. Marret as the agent of the French Company was anxious to ship them to France without any delay, but there was not then in the Bank at Madras a balance upon which Marret could draw a cheque in favour of the plaintiffs, and he induced Oodayar to let him have delivery of the skins for the French Company by giving to Oodayar his own cheque for Rs. 10,800, to be re-paid to him when £2,000 should have been paid to the plaintiffs on behalf of the French Company. On the 28th August, 1917, Oodayar from Pondicherry wrote to the plaintiffs at Madras informing them that "Mr. Marret had deposited with me Rs. 10,800 to be paid to him after the second remittance of 2,000 pounds credited in your account." In reply to that letter on the 29th August 1917, the plaintiffs from Madras wrote to Oodayar at Pondicherry as follows:—"We have noted that Mr. Marret has deposited Rs. 10,800 with you. You may spend those, and when £2,000 are received by us, we can send the money from here to be paid to Mr. Marret. Please do not draw upon us any further." The £2,000 was apparently credited to the plaintiffs' account on or by the 2nd September, 1917, as on that day Oodayar wrote to the plaintiffs: "As the second 2,000 pounds (is) credited to your account, Mr. Marret wants that 10,000 and odd rupees to pay freight for his goods, so please send the same to-morrow." On the 3rd September, 1917, the plaintiffs in reply wrote to Oodayar: "On hearing about the credit of £2,000 Mr. Marret wants his Rs. 10,000 and odd deposited with you. We have, therefore, herein enclosed a sum of Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand) half-notes, the receipt of which kindly acknowledge." In their Lordships' opinion no businessman having the contract of the 25th May, 1917, and those facts before him, could come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had held out to Marret that Oodayar had the authority of the plaintiffs to receive payments on their account, and their Lordships find that the plaintiffs never did hold Oodayar out as having their authority to receive payments on their behalf. There was another similar transaction, but it would not alter their Lordships' opinion that the plaintiffs had never held Oodayar out to Marret as having their authority to receive payments on their account. Whether Oodayar ever re-paid to Marret any of the sums which Marret had advanced to him in order to get deliveries of skins their Lordships do not know. It is possible that they were applied by Marret and Oodayar in buying skins for their own business of curing and exporting skins, which began on the 1st July, 1917.

Their Lordships will now consider the contract of the 26th January, 1918, as to sheep skins. As introductory to that subject they will explain how that contract came to be made. It appears from a letter written by Oodayar to the plaintiffs on the 14th August, 1917, that Oodayar had been half-tanning sheep skins for the plaintiffs by Marret's process. These sheep skins were exported to Japan. There was at that time a prospect of securing a larger order for skins to be shipped to America. Marret had objected to his process being used except for goat skins required for the contract of the 25th May, 1917, and Oodayar in the letter of the 14th August, 1917, informed the plaintiffs that Marret would allow the process to be used on receiving a commission of 2-annas a skin, and that it would be advisable to agree with Marret to give him a commission of 1-anna for each goat and sheep skin half-tanned by his process. In that letter of the 14th August, 1917, Oodayar said:—

"I have written out my opinion, you may think over the matter and do as you please. Now I am half tanning on a small scale. But he is not fully aware of the same. I have been telling him that I am doing only 100 or 50 hides. If the thing is done on a large scale, he will come to know it somehow. He will give us trouble later on."

In reply to that letter the plaintiffs wrote to Oodayar on the 19th August, 1917, a letter in which the following passages occur:—

"I have received the letter written by you on the 14th and note the contents. In perusing it we find that you have written about very great matters. You have written that the gentleman (Marret) objects to the making of half-tan sheep (skins) and that the patent has been registered for sheep and goat (skins) and all. It can never be done. He can register only his mark. How can he register in respect of other goods? I simply wrote to you that we could do the work in secret without letting the other Lubbais (tanners) know...............In a small tannery, sheep half tan may be done. There is no fear. There need not be any fear that it is done without his knowledge."

Further correspondence between the plaintiffs and Oodayar took place on the subject of half-tanning sheep skins without the knowledge of Marret, Oodayar urging that an arrangement should be made with Marret to give him a commission on sheep skins half-tanned by his process, and the plaintiffs instructing Oodayar to use the process more extensively in half-tanning sheep skins for them to export to Japan.

It appears that about November, 1917, Marret saw some letters in Oodayar's office from which he ascertained that his process was being used in half tanning skins, and at some time between November, 1917, and the 26th January, 1918, Marret had induced Oodayar to hand over to him the shipping documents relating to a large consignment of skins which had been shipped and were then in transit to Japan on behalf of the plaintiffs, to whom they belonged. On the 26th January, 1918, there was an angry interview at Pondicherry between the plaintiffs and Marret about his process having been used in half-tanning sheep skins, and it was arranged that Marret should hand over to the plaintiffs those shipping documents belonging to the plaintiffs which Marret had obtained from Oodayar. With them this Board is not concerned, and it was agreed between the plaintiffs and Marret as and representing himself to be the agent of the French Company that the contract of the 25th May, 1917, should be extended so as to include sheep skins and other skins, and the following two letters in the handwriting of Marret were exchanged between them:—

"Pondicherry,

Dear Sirs,

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this day concerning the skins shipped to Japan, will instruct this day our Bankers to transfer or credit your account of all sums referred in the shipment of the following skins, made to Mr. M. A. Raza, Yokohama.

	Yens.
25 bales, 10,000 sheep skins (19,042 lbs.)	7·500
20 bales 6,000 dry goat (9,900 lbs.)	5·579
40 bales, 12,000 dry sheep skins (23,620 lbs.)	9.240

All pickled skins shipped to Japan, remaining my property.

Yours faithfully,
J. Marret."

Mr. Justice Phillips, who tried the suit, was rightly of opinion that if Marret made the contract of the 26th January, 1918, as the agent of the French Company the words "remaining my property" must be taken as meaning the property of his principals the French Company. It appears from the correspondence that Marret frequently referred to himself as meaning the French Company. Marret when cross-examined admitted that they had the same meaning as in the contract of the 25th May, 1917.

Mr. Justice Phillips found that the contract of the 26th January, 1918, was made between the plaintiffs and Marret as the agent of the French Company as a continuation of the contract of the 25th May, 1917, and their Lordships agree with that finding. He also correctly found that the price of the sheep skins at Rs. 45 per 100 skins with 10 per cent. commission and Rs. 17-8-0 per 100 skins for tanning charges amounted to Rs. 67,326, adding that Rs. 67,326 to the Rs. 81,737-0-9 with interest on those sums at 7 per cent. he, on 20th October, 1920, gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 1,76,242-0-5 with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from that date to the date of realization. Mr. Justice Phillips dismissed the suit as against Marret and Oodayar, but decreed that the French Company and Marret should pay to the plaintiffs the costs of the suit when taxed with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of taxation to the date of realization. On the 25th August, 1921, the plaintiffs' costs of the suit were taxed at Rs. 4,082-4 0.

Marret's defence to the sheep skins' claim was that the sheep skins belonged to Oodayar and that the plaintiffs had no interest in them. That in the opinion of their Lordships was an untrue defence, and rightly failed. But the finding of the High Court in Appeal was, as their Lordships understand it, that the plaintiffs had made a present to Marret of the sheep skins in question in the suit. That view their Lordships cannot accept. By the sale of those sheep skins in Japan, Marret, when cross-examined, admitted that he had made a profit of one lakh of rupees. It is not now disputed that the plaintiffs had paid the dealers in skins for those sheep skins.

As their Lordships have said, they cannot regard Marret's evidence as truthful. Mr. Justice Phillips did not consider that Marret's evidence could be relied upon. How the High Court in appeal came to a different conclusion their Lordships do not understand. They will now quote briefly from the judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, from which Mr. Justice Ramesam did not dissent, a passage in that judgment which shows what a high opinion Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter entertained of the reliability of Marret as a witness. It may be observed that Mr. Justice Phillips saw Marret when he was being examined and cross-examined and the High Court in appeal had not that advantage. Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter said in his Judgment: "I now come to the sheep skins and M. Marret's threats against the plaintiffs for infringing his process in respect of them. It seems from the arbitration account to be quite clear that these skins were in fact collected from the dealers and supplied by the plaintiffs. It is not in the least clear that M. Marret knew that at the material time. His evidence, I think, amounts to this: When he found himself confronted by a claim in respect of sheep skins which were not touched by the contract he took up an alternative attitude, 'Either these sheep skins do not belong to you, or if they belonged to you as you now say they formed no part of our contract and you had no business whatever to use my special process in treating them without my permission.' I see no reason why he should not take that line, and I do not think that his threats about infringement in any way militate against the view that he honestly believed that the plaintiffs had no concern with these goods whatever. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs' case with regard to the sheep skins entirely fails.

Finally, with regard to the 85 bales of mixed dried sheep and goat skins. Though I think that M. Marret had no right whatever to take possession of the documents of title in regard to them, I am not prepared to reject his explanation that he believed however wrongly at the time, that the plaintiffs were endeavouring to divert to other markets goods which ought to have been delivered to him and that he took possession of them in order to strengthen his position in enforcing his claim in respect of the sheep skins. It was, no doubt, an arbitrary and high-handed action, but I see nothing whatever to lead me to suppose that it was a consciously dishonest one." In their Lordships' opinion it was a dishonest action, as Marret must well have known. He could not have believed that he was entitled to the shipping documents which belonged to the plaintiffs.

Their Lordships think that in fairness to the French Company they should state what the French Company allege was the position in which that Company found itself after this appeal to His Majesty in Council had been presented. The French Company say that they were first informed by the Solicitors in London appearing for Marret that this appeal had been presented, and as their Lordships understand the French Company's statement that Company had previously no knowledge that a suit against them and Marret had been brought. The French Company say that the proceedings in the suit in Madras were defended by Marret without the knowledge or consent of the French Company, and that on receiving that information from Marret's London Solicitors that this appeal had been presented, the French Company was advised that they should be separately represented in this appeal, and instructed their London agents that their case in the appeal should be settled and lodged with all due expedition. If facts could have been proved which would have justified application to amend the decree no such application was made.

There is one other question raised by the appellants in this appeal. It relates to the admission in evidence by the Court of Appeal of documents which were not in evidence before the Trial Judge. The High Court as a Court of Appeal in this suit had under s. 107 of the C. P. C., 1908, power to take additional evidence. In their Lordships' opinion it is a power which should be exercised by a Court of Appeal with much caution and only in suits where it is satisfied that in the interests of justice it should be exercised, and that such additional evidence when admitted will be evidence which, if produced at the trial, would have been admissible. The additional evidence admission of which is complained of on behalf of the appellants, however much it may have affected the judgments in the Court of Appeal, has not affected the judgment of their Lordships in the slightest degree.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal, so far as it relates to Les Tanneries Lyonnaises, should be allowed, and the decree of the High Court in appeal should be set aside against both respondents, with costs payable by Les Tanneries Lyonnaises, and the decree of Mr. Justice Phillips should be restored and affirmed, and that the appeal, so far as it relates to Monsieur J. Marret, should, save as aforesaid, be dismissed without costs. The respondents, Les Tanneries Lyonnaises, should pay to the appellants their costs in the High Court and in this appeal.

Application against an order of the Subordinate Judge at Nandurbar, in Suit No. 132 of 1924.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is an application under s. 115 of the Code, asking the Court to revise an order passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Nandurbar, in Suit No. 132 of 1923. After several adjournments, the hearing was fixed for December 15, 1924, on which date the plaintiff-opponent presented an application to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the grounds that the plaint was not explicit; that the averments about fraud were not clear, and that there was no explicit assertion that the sale-deed was in the nature of a mortgage; that though there was a prayer for accounts and instalments, proper stamp had not been paid and there was no issue about mortgage; and that, therefore, the suit was likely to be dismissed because the pleadings were vague and insufficient.

The applicants-defendants raised several objections to the withdrawal of the suit being allowed, viz., the plaintiff had already once amended the plaint but never claimed redemption; that though the plaintiff had alleged before the mamlatdar that the sale was a mortgage, he had in the suit averred only fraud; that several adjournments had already been granted to the plaintiff; that the hearing had actually commenced, documents had been produced by the defendants and one witness had already been examined for the defendants; that the plaintiff's suit was not going to fail on a technical point; that the suit had been filed on April 7, 1923, more than a year before the application, but in spite of defendants' objection the Court allowed plaintiff to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

Under O. XXIII, r. 1 (2), where the Court is satisfied (a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or (b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim, it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit or abandon such part of a claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit or such part of a claim.

The question is whether the words "other sufficient grounds" give the Court a wide discretion to decide whether it should give permission to a plaintiff to withdraw from his suit, or whether those words must be read with a restrictive meaning, so that any other ground set forward by a plaintiff must be analogous to a formal defect, before the Court can give the plaintiff leave to withdraw.

In Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (1) Sanderson, C. J., referring to the words, viz., "that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw from the suit", in s. 373 of the Code of 1882, which was the section applicable to the case before the Court, said (page 372*):—

"But there are decisions of this Court which, in my opinion, are binding upon us. It is quite true they are not upon the same section, but they are upon O. XXIII, r. 1 of the C. P. C. which is now in operation, but the learned Vakil, who argued the case for the appellant, admitted that there is no substantial difference between this Rule and s. 373 of the old Code. In the first case, Kharda Co. Ltd. v. Durga Charan Chandra (2), it was held by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee that cls. (a) and (b) of sub-r. (2) have to be read together and that the intention is that a ground included in clause (b) must be of the same nature as the ground specified in cl. (a), that is to say, it must be something of the same nature as formal defect, and, inasmuch as in that case the ground for allowing the suit to be started afresh was not because there was a formal defect but for some other reason, the order was illegal. Then again the learned Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Mabulla Sardar v. Hemangini Debi (3) says: 'The decision in Kharda Co. Ltd. v. Durga Charan Chandra (2) shows that cl. (b) of sub-r. (2) must be read in connection with cl. (a) and with the limitations cl. (a) suggests, and so reading it, it is clear that it is not within the jurisdiction of a Court of Appeal to grant the permission on the terms which have been approved by the Court in this case.'"

With due respect, we agree that the construction put upon O. XXIII, r. 1, by these decisions is correct. It is certainly undesirable that so wide a construction should be placed on O. XXIII, r. 1, that a plaintiff, if he thinks that he is not likely to succeed in his suit owing to insufficient evidence, or for some other reason of that character, may be allowed to withdraw his suit, with leave to bring another suit, thus leaving the question in dispute still open between himself and his opponent.

In Mahipati Shamla v. Nathu Vithoba (4) Scott, C. J., says (page 726)†:—

"It is impossible to lay down any exhaustive definition of what are sufficient grounds within the meaning of s. 373 but I think that the Court should not allow a suit to be withdrawn after the parties are ready for trial if such withdrawal may operate to the prejudice of the defendant."

With due respect, that leaves open the door to a considerable amount of discussion whether in any particular case the defendant would or would not be injured by the leave being given. It seems to me far more advisable to place a restrictive meaning on the words "other sufficient grounds," since O. XXIII, r. 1, grants a concession in favour of a plaintiff, and such a concession should not be extended further than is necessary.

We may also refer to O. XLVII, r. 1, which deals with the powers of a Court to grant a review of a decree or order, since the similar phrase "or for any other sufficient reason" appearing therein has by the Privy Council been construed in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (5) to mean that a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified in the rule must be shown.

The Rule will be made absolute in this case and the order of the lower Court set aside with costs.

Coyajee, J.—I agree.

Messrs. Hyder Husain and R. N. Kauli, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal in a suit for possession. One Syed Ahmad Sharif, the plaintiff, brought a suit in the Court of Munsif, Sitapur, for possession of a house No. 970 situate in Mohalla Bangla of Sitapur town, against the defendant Mirza Umrao Beg on the ground that the defendant was his tenant at a monthly rental of Rs. 4, that the plaintiff gave the defendant a registered notice in January, 1924, asking him either to vacate the house or failing that to pay a monthly rental at Rs. 15 and that he having neither vacated the house nor paid the rent, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession of the house as well as Rs. 121-8-0 for arrears of rent. The sum claimed as arrears was at the rate of Rs. 4 per month up to 31st January 1924 and at the rate of Rs. 15 per mensem from the 1st February 1924 the date of giving notice to 15th August 1924, the date of suit.

The defendant alleged in his written statement that relations between his father, Mirza Qudratullah Beg and the plaintiff's father, Hakim Mohammad Sharif, were very intimate and that when the house in suit had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father to the Mahmudabad estate, his father lived in the house with the permission of the estate, being a servant of the estate. He contended that in the year 1906 after the death of his father, the plaintiff's father borrowed a sum of Rs. 400 from him and redeemed the house from the said estate and having done so made a gift of the same to him, after which date the defendant had remained continually in adverse proprietary possession of the said house.

It is not necessary for me to refer to various other allegations made in the oral pleadings because they are not relevant for the purpose of deciding this appeal.

The learned Munsif of Sitapur, who tried the case, held that the house belonged to the plaintiff, that he had on behalf of his father redeemed it from the Mahmudabad estate, and that the defendant had been living in the said house as his tenant originally at a rental of Rs. 4 per mensem and later on in the same capacity but subject to the liabilty of paying rent at the rate of Rs. 15 a month. On these findings he decreed the plaintiff's claim as brought.

In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Sitapur took a different view. He accepted the defendant's appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has now come up to this Court in second appeal and the main contention put forward on behalf of the appellant is that the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge should not be considered as binding on this Court inasmuch as he has ignored the pleadings of the parties in the case in arriving at a decision of the case in appeal.

I have carefully gone through the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge and it appears to me that the contention put forward by the learned Pleader for the appellant is well-founded. It is not necessary for me to take up all the points in detail but it is sufficient to state that in the written statement filed by the defendant it was admitted by him that the house in suit had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father, Mohammad Sharif, to the Mahmudabad estate and that the defendant's father was living in the same being the servant of the said estate. On this state of pleadings it was not necessary for the learned Subordinate Judge to go into the question of mortgage or to declare that the defendant's possession of the house was not permissive but adverse. Under these circumstances, I am compelled to hold that the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge, which have been arrived at on a mistaken view of the pleadings, cannot be considered to be binding on this Court in second appeal. The learned Counsel for the respondent has frankly admitted that this is the correct view.

There are two courses open to me, either to send the case back to the Court below for fresh findings or to arrive at them myself under s. 102 of the C. P. C. (Act V of 1908); inasmuch as the material on the record is sufficient to come to proper findings in the case. I have chosen to take the latter course.

I now proceed to give my own findings on the three most important points in the case which are as under:—

(1). Whether the plaintiff is the owner of the house in suit?

(2) Whether the plaintiff's father after redeeming the house in suit from the Mahmudabad estate, let it to the defendant on a monthly rent of Rs. 4?

(3) Whether the plaintiff's father had, after getting the house redeemed from the Mahmudabad estate, made an oral gift of it in favour of the defendant.

Regarding the first point it appears to me to be clear beyond dispute, whatever view of the pleadings might be taken, that the plaintiff is now the owner of the house. If the house originally belonged to his father, Mohammad Sharif, it would after his death be inherited by the plaintiff as the only heir of his father. If the house be considered to be the property of his mother under a deed of gift which is alleged to have been executed in her favour by the plaintiff's father, then after her death one-fourth share in that house would be inherited by the plaintiff's father and three-fourths by the plaintiff himself and the said one-fourth inherited by his father would after his death again be inherited by the plaintiff himself. In either view of the case, therefore, the plaintiff is now the full owner of the house. I, therefore, find accordingly.

Regarding the second point that the house was let on rent by the plaintiff's father to the defendant after redemption in 1906, I am of opinion that the story as deposed to by the plaintiff himself in his evidence and supported by the other witnesses, has not been established in view of the fact that the plaintiff did not produce any documentary evidence in support of it. It is clear from the evidence on the record that the plaintiff and his agent have been keeping accounts of the income of the property in possession of the plaintiff, yet it is surprising to find that no account books have been produced to show that any rent was realized in respect of the said house by the plaintiff from the defendant. My finding, therefore, is to the effect that it is not established that the defendant took the house on rent at Rs. 4 per mensem from the plaintiff's father in the year 1906.

Regarding the third point, namely, the oral gift alleged by the defendant, I am of opinion that the said gift has not been established. The defendant himself went into the witness-box to give evidence in support of the alleged gift, but he being an interested person much reliance cannot be placed on his statement. The second witness examined in support of the alleged gift was one Imam Beg. This man is also an interested person because he says that he is a step-brother of the defendant. His statement in examination-in-chief is significant. At first he stated that the plaintiff's father had borrowed money from the defendant to redeem the mortgage and soon after the redemption the plaintiff said to the defendant "You may live in this house, I give it to you." Soon after he changed his statement and said that the plaintiff said to the defendant "I gift it to you, it is yours." He, therefore, gave two contradictory versions and the obvious meaning which I place upon his earlier statement is that the plaintiff, after redemption, allowed the defendant to live in the house in suit. I am not prepared to carry the evidence of this person further than this. The witness is a man of no substance; he pays no income-tax. At first he said that he was doing the business of a contractor but later on said that he had given up that business altogether. He stated that his income was only Rs. 15 a month. In my opinion the witness is a man of no substance and being a relation of the defendent was asked to depose about a story which was untrue. The third witness examined in the case was one Gauhar Khan. He is an unsummoned witness and apparently a man of no means. At first he said that the defendant had gone to live in the house with the permission of Hakim Sahib (plaintiff's father). Soon after he changed his statement and said that no permission had been given in his presence. Then when the witness was pressed very hard by the defendant's Pleader and many questions had been put to him he stated that the house had been gifted away by Hakim Saheb (plaintiff's father) to the defendant (Umrao Mirza). I am not prepared to place any reliance on his statement. The last witness examined by the defendant in support of the alleged oral gift was a man called Manawwar Khan. The man according to his own admission is a gambler and was challaned by the Police. He does not live upon his own earnings but is supported by his sons. The evidence of this man appears to me to be manufactured for the occasion. I am not prepared to place any reliance upon this witness also. All these witnesses were also disbelieved by the Trial Court which heard them, and I am in entire agreement with its view of the evidence. The story of the alleged oral gift also appears to me to be most improbable. It is said that the plaintiff on behalf of his father had borrowed a sum of Rs. 400 from the defendant and redeemed the property with the money so borrowed, and after redemption the house in suit was gifted straight off by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant. I fail to understand why if the object of the plaintiff or his father was to make a gift of the property in suit which was held in mortgage by the Mahmudabad estate they should have gone out of their way to borrow the money from the defendant to redeem the house from the Mahmudabad estate and then to make a gift of it in his favour. The easiest course would have been to make a gift of the equity of redemption in favour of the defendant or to execute a sale-deed of the said property in his favour giving him option to redeem the property from the said estate. I am, therefore, convinced that the story of the alleged oral gift has been manufactured by the defendant for the purpose of this case.

It, however, appears to me to be clear from the evidence produced by the defendant himself that he came to live in the house with the permission of the plaintiff or his father, (vide statement of Gauhar Khan—page 35).

The position, therefore, appears to me to be this: The house in suit belonged to the plaintiff's father and was held by the Mahmudabad estate in mortgage. Money was borrowed by the plaintiff's father to pay off that mortgage. The money was paid and the mortgage was redeemed. The plaintiff or the plaintiff's father allowed the defendant, from whom the money had been borrowed, to live in the house without payment of any rent. The defendant has continued since that time to live in that house.

I am, therefore, led to consider what should be the decision in a case where the facts, as stated above, have been proved. Where the plaintiff's title to the property claimed has been established and also that the defendant has been in occupation of that property by permission of the plaintiff, the plaintiff would, in my opinion, be entitled to a decree for possession in spite of the fact that he may have failed to establish the contract of tenancy set up by him as the basis of his claim. I am supported in this view by a decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Abdul Ghani v. Babni (1). In this case the plaintiff had come to Court alleging that the defendant had hired a house from him at a monthly rent of one rupee but had failed to pay the rent and that he had given the defendant notice to quit the house. The plaintiff claimed possession and damages but not arrears of rent. The defendant denied the tenancy alleged by the plaintiff and asserted that she had been in adverse possession for a period of more than 12 years. She asserted that she had purchased the land upon which the house stood and had herself built the house. The findings in the case were that the plaintiff was the owner of the house, that the defendant occupied the house as a friend with the permission of the plaintiff and that the defendant had never before asserted her title to the house. It was held that upon the facts found the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession notwithstanding that his case was that the defendant was his tenant. The facts of this case are similar to those of the present one. It was strenuously contended on behalf of the defendant-respondent that his possession was not permissive. I cannot, however, accede to that contention. The fact alleged by the defendant in his written statement that he was a servant of the Mahmudabad estate and was living in that house with the permission of the estate and also the fact that the plaintiff's father made a gift of the house in his favour, clearly show that the possession of the defendant was in its inception of a permissive character, and I have already stated above that this was also the evidence given by one of the defendant's witnesses. It is, therefore, clear that the possession of the defendant in its inception was of a permissive nature. Under these circumstances the principle of law that possession prima facie may be considered adverse, cannot apply to the facts of the present case. In my opinion the plaintiff's title to the house in suit having been established beyond any doubt and the defendant's possession having been proved to be of a permissive character, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession of his house.

I, therefore, allow the plaintiff's appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, and pass a decree for ejectment in favour of the plaintiff, in respect of the house claimed by him. One month's time is allowed to the defendant for vacating the house from this date. The plaintiff's claim for arrears of rent will stand dismissed. In my opinion both the plaintiff and the defendant set up false stories in support of their respective cases, and bearing that consideration in mind it appears to me to be fair and proper that I should order that the parties bear their own costs in this Court and in both the Courts below, and I order accordingly.

Vendor and purchaser—Sale of immoveable property—Earnest-money—Breach of contract by purchaser—Earnest-money, whether can be recovered.

Under a contract of sale of immoveable property the earnest-money is part of the purchase price when the transaction goes forward: it is forfeited when the transaction falls through, by reason of the fault or failure of the vendee.

Plaintiff agreed to purchase certain immoveable property from the defendant at the price of Rs. 4,76,000 and one of the conditions of the contract was that Rs. 20,000 was to be paid as earnest and the balance in two moieties, the first being payable on executing the conveyance and the last within six months thereof. Plaintiff did not pay the earnest-money as such but obtained a financial modification of the terms of the contract whereunder he paid the sum of Rs. 1,65,000 towards the sale price of Rs. 4,76,000. The plaintiff was subsequently unable to complete the contract even in its modified form and brought a suit to recover the part of the sale price paid by him:

Held, that the plaintiff having broken his contract must lose the earnest-money, viz., Rs. 20,000 but must be re-paid Rs. 1,45,000 the balance of his payment to account.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Allahabad High Court reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge's Court, Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., and B. Dube, for the Appellant.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and J. M. Parikh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Shaw.—The main appeal has reference to a contract of sale of the Markham Grant Estate belonging to the defendant Jyotish Sarup. The contract was entered into with the plaintiff-appellant. The High Court, reversing the judgment of the Subordinate Judge held that there was a complete contract of sale. In the opinion of the Board the High Court, in this particular, as in the others after mentioned, was right.

One of the terms of this contract of sale was as follows:—28th July, 1914, from defendant to the plaintiff:—

"Willing on old terms, namely, earnest twenty thousand balance in two moieties, first payable on executing conveyance, last within six months net cash we receive Rs. 4,76,000."

On the 2nd August a reply was sent accepting the proposal.

From the point forward, however, the appellant appears to have encountered financial difficulties in carrying out the contract. He set about endeavouring to secure the property on modified and easier terms. He did not pay the earnest-money eo nomine, but on the 26th August, 1914, he sent two cheques, amounting in cumulo to Rs. 1,65,000. the receipt being granted for these sums 'towards the sale price of the Markham Grant Estate out of the consideration of Rs. 4,76,000."

It is contended that this formed a supersession of the former contract. The Board agrees with the opinion of the High Court that this is not so. It was merely a financial modification in the interests of the purchaser, who appeared to be unable or unwilling fully to meet the terms of the contract.

Then came, on 6th September, 1914, a letter from the purchaser's representative in these terms:—

In continuation of my telegram, dated the 3rd instant from Simla, I have to inform you that, owing to certain unavoidable circumstances Kunwar Chiranjit Singh of Kapurthala, is quite unable to purchase the Markham Grant in the Dehra Dun District. You are hence quite at liberty to settle your terms and make up the bargain with any other purchaser.

It is accordingly plain that the purchaser was unable or unwilling to complete the contract, even in its modified terms.

According to the judgment of the High Court, which again, in their Lordships' view, is correct, the purchaser must, having broken the contract, lose his earnest money of Rs 20,000, but must be re-paid Rs. 1,45,000, the balance of his payment to account. The appeal is brought with the object of his also obtaining re-payment of the earnest money.

In the opinion of the Board, as mentioned, the original contract of sale was not superseded. It was carried forward with the modifications alluded to and in particular there is nothing to suggest that the owner of the Estate agreed to sacrifice the stipulated earnest.

Earnest money is part of the purchase price when the transaction goes forward: it is forfeited when the transaction falls through, by reason of the fault or failure of the vendee.

The application of this principle to the contract in question settles the case.

A cross-appeal was presented truly for the purpose of endeavouring to meet circumstances which have not arisen, namely, the Board's possibly coming to an opinion that the original contract of sale had been wiped out.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the main appeal fails with costs. As to the cross appeal there will be no order except that there be no costs to either side.

—Plaint covering several causes of action—Some within jurisdiction of Court, others beyond it—Return of plaint—Procedure.

Where on presentation of plaint covering more than one cause of action, the Court is of opinion that it can deal only with some of the causes of action, the proper procedure to follow is to retain the plaint and strike out from the plaint that part of it which it thinks is beyond its jurisdiction leaving it to the plaintiff to file another suit with regard to the causes of action struck out from the plaint in the proper Court. It is not a proper procedure to return the plaint to be presented to proper Court for trial of causes of action beyond its jurisdiction and itself to proceed on a certified copy of the plaint for causes of action within its jurisdiction.

Civil revisional application against an order of the First Class Subordinate Judge, at Dhulia, in Suit No. 704 of 1924.

Mr. V. D. Limaye, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. V. Bhat, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—We do not agree with the order of January 17, 1925, directing the suit to be struck off the file. The mistake which came in the plaintiff's way was due to the default of the Erandol Judge, who ought to have in the first instance returned the plaint with regard to the whole of the causes of action therein. Instead of doing that, he referred the plaintiff to the Dhulia Court in regard to a portion of the claim, thinking at that time that he could deal with the remainder. Thereafter, he changed his mind and found that he could not deal with the remainder of the claim. There is no reason why on that account the plaintiff should be debarred from prosecuting his claim in the Dhulia Court either on the original plaint, or on the certified copy which was continued to be used in the Erandol Court, till finally the Erandol Court declined to deal with any part of the suit.

We think the original procedure adopted by the Erandol Judge was wrong. If he decided that he could deal with only one of the causes of action in the plaint, then he should have retained the plaint himself, and struck out from the plaint that part of it which he held was beyond his jurisdiction, and then the plaintiff could file another suit in the Dhulia Court. We do not think it is provided for anywhere in the C. P. C. that the same suit could be going on in two different Courts on the same plaint.

Rule will be made absolute and the suit will be heard on the merits. Costs of this Rule will abide the result.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 9th April 1923.

Mr. Hyder Husein, for the Appellant.

Mr. Radha Krishna, for Respondent No. 9.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for redemption brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Unao. The suit was brought against the mortgagee for redemption on the ground that the redemption obtained by some of the defendants through Court under a compromise was a collusive transaction. The principal money secured by the mortgage was stated in para. 2 of the plaint as Rs. 3,400 and the value of the property was stated to be Rs. 6,000.

The defendants resisted the plaintiff's suit for redemption on various grounds, which it is not necessary for us to state here. It will be sufficient for the purposes of the present appeal to state that the suit was ultimately dismissed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the 9th of April 1923.

The plaintiff carried the matter further in appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Lucknow sitting at Unao. It is unfortunate that the appeal against this decree which was filed on the 12th of May 1923 did not come up for hearing before the District Judge till the 23rd January 1926. On that date the case was argued on behalf of the appellant and the hearing of the appeal was adjourned to 31st of January 1926. On the 31st January a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondent to the effect that the appeal did not lie in the Court of the District Judge but in this Court. Further arguments on this point on behalf of the appellant were heard on the 6th of February 1926, and on the 13th February 1926 the learned District Judge held that the appeal was not cognisable by his Court and on that finding he returned the memorandum of appeal to be presented to this Court. The memorandum of appeal was, therefore, presented by the appellant to this Court on the 15th of February 1926.

The appeal when presented to this Court was noticed as one which was rightly instituted in the Court of the District Judge and in order to avoid delay and expense to the parties, a notice was issued by this Court to them to get the question of jurisdiction settled before the case was fixed for hearing on the merits.

The parties have now appeared before us to-day and the question of jurisdiction has been argued at great length.

After hearing the arguments on both the sides we are of opinion that the order of the learned District Judge cannot be maintained and that the appeal did actually lie to his Court and that it is to be heard by that Court and that Court alone. It is a settled rule of law that in redemption suits the jurisdiction is governed by the amount of the principal mortgage money and not by the value of the property mortgaged [vide Kedar Singh v. Matabadal Singh (1)]. We have now to determine whether the suit as brought by the plaintiff in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Unao can be reckoned as a suit for redemption. It has been contended before us, as it was before the learned District Judge, that the present suit was not a suit for redemption but a suit for possession brought by a co-mortgagor against another co-mortgagor who had redeemed the property and in support of this proposition reliance was placed on the case of Makhdum Khan v. Jadi (2). There is no doubt that it was held by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in that case that the suit brought by a co-mortgagor against another co-mortgagor for recovery of possession of his share cannot be treated as a suit for redemption and that the appropriate Article of the Limitation Act applicable to the suits of this character was Art. 144 and not Art. 148. But what we have to see in this case is whether the suit as laid by the plaintiff in his plaint was really a suit of that character. The plaintiff did not admit the validity of the redemption effected by some of the mortgagors. He described in his plaint the proceedings taken by those mortgagors as collusive, and asked a decree for redemption of the entire property. In those circumstances it appears to us that his suit cannot be treated as a suit for recovery of his share of the property mortgaged as one brought against his co-mortgagor who had already redeemed the property. His suit was purely a suit for redemption of the entire mortgaged property. The learned District Judge has taken great pains in considering the nature of the suit brought by the plaintiff but in so doing he has taken this fact into consideration that in appeal the plaintiff relinquished the shares of the two mortgagors Kusher and Jugga. In our opinion this fact cannot in any way be considered to be of any importance in determining the real nature of the suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant. The suit of the plaintiff-appellant as stated above and as it appears from the plaint was suit for redemption and purely of redemption and for the purposes of determining its jurisdiction we must be guided by the usual rule of law that the allegations in the plaint must determine the jurisdiction of the Court. It appears to be clear on the allegations made in the plaint that the suit as brought was not a suit between co-mortgagors inter se but it was a suit brought for redemption against the mortgagee and the fact that the plaintiff while appealing from the decree of the Trial Court excluded in his appeal the share of the two mortgagors would not in any way alter the character of the suit. In suits of such a nature it appears to us to be clear that the jurisdiction must be the same as in the case of ordinary suits brought for redemption.

We are supported in this view by the decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported as Shanker Baksh Singh v. Ram Bahadur Singh (3) decided by Kanhaya Lal, J. C. It was held in that case that the suit between persons claiming mutually the exclusive right to redeem the mortgage, one of whom had succeeded in inducing the mortgagee to allow him to redeem it, must be considered as suit of the nature of a suit for redemption and the jurisdiction of the Court in such a case must be governed by the principal amount of the mortgage money and not by the value of the mortgaged property. We are in full agreement with the principle laid down in this case. In our opinion, therefore, the suit brought by the plaintiff in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Unao was a suit for redemption and its value for the purposes of the jurisdiction must be guided by the value of the principal amount of the mortgage-money, namely, Rs. 3,400 and not by the value of the mortgaged property which was stated in the plaint to be Rs. 6,000.

(3) 70 Ind. Cas. 311; 26 O. C. 297; A. I. R. 1922 Oudh 45.

We, therefore, set aside the order of the learned District Judge passed on the 13th February 1926 and direct that the memorandum of appeal be returned again to the appellant for presentation to that Court.

As to costs our order is that the respondents should pay their own costs in this Court and also pay the costs of the appellants.

We have already indicated in the earlier portion of this judgment the great delay which has occurred in the hearing of this appeal. We have already stated that the appeal was filed in the year 1923 and was heard by the learned District Judge in the year 1926. We hope that the learned District Judge will fix an early date for the hearing of this appeal.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 56, 81—Mortgage of several properties—Mining leases granted by mortgagor in respect of some properties—Mortgage decree—Order of sale—Marshalling.

Some out of several mortgaged properties were leased out by the mortgagors on mining leases under which the mortgagors were entitled to recover rent and royalties from the lessees. The mortgagee subsequently obtained a decree on foot of his mortgage and in execution of the decree the mortgagors obtained an order that the properties which had been leased out should first be sold in satisfaction of the decree inasmuch as it was expected that the sale of those properties would satisfy the decree completely. The lessees contended that the properties other than those leased to them should first be sold in execution of the decree:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the mortgagors had a valuable interest, viz., the right to receive rent and royalties, in the properties leased, the principle of s. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act was not applicable to the case; [p. 787, col. 2.]

(2) that the lessees having taken with full notice of the mortgage the principle of marshalling of securities laid down in s. 81 of the Transfer of Property Act was not applicable to the case; [p. 788, col. 1.]

(3) that the order directing that the leased properties should be sold first was perfectly proper in the circumstances of the case. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

B. B. Ghose, J.—These three appeals arise out of three suits brought on different mortgages by the same plaintiff. In the suits out of which Appeals Nos. 3 and 4 arise, the defendants were the same. In the suit which has given rise to Appeal No. 19, the principal defendants were the co-sharers of the principal defendants in the other two suits who owned an eight-anna share of the mortgaged property. The appellants before us are Messrs. H. V. Low & Co., Ltd., who were added as defendant No. 3 in the suits from which Appeals Nos. 3 and 4 arise and who were the defendant No. 8 in the suit which has given rise to Appeal No. 19. The suits were decreed by the Subordinate Judge against all the defendants. The mortgage in Appeal No. 3 is dated the 3rd April 1917. In Appeal No. 4, the mortgage is dated the 23rd September 1913 and in Appeal No. 19, it is dated the 10th of January 1917. The appellants before us are the lessees of two mouzahs called Simsa and Barkola and they obtained a mining lease from the mortgagors in Appeals Nos. 3 and 4 on the 10th February 1919 with regard to a moiety share of those two mouzahs. They also obtained a similar lease from the mortgagors in Appeal No. 19 on the 25th August 1919. There is no question that the appellants are bound by the several mortgages and that the property in their hands is liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage-decrees along with the other properties mortgaged at the instance of the mortgagee. These defendants in the Court below made an application in each case praying that the two mouzahs of which they had taken leases should be put up to sale last of all. In answer to their petitions, the mortgagors contended that these two mouzahs should be put up to sale first as the whole of the mortgage-debt would then be paid off out of the purchase-money of these two mouzahs; they were the most valuable part of their property and something would remain in excess after satisfying the mortgages. The mortgagors also said that, if these two properties were sold first, it would be unnecessary to proceed with the sale of their other properties. The mortgagee was indifferent as to what direction the Court might make with regard to the order in which the mortgaged properties were to be put up to sale. In all the cases, the Subordinate Judge made an order to the effect that these two properties Simsa and Barkola should be put up to sale first as he considered that that was the most equitable order having regard to the fact that the defendant Company—the appellants before us—had taken their mining leases with full knowledge of the indebtedness of the mortgagors and on favourable terms and further that the agents of the Company who negotiated the transaction undertook to pay off the several mortgages.

In each of these suits there was another set of defendants who were the sons of the mortgagors and they pleaded that they were not bound by the leases granted by their fathers as the leases were not granted for the benefit of the joint Mitakshara family of which they were all members. This question the learned Subordinate Judge has left open, and it seems to me that it was unnecessary to decide that question which was an issue between defendant and defendant wholly unconnected with the main issues which arose in the mortgage suits.

The defendant Company have appealed against the decrees passed by the learned. Subordinate Judge and they attack the particular portion of the decree in each case in which the order in which the mortgaged properties should be sold is stated, that is to say, they object to the order that Mouzahs Simsa and Barkola should be put up to sale first in satisfaction of the mortgage-decree. Their contention, in the first place, is that the other properties which are not the subject of the lease to them should be sold first and that, if the mortgages are not satisfied out of the sale-proceeds, then the property leased to them should be sold; secondly, they urged that, if that contention of theirs be not accepted, the order with regard to the sale of the two properties Simsa and Barkola first should be expunged and the mortgagee should be allowed to proceed to execute his mortgages against any property he chooses. It is said on behalf of the appellants that the law as enacted in s. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act, namely, where two properties are subject to a common charge and one of the properties is sold the buyer is, as against the seller, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the charge satisfied out of the other property so far as such property will extend, should be applied to the present cases. It is next said that, if that provision is not applicable, then the general principle of marshalling of securities as laid down in s. 81 of the Transfer of Property Act should be applied as a rule of equity.

In my judgment, the answer to the contention that the principle of s. 56 should be applied is that here the mortgagors have a valuable interest in the property, that is, the right to receive rent and royalty from the lessees, the dead rent being fixed at Rs. 2,000 per annum in each case, the mortgagors may very well say that, if their interest which is still subsisting and which is superior to that of the lessees is sold, then the rest of their property would be preserved, and, in such a case, it seems to me that it will not be open to the lessees to say that the two properties in question should not be sold, because the sale might in the end affect their interest. When I asked the learned Vakil for the appellants whether this principle has ever been applied in any reported decision in favour of the lessee of a mortgagor his answer was that he had not been able to find any case. On that ground and the lessees having taken with full notice, in my judgment, the principle of marshalling of securities is not applicable to the present cases. The contention, therefore, of the learned Vakil for the appellants that properties other than those leased to the defendant Company should be sold first cannot be upheld.

It is next contended on behalf of the appellants that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in finding on the evidence that the persons who conducted the negotiations for the leases with the mortgagors agreed to pay off the mortgage-debts. It is urged that in the various petitions filed by the mortgagors before the learned Subordinate Judge they did not allege this as a ground for having the two Mouzahs Simsa and Barkola sold first and that the story of the agreement is absolutely an afterthought. In Appeal No. 19, it is said that there is absolutely no evidence of the alleged agreement. It seems to me, however, that the appellants when they invoked equity in their favour signally failed in their case; they have not, it appears, paid any rent or royalty to the mortgagors since the date of the lease and this sum would, it is said, amount to over Rs 12,000 with interest. The mortgage debt in this case would amount to about that sum and it can hardly be said to be equity that the other properties belonging to the mortgagors should be sold in order to pay off the mortgage debt while the appellant Company have in their hands money due to the mortgagors to the same extent. In my opinion, therefore, on that ground alone the order made by the learned Subordinate Judge should be held to be quite equitable and should stand.

With regard to the other two appeals, the Subordinate Judge has accepted the evidence given by the mortgagors that there was such an agreement by Mr. Samson who is now the general manager of the defendant Company. There was mention of one Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee in the evidence. Jyotish comes forward and denies the whole story in his evidence. But he goes too far because he says that he had no knowledge whatsoever of the indebtedness of the mortgagors. It is hardly necessary to point out that with regard to one branch of the mortgagors it was necessary to have the sanction of the Court for the lease and it was recited in the order that the estate of the mortgagors was heavily encumbered and it was, therefore, necessary to grant a mining lease, and, on the basis of that order, the lease was granted. Mr. Samson does not give his evidence. I am unable to hold that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in accepting the evidence given by the mortgagors in these two cases. But apart from that, having regard to the circumstances that the mortgagors are entitled to a large sum of money as royalty out of these properties and that the lease was taken subject to the encumbrance with full knowledge of the indebtedness of the lessors, I think we should not interfere with the order of the lower Court.

The result, therefore, is that all the three appeals are dismissed with costs. We allow only one set of hearing-fee in each appeal to be divided between the different sets of respondents who have appeared.

Walmsley, J.—I agree.

A usufructuary mortgage of a share in a village with a condition for foreclosure provided that the mortgagee would take possession of the mortgaged property with the exception of the 130 bighas sir lands and of Rs. 100 cash annually fixed for the maintenance of the executant and his descendants, etc. The mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption with a condition of foreclosure in the event of default. The default being made decree for foreclosure was made absolute. The annuity was treated as nankar by both the parties before as well as after the foreclosure decree:

Held, that the entire share in the village was mortgaged subject to the liability of Rs. 100 annually which was nankar and that nankar was a charge on the property by which the ex-mortgagee was bound.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 14th May 1925, affirming that of the Munsif, Rae Bareli, dated the 23rd December 1924.

Mr. Ishwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Appeal No. 404 arises out of Suit No. 251 of 1924 instituted in the Court of the Munsif, Rae Bareli, and Appeal No. 405 arises out of Suit No. 253 of the same year and instituted in the same Court. In both the suits there was only one defendant, Bishwanath Prasad, and he is the sole appellant in the two appeals before me. The plaintiffs in the two suits were different persons but the facts of the two cases are the same and the titles of the two sets of plaintiffs are also the same. The appeals may, therefore, be conveniently disposed of together.

The facts of the case are numerous but the point for decision lies in a nutshell. The question is one of interpretation of a deed of mortgage, dated the 15th of December 1867, executed by the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs in the two suits in favour of the predecessors-in-interest of the defendant in both the suits. The mortgage of the 15th of December 1867 was a usufructuary mortgage with a condition for foreclosure in respect of an 8 annas share in village Bawan Buzurg in the District of Rae Bareli. Under certain circumstances, which it is not necessary to state, the mortgaged security was reduced by 7 pies in the year 1869 and since then the mortgage was in operation in respect of the remaining 7 annas 5 pies share only.

The position of the parties having been explained in the preceding paragraph of this judgment, it will now be convenient to refer to them as plaintiffs and the defendant.

It appears that the plaintiffs instituted a suit for redemption of the mortgage of the 15th of December 1867 and obtained a decree on the 30th of June 1890 with a condition of foreclosure in the event of default in the payment of the mortgage-money. Default was made and the decree for foreclosure was made absolute on the 18th of August 1895 in favour of the defendant. The plaintiffs in both the suits claim a certain amount of nankar from the defendant, who is now in possession of the 7 annas 5 pies share under the foreclosure decree, and they claim that the nankar is a charge on the property held by the defendant. The plaintiffs base their title on the deeds of mortgage of the 15th of December 1867. I now proceed to interpret that deed. The operative part is as follows :—

"In lieu of the sum of Rs. 14,000 carrying interest at the rate of Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem we, the executants, mortgage our 8 annas share out of the 16-annas share in village Bawan Buzurg, including mal, sewai, jalkar and bankar to Baldeo Das and Diwan Das for a period of 12 years." Then follow certain covenants. The first of these covenants is as follows:—"The mortgagees shall take possession of the mortgaged property with the exception of the 130 bighas sir lands and of Rs. 100 cash annually, which amount has been fixed for the maintenance of the executants and their dependants and adherants, etc." To my mind it is perfectly clear that the entire 8-annas were mortgaged subject to the liability of the payment of Rs. 100 per year out of the profits of the mortgaged-property for the benefit of the mortgagors and their descendants. Thus an existing fund was specified out of which the sum of Rs. 100 was to come every year. The annuity was a 'nankar' and has been so treated by the parties for all time, both before and after the foreclosure decree. "When the covenant extends to a thing in esse, parcel of the demise, the thing to be done by force of the covenant is cuodammodo annexed and appurtenant to the thing demised, and shall go with the land, and shall bind the assignee" [Spencer's case (1)]. Thus the nankar is a charge on the property now in the possession of the defendant.

The foreclosure decree has not been produced but I am justified in presuming that it was in accordance with the covenants contained in the deed of mortgage. Assuming, however, that the foreclosure decree did no more than foreclose the mortgagors' right of redemption in the 7-annas 5-pies share and thereby had the effect of transferring that share in favour of the defendant, the defendant cannot escape the liability with which the property is charged.

The learned Pleader for the appellant contended that the liability for the annuity came to an end on the passing of the foreclosure decree. There is nothing on the record of the case to support this contention. On the contrary, as the lower Court has found, the parties have all along been, by their conduct, recognizing the continuance of the liability. The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

An officer who has been permitted to exercise the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge, under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, is not entitled to exercise the powers of granting costs under s. 35 (A) of the C. Where an order awarding extraordinary costs under s. 35 (A) of the C. P. C. is made by a Small Cause Court an appeal lies from the order under s. 24 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to the District Judge.

The exercise of the right of interference in revision under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act does not depend upon the question whether an appeal lies or not, but it is a matter for consideration whether when there is a speedy remedy open to a party by way of appeal, he should be allowed to come up in revision and drag the opposite party to the High Court where the expense of engaging a Counsel must be greater than in the Mofussil.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against a decree of a learned Munsif exercising the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court at Pilibhit.

It appears that the applicant who was the plaintiff in the Court below ordered the defendants-respondents, a limited company, trading in Calcutta to send him some paint "per goods train at a cheaper rate." The defendants insisted on payment of a portion of the price beforehand and, according to the plaintiff's case, the money was sent to them on the 29th of April 1924. Goods, alleged to correspond to the goods ordered, were consigned at the Railway Station at Howrah on the 9th of May 1924. The Railway receipt which was in favour of the defendants themselves was endorsed in favour of the plaintiff. The goods arrived, it is said, rather late (we do not know the exact date) and the plaintiff refused to take delivery of the same on the ground that it reached too late to be of use to him. The plaintiff thereupon brought the suit for recovery of the price paid, viz., Rs. 44 and for recovery of Rs. 20 damages. The suit was decided ex parte. But on the application of the defendants the ex parte decree was set aside and the suit was reheard. The learned Judge found that there was no substance in the claim, that the suit was a frivolous one and it accordingly dismissed the suit and awarded to the defendants a sum of Rs. 30 as extraordinary costs under s. 35 (A) of the C. P. C.

It is contended for the plaintiff that on the merits of the case the suit ought to have been decreed, that the learned Munsif had no jurisdiction to make an order for extra costs and that the ex parte decree should not have been set aside by the learned Munsif.

Taking the third point first, it appears that two applications had to be made for setting aside the ex parte decree. When the first application was made the decretal amount was not deposited forthwith and the application was dismissed on this very ground. A second application was made within the period of limitation with the request that the money already in Court should be treated as sufficiently good security. I think the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was perfectly justified in treating the money in Court as good security and setting aside the ex parte decree.

On the merits of the case there is hardly much to be said. The plaintiff's orders were that the goods were to be sent per goods train. The defendants did all that lay in their power to enable the plaintiff to obtain delivery of the goods when they arrived at Pilibhit. Section 91 of the Contract Act is clear on the point and the illustration leaves no room to doubt that this rule of law was entirely applicable. There are, therefore, no merits in the main case.

The question of jurisdiction is based on s. 2, cl. (2) of Act IX of 1922. It is urged that an officer who has been permitted to exercise the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887 is not entitled to exercise the powers of granting costs under s. 35 (A) of the C. P. C. unless he is vested with a jurisdiction up to Rs. 250. The High Court may, however, empower any such officer to award such costs. It is nobody's case that Mr. Aijaz Husain, the learned Judge, was so empowered by the High Court. I have ascertained from the office that he exercised jurisdiction as a Judge, Small Cause Court, up to Rs. 100 only. The parties are in the circumstances at one that he could not have granted extra costs under the Act IX of 1922.

The question, however, is raised whether this Court should interfere under the provisions of s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, in view of the fact that the applicant could have appealed under s. 24 of the Act to the District Judge. It is true that the exercise of the right of interference under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act does not depend on the question whether an appeal lies or not. Still it is a matter for consideration whether, when there is a speedy remedy open to a party, he should be allowed to come up in revision and drag the opposite party to the High Court where the expense of engaging a Counsel must be greater than in the Mofussil. On the merits, the applicant has no case. On a most frivolous suit, he dragged the defendants from Calcutta all the way to Pilibhit to answer a claim which had no basis either in morality or in law. The amount of compensation awarded to the defendants was hardly an adequate compensation for all the trouble and expenses undergone by them. In the circumstances I do not think that this Court is bound to exercise its jurisdiction under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, simply because the Judge may have been in error.

The result is that the application in revision fails and is hereby dismissed. The applicant must pay the costs of the respondents.

Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 23rd July 1924.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. P. N. Rudra, for the Respondents.

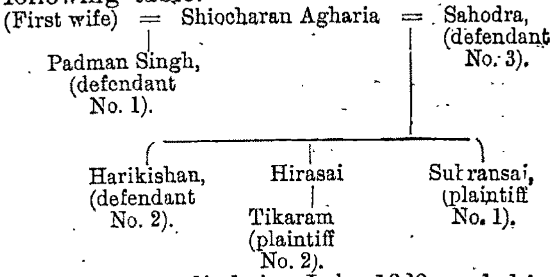
JUDGMENT.—In this partition suit the parties are related as is shown in the following table:



(First wife) = Shiocharan Agharia = Sahodra, (defendant No. 3).
Padman Singh, (defendant No. 1).
Harikishan, (defendant No. 2).
Hirasai
Tikaram (plaintiff No. 2).
Subransai, (plaintiff No. 1).

Shiocharan died in July 1920 and his first wife and Hirasai both died before that. The lower Court has made a mistake in declaring in para. 14 of the judgment that only the fields mentioned in cl. (e) of para. 3 of Padman Singh's written statement are his separate property. According to the findings of that Court he is also separate tenant of the fields mentioned in cl. (b) of the same paragraph of his written statement, which include Nos. 527, 568 and 569 not mentioned in cl. (e). That this is a mistake is admitted by the respondents.

The first ground of appeal was that the lower Court was wrong in holding that there had already been a partition of the moveable property of the family, and that Padman Singh had been given his share of it. This was abandoned by the learned Pleader for the appellants, though with unaccountable hesitation and reluctance, on its being explained that the other side would be glad to agree to a finding that there had been no such division of moveables, as the inevitable result of it would be that all the tenancy land held by Padman Singh had been acquired out of joint family funds. It was also again given up on its being pointed out that a Court-fee is payable in the appeal on the value of the property claimed.

As to the special custom, alleged to exist among the members of the Agharia caste of the tract in which the parties live, whereby a mother is given no share at a partition among brothers, the evidence in proof of the allegation is too slight and feeble for serious discussion. As an alternative it is pleaded that according to the ordinary rules of Hindu Law, in a partition between brothers who are the sons of different mothers, the property is first divided into equal shares among all the brothers and then the shares of all the sons of each mother are put together and again equally divided between them and her. The result in this case would be that Padman Singh, whose mother is dead, would get a quarter share, and each of the three other sons of Shiocharan and their mother Sahodra, who is alive and a defendant in the case, would get a three-sixteenths share, or in the anna-pie notation Padman Singh would get four annas and each of the rest would get three annas.

The contention rests on the text of the Mitakshara which says that "in the case of sons who divide after the father (dies) the mother (mata) also takes an equal share," and the assertion that in most if not all other passages in the Mitakshara, the word mata does not include a step-mother. Only two texts have been cited here in which the word mata does not include a step-mother, those mentioned in Ganno v. Beni (1) and Vithu v. Devidas (2). But that it does include a step-mother, even one without sons, in the particular text with which we are concerned, is very clearly shown in the judgments of Mitter, J., in Damoodur Misser v. Senabutty Misrain (3) of Sundara Ayyar J. in Srinivasa Iyengar v. Thiruvengadathaiyangar (4) and of Macleod and Shah, JJ., in Hoshanna Devanna Naik v. Devanna Banappa Naik (5).

The suggested interpretation of the text in the case of a widow with sons and stepsons seems to me impossible for another reason which is intrinsic. That is that in most cases, as in this, it would break the undoubted and fundamental rule that each of the brothers is entitled to an equal share. Acceptance of the rule suggested means that each of Padman Singh's step-brothers, all sons of Shiocharan equally with him, would get a share less by 25 per cent. than his, and if his mother were alive he would get only two-thirds of what each of them would get. That being impossible, the interpretation of the rule urged by the appellants is also impossible.

The claim to the "jethausi" or eldest brother's extra share made by the second defendant Harikishan, is based on nothing but an expression of a wish by Shiocharan that, in a partition which was then proposed to be made by arbitrators but was not made, Harikishan should be given certain property as "jethausi"; he was at that time the eldest son still joint with Shiocharan, Padman Singh having already separated from him and the sons of the second wife. Harikishan has no legal claim to "jethausi" not being the eldest of the sons now in existence, and the wish of his father that he should be treated as the eldest son in the circumstances is perhaps natural and reasonable, but neither the existence nor the expression of the wish can give Harikishan that legal claim. This contention was, however, abandoned on its being pointed out that it could not be maintained without the payment of Court-fees.

The appellants contend that the finding as to the moveable property in the hands of the other party rests on a wrong placing of the burden of proof; it has been found that that party had only so much moveable property as it chose to admit, only because the appellants failed to prove that it had more. That is certainly wrong, as is explained in Jailalsao v. Lal Fatehsingh (6) and the case would probably have to go back for the taking of further evidence produced and examined with a proper understanding, by the Court and by the parties, of where the burden of proof lay, but for the fact that exactly the same has been done the other way about; the moveable property found to be in the hands of the appellants is found to be no more than what they admitted they had, only because the other party failed to prove that it was more. In these circumstances both findings must stand. It may be mentioned that the appellants did not look at this question from that point of view till it was suggested by the Court. Their attempt in the first place was to show that their evidence did establish that the other party had more moveable property than had been found by the lower Court. That it certainly failed to do.

The contention in the eighth paragraph of the petition of appeal that it had been proved that the value of the ornaments held by Sahodra was Rs. 500 and not only Rs. 100 was abandoned on its being pointed out that it involved the payment of Court-fees.

The cross-objection filed in respect of the tenancy lands acquired by Padman Singh after his separation from the rest of the family was withdrawn when it was discovered that it could not be pressed without paying further Court-fees. Anyhow it could not possibly succeed. When Padman Singh separated from the others a partition was made of the moveable property only and he was given his share; he was also given a part of the property which was still the common property of all the members of the now disrupted family, and allowed to hold it separately. It seems that he was allowed to keep the income of the land in his possession as his share of the income of the whole common property, though it is just possible that the income of that and the rent was put together and he was given his share of it. But in either case his share of the income was his own separate property; he did not acquire the other tenancies out of the land he held, which was common property, but out of the income of that land, which was his separate property.

The decree of the lower Court will accordingly be modified by the addition of the numbers 527, 568 and 569 to the list of numbers of the fields which belong separately to Padman Singh. This is a relief which could have been obtained by application to the lower Court, and anyhow it is an inconsiderable part of the whole relief claimed in appeal. The appellants will, therefore, pay all the costs of both parties in appeal, but the respondents will pay all the costs incurred in connection with their cross-objection.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 88 OF 1925.
April 23, 1925.
Present:—Mr. Justice Buckland.
In re GOPALDAS AURORA —APPLICANT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 15—Insolvency Rules of Calcutta High Court, rr. 74, 150—Petition by debtor—Procedure—Petition by partner—Debts due by firm, whether can be entered in list—Debtor, whether bound to hand over books to Official Assignee before adjudication—Practice.

Rule 74 of the Insolvency Rules of the Calcutta High Court provides that where a petition for adjudication is filed by a debtor the Court shall forthwith make an adjudication order thereon. The rule contemplates that if the petition is in form in the sense that the Court has jurisdiction and the conditions prescribed by the Act have been fulfilled, the order shall go as a matter of course. [p. 794, col. 2.]

It is open to a partner in a firm to apply to be adjudicated an insolvent and in such a case he would be right in setting out in his petition the debts due by his firm, for the reason that under the ordinary law they would be debts for the full amount of which he would be personally liable. The mere fact, therefore, that such debts are entered in the petition would not mean that the petition is made on behalf of the firm. [p. 795, col. 1]

There is no rule requiring an unwilling debtor to hand over his books to the Official Assignee before he is adjudicated an insolvent. [p. 796, col. 1.]

A practice founded upon the willingness of debtors cannot be regarded as being a settled practice obligatory upon persons who do not wish to comply with it. [p. 795, col. 2.]

On a petition for adjudication it is open to the Court to make a reference to external matters, provided they are relevant, but if an order is to be founded upon them they should be duly brought to the notice of the parties and the parties given an opportunity of furnishing an explanation. [p. 796, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Registrar in Insolvency, refusing the adjudication of the petitioner-insolvent.

Mr. S. N. Bannerjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under s. 8 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act against an order of the Registrar in Insolvency refusing to adjudicate the petitioner-insolvent upon his own petition. That the matter is one with which the Registrar has been duly empowered to deal is not in question.

The petition is in form No. 7 to be found in the appendix of forms to the Insolvency Rules of this Court made under ss. 112 and 114 of the Act, and, as pointed out by learned Counsel, it contains averments which will bring the application within the relevant sections of the Act, and are, therefore, necessary for the purpose of obtaining the order.

Section 9 states that a debtor commits an act of insolvency:—"(f) if he petitions to be adjudged an insolvent." Section 10 provides that subject to the conditions specified in the Act if a debtor commits an act of insolvency, he may present an insolvency petition and the Court may on such petition make an order adjudging him an insolvent. Any difficulty that might arise in combining this with s. 9 (f) is avoided by the explanation to s. 10, which says that the presentation of a petition by the debtor shall be deemed an act of insolvency within the meaning of the section. Consequently provided certain other conditions are fulfilled, the mere fact of the presentation of a petition for adjudication is enough on which to make the order.

Section 11 contains certain restrictions upon jurisdiction. The only part of the section to which I need refer is sub-s. (b), under which the Court has no jurisdiction to make the order unless the debtor within a year before the date of the presentation of the insolvency petition has ordinarily resided or had a dwelling house or has carried on business either in person or through an agent within the limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the Court. The petition in this case states that the petitioner lately carried on a co-parcenary business as a merchant under the name and style of Gopinath Pursottamdas at No. 113, Monahardas Katra, in Calcutta, and has for the greater part of the past six months ordinarily resided at 101, Harrison Road, Calcutta.

Further conditions which must be fulfilled are to be found in s. 14, and to entitle him to present a petition, the debtor must either owe Rs. 500 or have been arrested and imprisoned in execution of the decree of a Court for the payment of money or an order of attachment in execution of such a decree must have been made and be subsisting against his property. The first condition is that which this petitioner states has been fulfilled, for his petition says that he is unable to pay his debts, which exceed Rs. 500. That he must state under s. 15, which goes on to provide that if the debtor proves that he is entitled to present the petition, which means that the necessary conditions obtain, the Court may thereupon make an order of adjudication, subject, however, to another Court having insolvency jurisdiction being that to which the application should preferably be made.

Rule 74 of the Rules of this Court provides that where a petition is filed by a debtor, the Court shall forthwith make an adjudication order thereon, and the rule appears to contemplate that if the petition is in form in the sense that the Court has jurisdiction and the conditions prescribed by the Act have been fulfilled, the order shall go as a matter of course. This would appear to be in accordance with the view expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Chhatrapat Singh Dugar v. Kharag Singh Lachmiram (1). That was a case under the Provincial Insolvency Act, but for the present purpose no distinction need be drawn between that and the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. It is pointed out in the judgment of the Board, which was delivered by the late Chief Justice of this Court, that the Act entitles a debtor to an order of adjudication when its conditions are satisfied. His Lordship continued:—

"This does not depend on the Court's discretion, but is a statutory right; and a debtor who brings himself properly within the terms of the Act is not to be deprived of that right on so treacherous a ground of decision as an 'abuse of the process of the Court.' "

It appears that that was the ground upon which in that case the petition was refused both by the District Court of Murshidabad and by this Court on appeal. That is not the ground upon which the Registrar has dealt with this application, though he seems to have taken into consideration matters which, according to the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, are not relevant to his decision.

The Registrar has referred to s. 99, which provides that any two or more persons being partners or any person carrying on business under a partnership name may take proceedings or be proceeded against under this Act in the name of the firm, and contains a further provision for disclosure of the names of the members of the firm. This is only an enabling section akin to O. XXX, of the C. P. C., and does not purport to prescribe anything that is to be done or left undone in order to obtain an adjudication order where a debtor who is a member of a partnership firm or where the members of a partnership firm apply for an order of adjudication. But the Registrar, by his reference to r. 150 of the Rules of this Court seems to have regarded this as an insolvency petition filed on behalf of a firm of debtors. If that were the case, he would be correct in requiring under the rule that the petitioner should state the names of the partners. Apparently his reason for having regarded it as though it were a petition filed on behalf of a firm is because the lists annexed to the petition are admittedly those of debts due by and outstandings due to the firm. This does not necessarily mean that the petition is made on behalf of a firm. Learned Counsel has said that there is no partnership firm and drawn my attention to the statement in the petition that the debtor was carrying on a co parcenary business, and submitted that there is no evidence of the existence of a contractual partnership to which the Act and rules refer. In any event, he has submitted that it would be open to a partner to apply to be adjudicated an insolvent and that in such a case he would be right in setting out the debts due by his firm, for the reason that under the ordinary law they would be debts for the full amount of which he would be personally liable. When the case is that of a coparcenary business and not a contractual partnership, he contends that the position is even more favourable to his client, for which proposition he relies upon Sat Narain v. Behari Lal (2).

I am disposed to think that this contention is correct, but as this appeal, like the application, is ex parte, I have not had the advantage of hearing the matter argued from the standpoint of any person interested in placing the contrary view before me, which may occur at a later stage of this case or even in other proceedings. Should such occasion arise, it may be necessary to re-consider the opinion which I have expressed.

The Registrar has also stated that it is the settled practice of this Court since the year 1915 to insist upon the books of an insolvent who is a trader being made over to the Official Assignee before the adjudication order is passed, and in support of that proposition he has referred to the judgments of my learned brother Mr. Justice Rankin in Re Bhuramull Banka (No. 39 of 1919, dated the 16th May 1919 unreported) and in Re Joseph Perry (No. 32 of 1919, dated the 28th May 1919 unreported). If my learned brother's information in the latter case is correct and insolvency is regarded as a privilege in India, that may explain the readiness of persons desirous of availing themselves of the privilege to make over their books of account to the Official Assignee even before the privilege is conferred upon them. But where it is contended that there is no obligation to make over the books of account to the Official Assignee before the order is made, the matter assumes a different aspect. A practice founded upon the willingness of debtors cannot be regarded as being settled practice obligatory upon persons who do not wish to comply with it. There is no rule of the Court which so requires, and were such a rule made, it would be a matter for consideration whether such additional condition could be super-imposed upon the Act which does not demand it. The two judgments referred to by the Registrar do not, in my opinion, support the proposition for which they have been cited. Each case was one of a person who already had been adjudicated an insolvent. In Re Joseph Perry (No. 32 of 1919, dated the 28th May 1919 unreported) my learned brother merely referred to this matter incidentally, and I do not read his judgment as definitely holding that there is an obligation in law or practice on a debtor to hand over his books to the Official Assignee before the adjudication order is made. Both in that and in the other case cited, he was dealing with books withheld from the Official Assignee by an insolvent after adjudication which is a very different matter, and, in my opinion, there is nothing establishing that it is the duty of an unwilling debtor to hand over his books to the Official Assignee before he has been adjudicated an insolvent.

Lastly, the Registrar has referred to Suit No. 2910 of 1924.

The Registrar may be perfectly right in the conclusions which he has drawn from the materials which he has examined in that case, or, on the other hand, it may be, as learned Counsel has stated, no doubt upon instructions, that the facts upon which the Registrar's observations are based are incorrect. It appears that the Registrar's knowledge was due to the circumstance that he happened to have settled an order of Mr. Justice Ghose in that suit in February last. It also appears to be purely fortuitous that the same officer was concerned with that order and this application, but so far as this application is concerned anything which the Registrar learnt in that connection must be regarded as extra-judicial and cannot be utilised as the foundation of his order. I must not, however, be taken as meaning that no reference whatever can be made to external matters, assuming, of course, that they are relevant, but if an order is to be founded upon them they should be duly brought to the notice of the parties and the parties given an opportunity of furnishing an explanation. I do not know whether that was done in this case; it may be that it was, but in any event the matters referred to have no relevancy upon this application, whatever use may be made of them by persons entitled to be heard at any subsequent stage of the proceedings.

The question of the adjudication of a debtor upon his own petition is a comparatively simple matter, and as has been pointed out by the Privy Council in the case cited, if the conditions of the Act are satisfied, the debtor is entitled to the order. All that need be done, therefore, upon a debtor's application is to see whether those conditions are fulfilled, and if so, to make the order. It may be that, in substance, though prematurely, the Registrar was perfectly correct in the view that he took of the matters to which he refers, but they can subsequently be brought to the notice of the Court, and if it should appear that the debtor had no right to apply for an order of adjudication, or that circumstances exist which would justify the Court in so doing, the Court has full power under s. 21 to annul the adjudication order.

For the foregoing reasons, I set aside the order of the Registrar, dated the 6th April 1925, and the usual order of adjudication will be made.

Will—Draft Will as evidence of oral Will.

A draft Will may be accepted as evidence of an oral, one where the facts show that the testator had expressed his final intention as to the property.

Appeal from a decree of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 26th July 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, South Lucknow, dated the 15th August 1923.

Messrs. Ganga Dayal and Hargovind Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ishwari Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for possession of a house in Mohalla Husainganj, City Lucknow, and for certain ornaments and cash. The property in question was the self-acquired property of Jawahir Lal, father of the plaintiff and father of the defendant's deceased husband. The defendant set up a Will by Jawahir Lal, which she alleged was acted on by both parties. The Court of first hearing decreed the suit, and decided that the defendant's plea of a Will was invalid. He held that a draft Will had been prepared but that this draft could not be regarded as the final expression of intention by the deceased, inasmuch as he left it unsigned, from which fact the Court inferred that he wished to reserve to himself further consideration of the matter. As regards the division of some cash and jewellery, the Court held that they did not amount to proper partition as there was no panches. In first appeal the Subordinate Judge decided that the deceased had made a valid oral Will which had been acted on.

In this appeal both findings are impugned. There is authority for holding that a draft Will may be accepted as evidence of an oral Will, where the facts show that the testator had expressed his final intention as to the property. I consider that the lower Appellate Court has given good reasons for holding that this was the case here, and in second appeal it is not open to me to go behind this conclusion. I also find that the lower Appellate Court has decided that the Will was actually acted upon by both the parties and has given good reasons for so holding. This again is a question of fact. It has been contended by the appellant that the defendant did not clearly set up an oral Will. There is no force in this contention. He set up a Will and gave the facts on which he relied. The lower Court was entitled to infer from those facts the execution of an oral Will.

For the above reasons I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Property inherited by husband after marriage, nature of—Share of wife—Property, whether liable for debts of husband.

Where a Burman Buddhist eindounggyi having two wives inherits immoveable property from his father after his second marriage, the property is lettetpwa of the marriages and is joint property of the husband and wives and not the separate property of the husband. The share of his two wives in such property jointly is one-third and both being of equal status the share of each is one-sixth. Each wife acquires a vested interest in one-sixth of such property from the date on which it is inherited, and that interest is not liable for any part of the debts incurred by the deceased husband alone. [p. 803, col. 2; p. 807, col. 2.]

Per Maung Gyi, J.—Under Burmese Buddhist Law as soon as a person dies his heirs immediately become entitled to his estate, and when a husband or a wife inherits property after marriage, the other spouse also becomes entitled at the same time to an undivided one-third share of such inherited portion. ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Robinson, C. J., and Cunliffe, J.—"The present appeal is concerned with the estate of one Po Ka who died on the 25th of December 1905. Po Ka was first married to Ma The Nu. The two were divorced in 1884; there was then a division of property between them. It is agreed that this marriage and divorce do not, in any way, affect the questions now to be decided.

"Shortly after the divorce, Po Ka married Ma Gyi, and some nine or ten years later, he married Ma Kin. He lived with Ma Gyi at Pazundaung, and she was undoubtedly his chief wife. Ma Kin lived at Thongwa, where Po Ka had large business interests, and, when there, he lived with Ma Kin openly as his wife.

"There is no reason to doubt that Ma Kin was a wife in the full sense of the term, and was endowed with what is described in Maung Tha Dun v. Ma Thein Yin (1) as proprietary as well as personal rights.

"Po Ka's father, U Tok Pyu, died in 1892, and from him Po Ka inherited certain immoveable property which formed the whole of his estate which is now in dispute. It has been urged that this property was inherited before his marriage to Ma Kin. The whole of this argument is based on certain vague and indeterminate facts.

"Ma Gyi in her evidence says that she was married at the age of 16. In 1911, when giving evidence, she gave her age as 44. She stated that Ma Kin was married nine or ten years after she was married, and it is sought to extract from calculations based on these vague assertions that the marriage to Ma Kin must have taken place later than 1892.

"There is no reason to suppose that Ma Gyi is any more certain of her age than the ordinary Burman Buddhist witness, and it is impossible to decide this question on statements such as that Ma Kin was married nine or ten years after the first marriage,

(1) 73 Ind. Cas. 1044; 1 R. 1; A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 37.

Ma Gyi herself in her evidence states that the property was inherited after Po Ka had married Ma Kin; and we are satisfied that the questions that arise must be dealt with on the assumption that the property was inherited after his second marriage.

"After Po Ka's death Ma Gyi and her children filed a suit for the administration of the estate, and to set aside a certain award that had been made with reference to the division of property between her and Ma Kin. The matter came before the late Chief Court, and the award was set aside. A Receiver was appointed, and all the properties were sold.

"There was a house at Pazundaung where Ma Gyi had always lived, and which was built on part of the inherited land. Ma Gyi claimed that as being the lettetpwa property of herself and Po Ka. She purchased the house at auction, and on this ground only paid half the purchase price.

"Po Ka had a large number of creditors—both secured and unsecured. Several of the secured creditors brought suits, and obtained decrees, as also did several of the unsecured creditors. There are other creditors—both secured and unsecured—who did not sue, but who claimed to come in and get their share in the administration decree.

"The matters arising in the suit were referred to a Commissioner, and in the course of the proceedings before him, Messrs. Walker & Whyte obtained a decree against Ma Gyi, personally, and in executions thereof, purchased themselves her share in the estate. They now take her place.

"The questions that arise for decision are whether Ma Gyi's share is taken by succession, or whether she has a vested right in one-third or any other share in the estate, and if so, whether her share is liable for the debts incurred by Po Ka alone.

"For the creditors it is urged that she succeeds by inheritance only, and that she could not obtain anything until after all the debts had been paid. On the other side, it is urged that she has a vested share, which is not subject to the debts and liabilities of her deceased husband.

"Certain questions as to jewellery are also raised—whether they were gifts to her by her husband, or whether they are joint property of the marriage. But this matter is merely one of academic interest, seeing that the jewelleries had been sold, and the proceeds have disappeared.

"Further questions are raised with reference to the house, and whether Ma Gyi is liable to account to the estate for the rent of the house, and for interest on the half share of the purchase price that she has not as yet paid.

"It must also be mentioned that Po Ka was an eindounggyi while Ma Gyi was a spinster. It is argued that the same rule will apply as if neither of them had been previously married, and for this proposition, the case of Ma E Nyun v. Maung Tok Pyu (2) is quoted as authority.

"It will be noticed, however, that this is an authority relating to division of property on a divorce.

"The argument before us has shown how loosely the expressions payin, thinthi, hnapazon and lettetpwa—are used and the authorities, which are very numerous, also indicate a similar looseness of expression.

"The case has been argued before us on the strength of s 3, Ch. XII of the Manugye, and we have been asked to apply the rule there laid down for partition of property on a divorce by mutual consent, on the ground that there is no rule to be found in the Dhammathats exactly dealing with the questions now for decision.

"The fact that the rules for partition on a divorce by mutual consent are not to be applied to a partition on inheritance has been frequently laid down, but it is clear from a consideration of all the numerous authorities that the questions arising have been differently dealt with and that there is no clear and definite decision on a point on which one is undoubtedly required.

"The questions are discussed in Mr. May Oung's work on Buddhist Law from page 53 onwards, and also Mr. Tha Gywe's Conflict of Authority in Buddhist Law, Vol. 2, from page 73 onwards. We think it unnecessary to quote these authorities in this order of reference, but we are of opinion that the following questions should be referred to a Full Bench for authoritative decision; and they are accordingly referred:—

"(1) When A, a Burman Buddhist eindounggyi having two wives, B and C, after the second marriage inherits immoveable property from his father, is that property the thinthi or separate property of A, or is it the lettetpwa or joint property of the marriages?

(2) 2 U. B. R. (1897-01) Bud. Law, Divorce, p. 39.

"(2) What, under these circumstances, would be the share of B, the chief wife, in this inherited property?

"(3) Will either or both wives acquire a vested right in one-third or any other share in the inherited property from the date on which it is inherited, and if so, is such share liable for all or any part of the debts incurred by the deceased husband alone?"

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

Maung Gyi, J.—There are three points of reference, viz. :—

(1) When A, a Burman Buddhist eindounggyi, having two wives B and C, after the second marriage, inherits immoveable property from his father, is that property the thinthi or separate property of A, or is it the lettetpwa or joint property of the marriages?

(2) What, under the circumstances, would be the share of B, the chief wife, in this inherited property?

(3) Will either or both wives acquire a vested right in one-third or any other share in the inherited property from the date on which it is inherited, and if so, is such share liable for all or any part of the debts incurred by the deceased husband alone?

The answers to these points of reference are to be found in Book XII, s. 3 of the Manugye Dhammathat which their Lordships of the Privy Council hold to be a work of high authority. This section states the law of partition of property on separation between husband and wife in the following cases:—

(1) When the husband and wife have not previously been married, called by some a "virgin couple":—

(a) When both, without fault on either side, desire to separate mutually ;

(b) When only one desires to separate and the other does not, though there is no fault on either side ;

(c) And when one party is at fault.

(2) When the husband and wife are eindounggyis, i. e., when both have been married previously :—

(a) When both, without fault on either side, desire to separate mutually ;

(b) When one only desires to separate and the other does not, there being no fault on either side;

(c) And when one party is at fault.

There is no mention of the partition on divorce when one party is an eindounggyi and the other is not.

In Ma E Nyun v. Maung Tak Pyu (2) and in Ma Ngwe Hnit v. Maung Po Hmu (3) it was held that the rule for partition on divorce by mutual consent where neither party was at fault between an eindounggyi and a husband or wife who had not been previously married was the rule which applied where neither party had been married before.

This is, I think, settled law.

Section 3 of Book XII of the Manugye begins by giving the rule of division of property on mutual divorce, where there is no fault on either side, between a couple that had not been previously married or a "virgin couple". The husband and wife each take the clothes and ornaments of his or her rank, and the remainder of the property "animate and inanimate" is thus divided:—

"If there is any property acquired by the husband alone, or by the wife alone, let that party who separately acquired it have two shares and the other one. Property acquired equally by both, or where both had an equal share in the capital, should be divided equally. If the clothes and ornaments of the man are many, and those of the wife few, let both be valued, and let the man make up the difference; if those of the woman are more valuable in the same way let her make up the difference to the man."

Here there is no reference to thinthi, payin, kanwin, lettetpwa, hnapazon or any particular kind of propery belonging to a husband or wife. The "remainder of the property animate and inanimate" is divided.

The text then describes the three kinds of property acquired by the husband and three by the wife.

The three kinds of property acquired by the husband are :—

(1) when the wife, at the time of marriage had no property from her parents, and the husband had ;

(2) property acquired during their cohabitation by his skill, science ; and

(3) property specially given to him by the King.

The three kinds of property acquired by the wife are :—

(1) when the husband at the time of marriage had no property from his parents and the wife had ;

(3) 64 Ind. Cas. 806; 11 L. B. R. 52.

(2) property acquired during their cohabitation by her skill; science and

(3) property given specially to her by the King.

In this classification of property, no reference is made to kanwin or property given at the time of marriage for the benefit of the couple, or to property given specially to both husband and wife by the King, or to property acquired jointly by the skill and science of the couple, or to property inherited by either party after marriage.

This classification though at first sight open to criticism is explained by the fact that in the case of a divorce where the "remainder of the property animate and inanimate" is divided the author of the text dispensed with a minute and scientific classification.

The word thinthi is sometimes used in the sense of payin property and at others as separately owned property which is not to be divided on partition.

To classify the property of a married couple broadly as thinthi and hanapazon or jointly acquired property seems to me to be defective because what is thinthi in one case may not be so in another. In the above rule of partition on divorce thinthi and payin are divided and in other cases of partition on divorce they are not. The use of the term hnapazon in the main classification of property of a married couple seems likewise defective as it excludes other kinds of property acquired after marriage.

In the case of Shwe Ngon v. Ma Min Dwe (4) on page 113, Jardine, J., refers to Major Sparks' definition of lettetpwa and hnapazon translated respectively as "obtained since marriage" and "jointly acquired." Reference is also made to the terms thinthi and payin which Major Sparks translates as "separate" and "originally belonging." Major Sparks considers that these words are used indiscriminately in the Dhammathat through the inaccuracy of the translator and are not so used in the original Sanscrit.

With this I am not prepared to agree. Although we have borrowed many things from India, it does not follow that we should slavishly adhere to the meanings of the Sanscrit terms in the Manu of the Hindus. The English word "fluke" which means a lucky accidental stroke is used by Burmans to mean an "outsider" or a dark horse in a race and is not used by them in any other connection except in billiards.

Major Sparks in his Code of Burmese Law, s. 14, defines thinthi as separate property of a husband or wife consisting of—

(1) what belonged to either before marriage;

(2) what has been given specially to either since marriage;

(3) what has come into the possession of either by inheritance from his or her own family since marriage; and

(4) clothes, jewels and ornaments.

He makes reference to Book X, s. 81, of the Manugye.

He restricts hnapazon to—

(1) all profits or interests arising since marriage from the employment or investment of the separate property of either; and

(2) all property acquired by their mutual skill and industry.

If the word thinthi has a hard and fast meaning that the property it represents cannot be divided, then it will be inconsistent with the rules for partition on divorce laid down in s. 3, Book XII Manugye.

Hnapazon and lettetpwa are used in the same section of the Manugye as one term, and I do not consider that because it is so used by the author of the text it has been used by him indiscriminately as a translator from the Sanscrit.

On page 315 of Richardson's Manugye twelve kinds of thinthi of children are given and on page 317 the term thinthi is qualified by the addition of apaing. The text says "of the twelve kinds of thinthi the four last are called thinthi-apaing, i. e., in which the right is perfect." I take it that, the term thinthi does not always mean separate property which is never divided. Thinthi is separate property. But it is subject to partition in some cases. To my mind the proper main classification of the property belonging to a husband and wife is into payin what is brought to the marriage by either or both and lettetpwa property acquired after the marriage in any way. The other terms used are merely sub-divisions of these two main classes.

When one party only desires divorce and the other does not and there is no fault on either side, each party is entitled to keep whatever property the King has given him or her. All the other property goes to the party who does not wish to separate and the party wishing to separate pays all the law expenses. But if there be fault on one side he or she forfeits all the property to the other.

(4) S. J. L. B. 110.

Section 3 then proceeds to lay down the rules for partition on divorce between eindounggyis or those who have been married before. If the divorce is mutual and there is no fault on either side each takes the property brought at the time of the marriage and each pays his or her debts up to that time. The hnapazon or jointly acquired property animate and inanimate, and the joint debts are divided equally.

Here the use of the term hnapazon is meant for hnapazon lettetpwa that is property acquired after marriage. As this property has been ascertained the section defines it. It says:—

"There are two kinds of property acquired during marriage (hnapazon lettetpwa) which are these: property or debts inherited by either party from their parents, and property acquired or debts incurred by them mutually and conjointly. Of these if the husband has inherited property or debts from his parents it is more immediately his; let him have two shares of the property, or bear two shares of the debts; if it be on the wife's side, let her in the same manner receive and pay."

We see that the doctrine of nissaya and nissita (supporter and defendant) is applied here also. The supporter takes double that of the defendant.

If the husband wishes to separate and the wife does not, or the wife wishes to separate and the husband does not, and there is no fault on either side, let each take back the payin they brought at marriage; but of the two kinds of property acquired since marriage (lettetpwa) which is the common property of both, the person not wishing to separate shall have the whole, and the person who does shall pay all the debts.

Immediately following this paragraph is the last paragraph of this section in Manugye (Book XII, s. 3) which has been the subject of much discussion. Richardson's translation is as follows: "Property obtained by the royal bounty, property in possession at the time of marriage, property that either may have inherited from their parents after marriage, these and the profits on them shall be considered as property acquired during the time they were together, and in accordance with this let the property be divided."

* * * * *

The same passage is given in the Digest, Volume II, s. 264, extract from Manugye. The only important difference between these two texts is that the passage in the Digest has the preposition (from) inserted after ရင်း in ရင်းပွါးသည်ကို တက်ထက် ပွါးလှ မှတ်ရေချေ။ thus making the meaning very clear. The published rendering of this extract on page 190, Vol. II of the Digest in English is:—"Let each take the property given him or her alone by the King, that brought by each to the marriage, and that inherited by each from his or her parents subsequent to the marriage. The profits which accrue from the different kinds of property shall be treated as lettetpwa or jointly acquired property, and partition of it shall be made according to the rules already laid down."

Jardine, J., in his Notes on Buddhist Law Essay 2, page 31—translates this passage as "Property given by the King being property brought at the time of marriage and property inherited by either party from their parents after marriage, having become the separate capital (ahyin) the increase on profits from them, shall be considered as lettetpwa and let it be divided as laid down above."

Shaw, J. C., in Mi Myin v. Nga Twe (5) being dissatisfied with Richardson's translation which is not quite correct and also with the published English translation because it is inconsistent with the extract from the Manugye in the Digest, Vol. II, s. 257, ninth line from the bottom of the page which says: "Property acquired and debts contracted by the husband and wife are of two kinds, namely, property and debts inherited after marriage by either from his or her parents and property acquired and debts contracted while they are working jointly for their mutual benefit," and also inconsistent with the passage in Manugye, Book XII, s. 3, page 344 of Richardson's text, gives his own translation. It runs thus:—

"Property obtained by gift from the King (payin) at the time of marriage, property inherited by either from parents during marriage, having been (as before explained) placed (i.e., classified and dealt with) according to its origin (အရင်းအတိုင်း) profits accruing from such property should be regarded as lettetpwa. Let the parties divide between them in accordance with what has been said before."

(5) 2 U. B. R. (1904-06) Bud, Law, Divorce p. 19.

Richardson's translation of this passage is incorrect. Jardine, J.'s translation is not quite correct, because he has "property given by the King being property brought at time of marriage," and Shaw, J. C.'s translation does violence to the ordinary meaning of the Burmese words and the construction of the sentence.

The correct translation is that given by the translator of the Digest.

Relying on this passage the learned Advocate for the appellants contends that property inherited after marriage is not lettetpwa, but only the profits derived from it.

I am unable to agree with him.

Book XII, s. 3, of the Manugye gives the rules for partition between husband and wife on mutual divorce according as they are previously unmarried couples or eindounggyis. When necessary the Dhammathat gives the definition of property in issue. In the case of "virgin couples" the property to be divided comes under three classes roughly and no mention is made of any other kind of property because the whole of the property, after taking away the ornaments and clothes, has to be divided.

The rule for partition on divorce by mutual consent between eindounggyis when neither party is at fault differs from those of the partition of a virgin couple. For this purpose the Dhammathat defines what is property acquired during marriage. It consists of property or debts inherited by either party from their parents during marriage and property acquired or debts incurred by them mutually and conjointly.

It will be seen that the Dhammathats favour a "virgin couple" and gives them preferential treatment. They marry young. They are unsophisticated and do not know what life is at the time of their marriage, whereas eindounggyis are men and women of the world and have seen life. In the same way a Buddhist monk who is a ngepyu (innocent from infancy) that is who became a monk as a vir intactus is much more honoured than a taw-twet or previously married man.

Towards the end of s. 3 is given the rule of partition between eindounggyis on divorce when there is no fault on either side and one only desires to separate and the other does not. Each is allowed to take his or her payin and the whole of the property acquired after marriage. It is for the purpose of determining what is the whole of the property acquired after marriage in this case that the last paragraph of s. 3 defines what is lettetpwa, and the property acquired after marriage other than jointly acquired property is strictly limited to the profits derived from their payin, minbe, or gifts made by the King and property inherited after marriage.

If the section be read in this way there is no inconsistency in the Dhammathat and the words of the passage are given their natural meaning.

This is supported by the fact that the last paragraph of s. 3 follows immediately the passage which refers to the partition of property between eindounggyis where there is no fault on either side and only one party desires to separate.

Section 264, Digest, Vol. II, which gives the extract from the Manugye, s. 3, last paragraph in the Burmese text has s. 258 (ခ) against it, while s. 228, Manugye, extract has (က) against it.

The heading of s. 264 is "Distinction between payin and jointly acquired property" and that of s. 258 "Divorce between a husband and wife who have both been previously married when only one party desires it."

In s. 3 of Digest, Vol. II, headed "Instructions to readers" (of the original) sub-section (j) we have this direction:—"In the original extracts containing two or more similar cases, the first of the similar cases is distinguished by a (က), the second by a (ခ), the third by a (ဂ) and so on, using the letters of the Burmese alphabet in their order, so as to facilitate reference when any of them is taken up again in other parts of the Digest."

From this it is clear that the lettetpwa defined in s. 264 of the Digest is the lettetpwa that applies only to eindounggyis on divorce when there is no fault on either side and only one party desires to separate, and the lettetpwa of "virgin couples" or of eindounggyis on mutual divorce, where there is no fault on either side, includes property inherited by either from their parents after marriage. In Maung Lo v. Maung Pyaung (6) and in Tola Ram v. Ma Kaing (7) it was held by Twomey, J., that property inherited after marriage is lettet-

pwa. In Ma Ngwe Bwin v. Maung Lun Maung (8) it was held that property inherited during coverture is lettetpwa.

In s. 264 of the Digest, Vol. II, the extract from Manu supports the Manugye. My answer to the first point of reference is that the property inherited by A is the lettetpwa or joint property of the marriages.

In s. 3, Book XII of the Manugye, we have seen that the division of lettetpwa property is in the proportion of 2 to 1 according as the husband or the wife is the nissaya (supporter) or nissita (dependant). As the property referred to in the reference was inherited by A from his father he would be the nissaya and B and C would be nissitas. A's share would be two-thirds and B's and C's share would be one-third. As B and C are of equal status, the share of each would be half of one-third or one-sixth of the whole. In Maung Lo v. Maung Pyaung (6) and Tola Ram v. Ma Kaing (7) it was correctly held that the Nissita's share was one-third.

My answer to the second point of reference is that the chief wife B's share is one-sixth of the inherited immoveable property.

The third point of reference is "will either or both wives acquire a vested right in one-third or any other share in the inherited property from the date on which it in inherited, and, if so, is such share liable for all or any part of the debts incurred by the deceased husband alone ?"

In Maung Po Sein v. Ma Pwa (9) the extent of the power of the husband of alienating property inherited by him after marriage was considered. It was held that the Court should be guided by the rules applicable to a partition upon divorce when neither party is in fault. It was also held that it was settled law that the wife or husband has an interest in property acquired by the other by inheritance, after marriage, when they are living together and helping each other.

In the case of Maung Lo v. Maung Pyaung (6) it was held that a durian garden inherited by Maung Pyaung after his marriage with Ma Aing was lettetpwa; that Ma Aing had a vested interest in it and that the extent of her interest is one-third. On this point Mi Myin v. Nga Twe (5) was followed. It was held further that although a wife cannot alienate her share in joint property without her husband's consent, her interest in joint property is attachable. On this point Ma Thaing v. Maung Tha Gywe (10) and Maung Hmon v. Maung Meik (11) were followed. It was also held that although Ma Aing had not "a disposing power which she may exercise for her own benefit" over the one-third share in the durian garden, that one-third share, nevertheless, belongs to her and that this was sufficient for the purposes of s. 60, C. P. C. of 1908.

As soon as a person dies his heirs at the time under Burmese Buddhist Law immediately become entitled to his estate and when a husband or wife inherits property after marriage, the other party also becomes entitled at the same time to an undivided one-third share of such inherited portion.

In Ma Shwe v. Ma Kyu (12) a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma held that "a sale by a Burman Buddhist husband of the hnapazon property of himself and his wife made without her consent constitutes a valid transfer of his share and interest in the property sold." It has been shown that s. 3, Book XII of Manugye uses the two terms hnapazon and lettetpwa together.

I think it is settled law that a wife's share in lettetpwa property is not subject to the debts of the husband where they were contracted by him without her knowledge and consent and where she was not a party.

My answer to the third point of reference is that both wives acquired a vested right in one-third of the inherited property from the date on which it was inherited and that such share is not liable for all or any part of the debts incurred by the deceased husband alone.

Carr, J.—In order to answer the questions referred it is necessary to determine the respective interests in property, during the continuance of the marriage of a Burmese Buddhist husband and wife. This matter is not directly dealt with in the Dhammathats and we can deal with it only by inference from certain provisions among which those of s. 3 of Book XII of the Munugye Dhammathat are dominant. This Dhammathat, besides being accepted as the leading authority, appears to deal with the subject more fully than any other.

This section sets out the rules for partition on divorce, and it has been urged that we should not apply to a question of inheritance the rules applicable to divorce. This argument seems to me to involve a misapprehension. If the wife has a vested interest in the property during the life of the husband that interest will not be affected by his death and cannot be considered as passing to her by inheritance, but on the husband's death she will take either the whole or a part of his interest as his heir. The part so received by her by way of inheritance will, of course, be chargeable with the husband's separate debts while the interest which she has all along held in her own right must be separately considered. The question, therefore, for decision is whether the property in question in the suit has come to her by inheritance or otherwise.

The Dhammathats frequently make use of the following terms:—

Payin—property possessed by either party before marriage.

Lettetpwa—property acquired during the continuance of the marriage.

Hanpazon—joint property.

Thinthi—separate property.

These terms are loosely used and are nowhere exhaustively defined. I shall come to some partial definitions later, but there seems to be no definition whatever of the thinthi of a husband or wife as between themselves. There are provisions regarding thinthi in Manugye X, 22, 23, 24 and 81, and in ss. 119 to 136 of Volume I of the Kinwun Mingyi's Digest of Buddhist Law but these relate to the thinthi of children as between them and their parents and lay down, generally speaking, that such thinthi is not to be included in the estate of the parents when that estate comes to be partitioned.

In view of the looseness of their use and the absence of precise definition too much weight should not be attached to the use of these terms in any particular context.

I come now to s. 3 of Book XII of Manugye. This section first sets out the rule for partition on divorce between a husband and wife, neither of whom has previously been married when both desire the divorce and no fault is attributable to either. Each party takes his own clothes and personal ornaments but, if these are materially more valuable than those of the other, one must compensate the other for the difference. Property acquired jointly is equally divided, but if there is property acquired separately by or through one party that party takes two shares and the other party one share.

There follow provisions regarding the children and the right of re-marriage, which need not be discussed.

Then comes a statement of the three kinds of property acquired separately by or through one party. This is first given generally—"property originally in possession (payin); property acquired by skill or science; and property given by the King." This is then slightly elaborated:—

(1) Property inherited before marriage from parents by the husband (or wife) when the wife (or husband) had no such property.

(2) Property acquired during the marriage by the skill or science of the husband (or wife).

(3) Property specially given to the one party by the King.

Two points may be noted here. The general classification refers to payin generally, that is all property possessed before marriage by the one party, but the more detailed statement would seem to limit this to inherited payin. This, however, is probably due to the fact that the marriage contemplated would probably take place at an age when neither party was likely to have acquired any property of importance by his own exertions. I think the most reasonable interpretation is that all payin is considered as acquired by the party possessing it before marriage.

Again, though property inherited before marriage is expressly included nothing is said about property inherited after marriage. It may be, in view of the following rules, that the omission was intentional and that property inherited after marriage, that is, after the couple had become one, was to be shared equally. But the Dhammathats are neither precise nor entirely consistent and I think that the safer interpretation would include this class of property among the property acquired by or through the one party.

It is noticeable that so far the word lettetpwa has not been used. The rules cover all property, whether acquired before or after marriage, of both parties. They thus disclose a very strong community of interest in the case of a first marriage and indicate that all property is joint, though the respective interests may vary in amount. This is entirely in accord with present day Burmese sentiment, which regards the union of a couple neither of whom has been married before (nge lin nge maya) as much more perfect and intimate than any other marriage.

The divorce being by mutual consent and without fault on either side it is equitable that neither party should suffer any material loss by the divorce. It reasonable, therefore, to presume that the mode of division is based on the relative interests of the parties during the continuance of the marriage.

We have next the rule when one party wishes to separate and the other does not, there still being no fault on either side. The party wishing to separate forfeits all the property except that specially given to him by the King and one set of wearing apparel, and must pay all the debts.

This rule strongly emphasises the community of interest and the closeness of the union. The party wishing to separate can only do so on forfeiting all the property, including his own payin, except the very limited class of royal gifts, and sufficient clothing to satisfy the requirements of decency.

Passing over the rule for a case in which one party is in fault we come to the rules for a husband and wife both of whom have been married before and to neither of whom is any fault attributable. If both wish to separate each party takes his own payin and the joint property is equally divided. But if one wishes to separate and the other does not, then the party not wishing* to separate takes all the joint property and the party who does wish to separate pays all the joint debts, while each party takes his own payin.

We are told that there are two kinds of "hnapzon lettetpwa (this being the first time that the word lettetpwa has been used), namely, (i) property or debts inherited during the marriage by one party from his parents, and (ii) property acquired by their joint exertions. And it is said "If the husband has inherited property from his parents it is more immediately his; let him have two shares of the property" and similarly for the wife.

Here we have it very clearly laid down that property inherited after marriage is joint property and that the inheriting party takes two shares to one for the other party.

The last paragraph of the section has given rise to much discussion. It refers again to three classes of property—royal gifts, payin and property inherited by either party during marriage and it says clearly that the profits from these are lettetpwa and to be divided accordingly.

There is some obscurity in this passage in regard to the three classes of property mentioned, and we have conflicting translations. Richardson makes it mean that these three classes of property themselves are also lettetpwa. This is undoubtedly wrong. The text cannot bear that meaning, which would also involve a contradiction of the preceding paragraph, which distinguishes payin from lettetwa.

The translator of the Digest (s. 264, Vol. II) renders it "Let each take the property given to him or her alone by the King, that brought by each to the marriage, and that inherited by each from his or her parents subsequent to the marriage." That, in my view, is also wrong. I do not think that the text bears that meaning, which also contradicts the preceding paragraph, which says that of property inherited during marriage the inheriting party takes two shares.

There are two other translations—in Jardine's Notes on Buddhist Law, II, Marriage, page 31, and by Sir G. Shaw in Mi Myin v. Nga Twe (5). Neither of these is entirely satisfactory and I am unable myself to suggest a correct translation for the obscure words "ayin ataing ti byi ywe." But both of these translations, I think, support the view that I take of the paragraph which is that it is meant only to explain that the profits from the three classes of property specified are lettetpwa and does not deal with the disposition of the original properties themselves—that having already been done.

In any case I should not be prepared to accept a passage of such obscurity as sufficient to override the very clear provisions by which it is immediately preceded.

It is to be noticed that these rules indicate a much lower degree of community of interest than in the case of a previously unmarried couple. This may be accounted for in part by the sentiment already mentioned, but there are other obvious reasons for the difference. In the case of a first marriage there are no interests to be considered other than those of the husband and wife and of their children. But when either or both have been married before, it is likely that there will be children of the first marriage and their interest also have to be considered. That is a very good reason for not giving to each spouse the same rights in the payin property of the other as are given on a first marriage.

---

* There is a misprint here in Richardson's translation, the "not" being omitted.

The rules in other Dhammathats given in the Digest differ sometimes from those of the Manugye, but I am unable to find anything to throw doubt on these rules in regard to the kind of property in question in this case, that is, property inherited during marriage.

In my view it is clearly shown that such property becomes lettetpwa or joint property immediately it accrues and that the interest of the inheriting party is two-thirds and that of the other party one-third. The interest is the same whether neither party has been married before or both have been married.

The intermediate case, in which one has been married before and the other has not, is not dealt with in the Dhammathats; but where the rule in the two extreme cases is the same, there is no difficulty in holding that it applies also to the middle case. It is not necessary, therefore, to decide which of two different rules is to be followed, but I wish to say that I am not satisfied that where the rules differ the one to be applied to the intermediate case is that for the case where neither party has been previously married. That has been held in Ma E Nyün v. Maung Tok Pyu (2) but the reasoning of Sir H. Thirkell White in that case seems to me to be based on a misconception of the reason for the differences in the rules. This decision was followed in Ma Ngwe Hnit v. Maung Po Hmu (3) but there were special circumstances in that case which rendered the decision at least equitable.

It has also been argued that what is joint property for the purposes of partition on divorce is not necessarily joint for the purposes of partition of inheritance. It is difficult to see any reason why there should be any such distinction; but cases have been cited in favour of this proposition. The first and most important of these is Shwe Ngon Ma v. Min Dwe (4) in which Sir J. Jardine said :—"My opinion as to the application of the definition in page 344 (Manugye XII, 3) to the present case is as follows :—

"The definition of jointly acquired property in that section is not made for the purpose of inheritance; it appears to me to relate only to the law of divorce and partition following divorce. The rules about partition and inheritance on the death of a relation make frequent and plain distinctions between ordinary joint acquisitions made by skill, science, thrift or trade, and the succession of the husband or wife to his or her relations' property. I instance s. 6 at page 272, s. 8 at page 273, mentioned by Mr. Sen, ss. 16 and 15 at page 276, as to children of surviving parents, which children have not received a share, s. 38 at page 286, where the ancestral property inherited by a husband is expressly said to be his and thus liable to equal division among wives, and s. 66, where the distinction is most plainly drawn." The sections quoted are all in Book X of the Manugye.

With the greatest respect for the high authority of Sir J. Jardine, whose judgments and whose Notes on Buddhist Law still stand in the front rank of authorities on that law, I am unable to follow this proposition, or to find in the sections mentioned anything entirely inconsistent with s. 3 of Book XII.

Section 6 deals with the case of a man marrying a second time, having a son by the first marriage. On the death of the father and step-mother the son takes all their property. But if the step-mother's parents have died and their property undivided is in her hands, the son takes only one-half of that property, the step-mother's relations taking the other half. But again, if the step-mother has died first the son takes all the inherited property which has been divided and has come into his father's hands. Of the undivided part he takes two shares and the step-mother's relations take one.

The main thing to be deduced from this would seem to be that inheritance was not regarded as vesting completely until partition, but I can see nothing to contradict the proposition that the husband acquires a vested interest as soon as the inheritance accrues to the wife.

Section 8 deals with partition between a step-father and his step-sons on the death of their mother. The step-father takes one-fourth of the mother's property and her sons three-fourths. But if the mother has inherited property during her second marriage, then the step father takes one-half of that property and the sons the other half.

This seems to me definitely to support the rule in Book XII, 3. Assuming that, under that rule as I have interpreted it, he had acquired a vested one-third interet in the inherited property, then he would keep that on his wife's death. On her two-thirds interest he would, under the rule in the first part of s. 8, take one-fourth, or one-sixth of the whole. This together with his own one-third makes the one-half allotted to him. The division is, therefore, arithmetically consistent with s. 3 of Book XII. See also Ma Nyein v. Ma Tha Gaung (13).

Sections 15 and 16 do not seem to have any bearing at all on the question. They deal with partition between the children and grandchildren of a single couple and make no distinction whatever between joint and separate property.

Section 38 deals with a husband having many wives of equal status. It says that property inherited by the husband after the marriages is his property and shall be divided equally among the wives. This is not inconsistent with the rules under discussion. The statement that it is the husband's property is made merely in disallowing a claim by any one wife that it was a gift to her by the husband, and does not justify an inference that the wives had no interest during the husband's lifetime.

In one respect this section does conflict with Book XII, 3. It says that each wife is to keep her own payin and the property inherited by her during marriage. But it is very likely that this was a measure of practical convenience only.

Section 66 deals with a man who has had either two or three wives and on his death leaves children by each. It says that the rule for division of property inherited by him in the time of his first wife is—

(1) where there have been two wives the children of the first wife take two shares and those of the second wife one share;

(2) where there have been three wives the children of the first wife take two shares and those of the other two wives take one share each.

It is also explained that if the property has come into possession of the husband during the time of the second or the third wife the division shall be similarly made. This can only mean that the children of the wife in whose time the inheritance accrued take the larger share.

This again seems to me definitely to corroborate the rules in XII, 3. I can imagine no reason for giving a larger share to the children in the time of whose mother the property accrued other than the fact that their mother acquired a vested interest in it. Moreover, in the case of the two families the division is again arithmetically consistent with the view that the wife's interest is one-third. Her children take that one-third as their mother's property and share the father's two-thirds equally with the children by the other wife. In the case of three marriages the division is not exactly correct arithmetically being in the proportion of 4 : 2: 3, whereas under the one-third rule it should be in the proportion of 5: 2: 2. The difference, however, is not great.

There is one part of the section which may be in conflict with the one-third rule. It is laid down that the children of each wife shall take their mother's separate hereditary property. Nothing is said as to the time of accrual of the inheritance, but it is probably intended to include all her inherited property.

Taking all these sections together I think that they tend rather to support than to contradict the rules in Book XII, 3. The inconsistencies are slight and may be attributed to considerations of practical convenience.

In my view, therefore, the definition of lettetpwa in Book XII, 3, is applicable to questions of inheritance as much as to questions of divorce.

There is no very direct authority for the case where there are two wives to justify us in allotting a larger share to two wives than to one, but Manugye X, 38 indicates that the two wives should share equally in the one-third interest, when both are of equal status.

The question of the liability of the interest of the wife for the separate debts of the husband is one rather of contract than of Buddhist Law and I can find no reason for holding that the wife's interest is so liable.

My answers to the questions referred are, therefore:—

(1) The property is the lettetpwa of the marriages and is joint property of the husband and wives and not the property of the husband.

(2) The share of the two wives jointly is one-third and since they are of equal status the share of each is one-sixth.

(3) Each wife acquires a vested interest in one-sixth of the property from the date on which it is inherited, and that interest is not liable for any part of the debts incurred by the deceased husband alone.

Robinson, C. J.—The questions have been so thoroughly discussed by my learned brothers and as the results arrived at agree with the result at which I had arrived after discussion, I do not think I need do more than express my concurrence.

I am of the same opinion.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES NOS. 3, 5 AND 7 OF 1923.

July 8, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Adami and Mr. Justice Sen.

MONOMOHINI DASI—APPELLANT

versus

HARI PRASAD BOSE—RESPONDENT.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 17—Guardianship of adopted son—Matters to be considered—Natural father, whether proper person to be guardian—Guardian, whether must live with minor.

In appointing a guardian to the adopted son of a deceased Hindu the first consideration of the Court must be with regard to the interest and the welfare of the minor and the Court must next see how far the intentions of the adoptive father can be best carried out. [p. 808, col. 2.]

The object of an adoption by a Hindu is to affiliate the adopted boy into his family, to disassociate him completely from his natural father and family. The adopted boy is to become a member of the adoptive family to own the adoptive father and the adoptive mother as his parents and the relations of the adoptive family as his own relations; all traces of relationship with the natural parents or their relations have to be effaced. The adopted boy must, therefore, be reared up in sentiments such as the adoptive father wants him to imbibe. Care must, therefore, be taken in appointing the guardian of an adopted son after the death of the adoptive father, that the intentions of the adoptive father should not be frustrated, and if a suitable person is forthcoming from among the members of the adoptive father's family to act as the guardian of the minor, the natural father of the minor should not be appointed his guardian. [p. 809, col. 2.]

In the absence of the adoptive mother, the adoptive grandmother of the minor should be appointed as guardian in preference to the natural father. [p. 811, col. 1.]

It is desirable that the person who is appointed the guardian of a minor should live with him and look after him and attend to his daily needs. [p. 810, col. 2.]

Appeals from a decision of the District Judge, Cuttack, dated the 4th June 1923.

FACTS.—One Nand Kumar Bose died in 1902 leaving behind him his widow Sarojini Dasi, his mother Monomohini Dasi and a sister and one or two other relatives. By his Will he gave an authority to his wife to adopt a son to him, and in case of her failure to adopt, he authorised his mother to adopt a son to him; if no adoption was made, or if made, the adoptee did not survive, he empowered his executors, also named in the Will, to dedicate all his assets to certain defined charitable purposes. In 1915, the widow adopted one of the sons of the respondent, Hari Prasad Bose, a child at that time only 6 months of age, without objection from the executors one of whom was Jagat Ballav Ghose, her father. The adopted son was re-named Krishna Kumar at the time of adoption. The widow died in 1922 and the natural father of the minor adoptee applied to be appointed guardian of his person and property. This application was opposed among others, by Monomohini, Jagat Ballav, and by the executors as such, all of whom put in separate applications for the guardianship of the person and properties of the minor.

The learned District Judge rejected the applications of all but the natural father of the minor whom he appointed as guardian of his person and the executors who were appointed guardians of his property.

The application of Monomohini was rejected on the ground that the minor was of the age of receiving education and that the applicant was too old to look after him properly. He gave preference to the claim of the natural father stating that he was bound to the minor by the ties of natural affection and that the interests of the other applicants were more or less adverse to the minor. The paternal grandmother and maternal grandfather of the adoptee, and the executors filed separate appeals.

JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—[His Lordship, after stating the facts, proceeded:—]Our first consideration must be with regard to the interest and the welfare of the minor, and, after that, we have to see how far the intentions of the adoptive father can be best carried out.

With regard to the welfare of the minor, it seems to me that there is not much difference between the various applicants if they do their duty. It is important that the boy should be given an education to fit him for his position as a member of the family of Nand Kumar who was a man of some wealth, leaving property valued at five lakhs. It is important then that he should be sent to a good school at Cuttack, and, as a matter of fact, since his appointment as guardian, Hari Prasad has kept the boy at the Ravenshaw College with a tutor guardian appointed by the District Judge. But Monomohini or Jagat Ballav or the executors would have been able to do, and probably would have done, exactly the same, and as a matter of fact, Jagat Ballav lives in Cuttack and has a house where the boy could be kept, while Hari Prasad lives at Bahukud and a house has to be engaged for the minor.

The next question is whether by the appointment of Hari Prasad as guardian of the minor, the full intentions of Nand Kumar are being carried out. The learned District Judge has relied on the case of Ganga Prasad Bhattacharyya v. Hara Kanta Chowdhury (1). There one Brojo Mohan Roy died leaving a widow, a minor son and two daughters; the son died and the widow adopted the minor son of Hara Kanta. On the widow's death, Hara Kanta, the natural father, applied to be appointed guardian of the person and property of the minor. An executor appointed under Brojo Mohan Roy's Will opposed the application with regard to the property and two brothers of the widow and one of her two daughters opposed the application with regard to the guardianship of the person. It was argued that the natural father of the minor adopted boy was not fit to be appointed as guardian of his person since by adoption the minor was cut off from all relationship with his natural family and by leaving him in the custody of his natural father the ties with his adoptive family would be severed. Sharfuddin, J., in that case held that the natural father was properly appointed guardian of the person of the adopted boy: but that case is distinguishable from the present one, for there the two daughters who applied were both married into other families, while the brothers of the widow were not members of the family of the adoptive father, so that there was no member of the adoptive father's family alive. In the present case the paternal grandmother Monomohini is alive and ordinarily she would be the proper guardian of the boy. It appears too that in that case the learned Judge considered that the words, in cl. (2) of s. 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act, VIII of 1890

"Any existing or previous relations of the proposed guardian with the minor or his property" would cover the case of a natural father with regard to his son who had been adopted. It is clear, I think, that in that clause relation does not mean relationship. It seems that if the adopted boy is again put in charge of his natural father all the objects of the adoption are lost; he will not be likely to keep the traditions of the family of his adoption and he will be brought up in the traditions of his natural father's family and will be likely, when, he grows up, to repudiate all relationship with the adoptive father's family. Thus the intention of the adoptive parents would be frustrated.

In Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 24 of 1924*, which came before Jwala Prasad and Kulwant Sahay, JJ., in connection with the present dispute, subsequent to the order passed by the District Judge from which these appeals have been lodged, Jwala Prasad, J., said:—

"The boy was six months old when he was adopted and had been living in the adoptive family up to the death of his adoptive mother in the year 1922 for a period of about 8 or 9 years. The boy had developed affection for the adoptive grandmother to such an extent that it was difficult for the District Judge to enforce his order to hand over the boy to the natural father.................The object of adoption by Nand Kumar Bose was to affiliate the boy into his family and to disassociate himself completely from his natural father and family. The boy is to become a member of the adoptive family and to own the adoptive father and the adoptive mother as his parents and the relations of the adoptive family as his own relations. All traces of relationship with the natural parents or their relations had to be effaced."

Speaking of the tutor who happened to be appointed, Jwala Prasad, J., said—

"He should have reared up sentiments such as the adoptive father wanted to imbibe him with. The District Judge should not encourage any foreign tendencies being developed in the boy; and when such matters are brought to his notice he should see that such sentiments are soon destroyed and not allowed to grow.................If the boy is not shaped from now to take his proper position in the adoptive family, after he comes of age he will be totally lost to the family and perhaps he would like to go back to the natural father and that might be the game which the natural father is perhaps now trying to play."

*See Manmohini Dasi v. Hari Prasad Bose; 81 Ind. Cas. 1045.—[Ed].

In my opinion, in this case, the intentions of the adoptive father would be frustrated if the boy is allowed to remain in charge of Hari Prasad.

The evidence of the letters on the record show clearly that Hari Prasad had been even before the birth of this boy turning his attention to the property of Nand Kumar. We find that sometime before the birth of the boy, Hari Prasad had procured, through his servant, a copy of Nand Kumar's Will: the date of the delivery of the copy shows this fact. The letters too show that between 1913 and 1917, Hari Prasad was in communication with Sarojini and advising her behind the back of Jagat Ballav Ghose how to deal with her father and to persuade him to do what Sarojini and he himself wished. His application to be made the guardian of the person and property of the minor also points in the same direction. In the letter (Ex. C) it is quite evident that Hari Prasad was trying to get Sarojini to force her father to comply with her demands by threats; he advised her to tell her father that if he and Benode Lal remained guardians he Hari Babu would get the estate put under the Court of Wards and would have all his accounts examined from the date when the estate came into his hands. The letter shows too that Hari Prasad was trying to put Jagat Ballav on the horns of a dilemma. It is unnecessary to quote from all the letters; many of them especially those from Kali Shankar Roy are quite irrelevant; but they do show that there was a good deal of scheming going on with the object of getting the property out of the hands of the executors. It is true that Hari Prasad has a certain amount of property paying Government revenue of Rs. 1,700 a year, but there is suspicion in my mind that his desire to become guardian of the person of the minor is prompted not so much by natural affection as by a desire to intermeddle with the property and obtain a profit therefrom.

When the executors required an ekrarnamah to be executed at the time of the adoption, Hari Prasad appears to have altered or objected to some of the wording, and it is doubtful whether he really had power to execute the ekrarnamah on behalf of his minor son. It is useless to speak of natural affection on the part of the father who allows a son to be adopted into another family six months after that son's birth. I am, therefore, of opinion that Hari Prasad was not a proper person to be appointed guardian of the person of the son he had given in adoption to another.

It remains to consider the claims of the three other applicants, namely, Monmohini Jagat Ballav Ghose and the two executors.

With regard to the application of the two executors jointly, I do not think that it is proper that it should be granted. It is necessary that the person who is appointed guardian of the minor should live with him and look after him and attend to his daily needs. The two executors could not do this properly; besides there is the objection, which has been considered by the District Judge and accepted, that the two executors under the Will would have the disposing power over the properties of Nand Kumar on the death of the minor. It seems that these executors, under the terms of Will, could not be said to be the presumptive heirs. There is no reasonable ground before us for suspicion or fear that men of the age of Jagat Ballav and Benode Lal, who have up to the present managed the property carefully and well, would have any thought of bringing an end to the life of the minor or of doing anything disadvantageous to him. Jagat Ballav Ghose is an old man of about 75 and it is not likely that he would covet in any way the property of the minor.

With regard to the application by Jagat Ballav alone, the remarks I have made with regard to the two executors apply. It may be that there is little likelihood that Jagat Ballav would be moved by any interest adverse to the minor, but he is not a member of Nand Kumar's family though he is the father of the minor's adoptive mother. In my opinion it is preferable that in a case like this the same person should not be guardian both of the property and person of the minor.

We come next to the application of Monomohini and this application, I think, should have been granted by the District Judge. The objections put forward against her are merely to the effect that she is old, somewhat weak-minded, and has lost all interest in wordly affairs. That she has been fond of the minor is not denied, and that he was fond of her. He had lived with her ever since Sarojini's death and had been in the house with her previous to that. The evidence as to the state of Monomohini's mind is very vague; it is merely said that she is crazy; but the chief witness who gives evidence as to this is a Sub-Inspector of Schools who has never been posted in the Bhukud Circle and seems to have little opportunity of forming an opinion. From the manner in which she has applied to be made guardian and her subsequent applications to be allowed to see the boy, it would appear that she is by no means of weak intellect. As I have said before, she would ordinarily be the proper person to be appointed guardian of the person of the minor, being the paternal grandmother. Furthermore, it is quite evident from the Will by which she was empowered to adopt a son to Nand Kumar on the failure of adoption by Sarojini, that Nand Kumar placed full confidence and trust in her and would have liked her to act as the mother of a boy adopted to him. She will live in Cuttack and be able to look after the boy and will have the advice and help of competent advisers. It is true that she is old but she may have many years to live yet, and I have no doubt as to her competence. In my mind she is the right person to be appointed the guardian of the person of Krishna Kumar Bose, the minor.

To ensure the welfare of the minor and his interest, it will be necessary that the boy be kept at school and be properly educated at the Ravenshaw College or some other good school and that he be put in the care of a tutor-guardian for this purpose. If in the opinion of the District Judge the present tutor-guardian is no longer suitable owing to his want of sympathy with Monomohini Dasi, it will be necessary to dismiss him and appointed another tutor.

I would set aside the order of the learned District Judge and allow the appeal of Monomohini Dasi, and direct that she be appointed the guardian of the person of the boy. The appeals of the other appellants will be dismissed.

The District Judge will call upon Hari Prasad Bose to make over the boy to Srimati Monomohini Dasi.

Srimati Monomohini Dasi will get her costs in both the Courts.

Sen, J.—I agree.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs who were mortgagees in respect of a certain taluk sued on their mortgages and obtained a preliminary mortgage-decree on the 17th January 1916, and a final decree on the 9th June 1917. On the 26th April 1916 the landlords instituted a suit for rent in respect of the taluk and obtained a rent-decree on the 1st September 1916, and in execution of the said decree purchased the taluk on the 11th August 1917 and the plaintiffs deposited the decretal amount on the 11th September 1917 under O. XXI, r. 89, C. P. C., and got the sale set aside. On the 24th October 1916, the defendant No. 1 purchased the taluk from the mortgagors, the defendants Nos. 2 to 5, and on the 8th February 1918 the defendant No. 1 paid up the sum due on the final mortgage-decree. On the 14th September 1920 the plaintiff instituted the present suit for recovery of the amount deposited by him to set aside the sale of the 11th August 1917. The plaintiff has been successful in both the Courts below. The defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

The principal contention urged on behalf of the appellant is that s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act is not applicable and, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to be re-imbursed. The basis of this contention is the argument that defendant No. 1 was not bound by law to pay the back rents for which the decree had been obtained by the landlords in execution of which the landlords had purchased, and to set aside which sale the plaintiff had made the deposit. It is urged that although rent forms the first charge on the tenure the defendant No. 1 who was a subsequent purchaser at a private sale was not bound to pay the rent which was due for a period antecedent to his purchase, firstly in law, and, secondly, according to the terms of his purchase; and if that be so s. 69 will not apply as the expression 'bound by law' implies a personal liability. In support of this contention as to the interpretation of the expression 'bound by law' reliance has been placed upon the decision in the case of Gangadas Bhattar v. Jogendra Nath Mitter (1), wherein at page 412* the following observations were made: "It is not also disputed, that the mortgage under which the plaintiffs claim has been saved by this payment quite as much as the mortgage under which the defendants claim. But it is not sufficient to impose a liability upon the plaintiffs, as they are not the persons who were bound by law to pay the money within the meaning of s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act. The rent was due for a period, when the mortgagors and the purchasers from them were in possession and the plaintiffs as 1st mortgagees were not under any liability to pay the rent due to the superior landlord any more than the second mortgagees". All that that case means to lay down is that payments made by a 2nd mortgagee to save the mortgaged property from sale in execution of a decree for rent obtained by that zemindar against the mortgagor cannot be recovered from the 1st mortgagee as the latter is not bound under s. 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to pay the rent due by the mortgagor to the zemindar. Reliance has also been placed upon the decisions in the cases of Boja Sellappa Reddy v. Vridhachala Reddy (2), and Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan (3), where an unregistered owner of a land was held not bound to pay the revenue due on the land under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act II of 1864. The meaning of the expression has been explained in a decision of this Court in the case of Mothooranath Chuttopadhya v. Kristokumar Ghose (4) and it was held that s. 69 of Act IX of 1872 was intended to include cases not only of personal liability but all liabilities to payment for which owners of lands are indirectly liable, when such liabilities are imposed on lands held by them. That was a case where two persons, on different dates, purchased different portions of a property on which there was a mortgage, and on the mortgagee obtaining a decree against the property, one of them paid off the entire debt and brought a suit against the other for contribution, and it was held that he was entitled to recover notwithstanding that in the deed of sale the person who had made the payment had given an undertaking that he would discharge all the liabilities of the mortgagor including the mortgage on the property. In this case reference was made to the illustration to the section as militating against the contention that the section was limited to the case of a personal liability of the person against whom re-imbursement was claimed. In the case of Chandradaya Sen v. Bhagaban Chandra Sen (5) the above decision was followed and it was held that s. 69 was intended to include the cases not only of personal liability, but all liabilities for payments for which owners were indirectly liable, those liabilities being imposed upon by the lands held by them. This was a case in which a purchaser in execution of a mortgage-decree was held bound to pay the arrears of rent for which a decree had been obtained by the landlord prior to his purchase. On principle there does not appear to be anything differentiating this case from that of a purchaser at a private sale, and it must accordingly be held that the defendant No. 1 was bound by law to pay off the decretal debt. The appellant's contention that his purchase, upon the terms of his kobala, was free from liability for the back rents cannot help him as his liability for the rent remained, notwithstanding this stipulation, even if there was any such stipulation—though such a stipulation will perhaps enable him to recover the amount from his vendor.

It is next contended that the plaintiff should have added the amount which he had paid to his mortgage-debt and not having done so he is precluded from recovering it in a separate suit. For this proposition reference has been made to certain decisions, which, however, do not prohibit the institution of a separate suit for the purpose. On the other hand there is abundant authority for the proposition that a mortgagee who has given up his mortgage lien, might bring a simple suit for money for the purpose of recovering the money paid by him to save the property : Lachman Singh v. Salig Ram (6) and Anandi Ram v. Dur Najaf Ali Begum (7) and the same view receives support from the decision of the Privy Council in Nagenderchunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kaminee Dossee (8).

The appellant's last objection relates to the form of the decree that has been passed in the suit. The decree runs thus:—"That the suit be decreed in part. The plaintiffs shall get Rs. 127 for the lands of Schedule No. 2; Rs. 211 for the lands of Schedule No. 4 and Rs. 227-10 for those of Schedule No. 5 of the plaint, and proportionate costs of this suit. These sums must be paid by the defendants within one month, failing which these properties or sufficient parts thereof shall be sold". It is conceded on behalf of the respondent that in view of the facts of the case the directions in the latter part of the above decretal order cannot stand. They will accordingly be expunged and a simple decree for money for a sum of Rs. 565-10 should be recorded instead.

The appeal, therefore, fails subject to the modification noted above, but in the circumstances each party should pay his own costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE PATNA HIGH COURT.

Present:—Viscount Dunedin, Lord Blanesburgh and Sir John Edge.

SOURENDRA MOHAN SINHA AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS
versus
HARI PRASAD SINHA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Privy Council—Variation of its own orders—Practice—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r. 15 (1)—Failure of party entrusted with order to lodge it—Remedy.

It is only in exceptional circumstances that Privy Council varies its own orders.

If the party to whom an order of the Privy Council is entrusted delays or refuses to lodge it in the High Court concerned, the remedy of the person desiring execution of the order is an application under r. 15 (1), O. XLV, C. P. C., to the High Court for a summary order on the defaulting party to lodge the order and not a petition to the Privy Council for variation of the previous order.

Mr. S. Hyam, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. R. Lowndes and E. B. Raikes, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Viscount Dunedin.—This is an application to vary the order in Council. The order has been already passed and it could only be under exceptional circumstances that their Lordships could humbly advise that another order should be passed.

In the suit judgment was given for the plaintiffs against the defendants for a certain sum.

On appeal to the King in Council their Lordships humbly advised His Majesty to reduce substantially the sum for which judgment had been given, and to make the sum still decreed payable eight months after the date of the receipt of the order by the High Court.

The defendants having been substantially successful in the appeal, the order in Council in accordance with the ordinary practice was issued to them: and in ordinary course ought to have been lodged by them in the High Court. They have not, however, done so, and the plaintiffs cannot, therefore, so far get execution. Hence this application. The plaintiffs and petitioners have not sufficiently adverted to O. XLV, r. 15 (1) of the First Schedule to the C. P. C. When they found that the defendants were delaying or refusing to lodge the order they could have applied to the High Court with a certified copy of the order and asked for a summary order on the defendants to lodge the order which had been entrusted to them so that execution might follow in terms of the judgment of this Board. This they can still do. Their Lordships, therefore, cannot advise His Majesty to grant the prayer of the petitioners: but as they are clearly of opinion that it was the duty of the defendants in ordinary course to lodge the order there will be no costs allowed on the petition.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

IN THE MATTER OF PAUPER MISCELLANEOUS CASE No. 3 OF 1923.
June 25, 1924.
Present:—Mr. Justice Adami and
Mr. Justice Sen.
RAJENDRA PRASAD BOSE—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT
versus
GOPAL PRASAD BOSE—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIV, r. 1—Application for leave to appeal as pauper—Application, when can be entertained—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 90—Document deposited with Collector—Production after 30 years—Presumption.

An Appellate Court is entirely precluded from admitting an application for leave to appeal as pauper unless it is satisfied that the decree sought to be appealed against is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. The direction contained in the proviso to r. 1 of O. XLIV of the C. P. C. to that effect is mandatory. [p. 814, col. 2.]

The mere fact of a certain document having been produced from a Court where it had been filed, does not necessarily bring that document within the requirements of s. 90 of the Evidence Act. The application of this proposition, however, depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. [p. 815, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Hindu who died suddenly of cholera was alleged to have left an anumatipatra authorising his widow to make an adoption to him and also a Will. His father who arrived at the place where the death had taken place ten days after the date of the death, obtained the two documents from a servant of the deceased and deposited them with the Collector of the District with a request that the estate of the deceased may be taken under the management of the Court of Wards. The documents remained in the custody of the Collector for 54 years, and were then produced in Court in the course of a litigation between the reversioners of the deceased and a person who had been adopted by the widow of the deceased under the authority contained in the anumatipatra:

Held, that under the circumstances the Court was entitled to accept the documents as presumably genuine under the provisions of s. 90 of the Evidence Act. [p. 815, col. 2.]

FACTS.—Plaintiffs were allowed to sue in forma pauperis. Their suit having been dismissed, they filed an application for leave to appeal as paupers.

Mr. S. C. Chatterji, for the Applicants.

Mr. J. N. Bose (with him Mr. G. C. Ray), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Sen, J.—[After stating facts, the judgment proceeded:—] The judgment was passed on the 6th August 1923. In the ordinary course of things the application which was to have been made within thirty days from the date of the decree should have been made on the 5th of November, that is, the date of the opening of the High Court. But under a certain misapprehension the application could not be submitted before the 12th of November. There are, therefore, two points for consideration in this case. The first is whether the case satisfies the requirements of the proviso to O. XLIV, r. 1, of the C. P. C., and, secondly, whether extension of time can be allowed under s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

As regards the first point, it seems to us that we are entirely precluded from admitting the application unless we are satisfied that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. Those being the express words of the section, it seems to us that the direction is mandatory.

Three points have been urged by the learned Vakil for the applicants, Mr. S. C. Chatterji, in order to support his contention that the case satisfies the requirements of the proviso to r. 1 of O. XLIV.

Before I enter upon a consideration of those points, it is necessary to state in brief the nature of the suit and the points of contention between the parties.

The suit was instituted by the plaintiffs for the recovery of possession of extensive properties of the value of over two lakhs as reversioners upon the death of one Allahadini Dasi in September 1920. One Ram Prasad Bose died on the 16th of February 1869, leaving, as it is alleged by the defendants, a deed of anumatipatra duly executed as also a Will. He died rather suddenly on the day aforementioned having been stricken with cholera. It is said that as he was very anxious to see that his line was continued after his death, he took particular care to have a deed of anumatipatra executed on that date. After his death, on the 26th of February, his father Golak Prasad Bose, who had been in the interior of the district, hurried to Balasore, the place where his son had suddenly died, and obtained from an old and faithful servant of his son the deed of anumatipatra and the Will and on that date, namely, the 26th February 1869, he deposited these two documents with the Collector of the District together with an application praying that the Court of Wards might take over charge of the whole of the estate. Thereupon, it is said, an order was passed by the Collector on that very day in the following terms:

"Two documents filed along with a petition; not to be given to anybody until further orders."

These two documents lay in the Collector's office all these years and it was after repeated applications by the defendants that they succeeded in obtaining a production of these documents from the Collector's office at the trial of the suit.

It was contended by the plaintiffs at the trial that both these documents were forged and fabricated, that in point of fact Ram Prasad Bose was too ill on that day to be able to execute them, that he had no sound disposing capacity, that no adoption ever took place in pursuance of the instrument of anumatipatra, and that the contention that the adopted son, and since his death his son the present defendant, had been in possession of the estate was entirely a myth, the person who had been in possession being Sreemati Allahadini Dasi the widow of Ram Prasad, deceased.

Mr. Chatterji has raised three points before us: the first is that the instrument of anumatipatra has not been produced from proper custody and, therefore, should not have been admitted as evidence under the provisions of s. 90 of the Evidence Act. In support of this contention he cites the ruling in Gadadhur Paul Chowdkry v. Bhyrub Chunder Bhuttacharji (1) where there is an observation that the mere fact of a certain document having been produced from a Court where it had been filed does not necessarily bring that document within the requirements of s. 90. As a general proposition we have no doubt that it is perfectly correct but it depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. In the present instance we find that this document was submitted to the Magistrate and Collector with the express purpose that he might take the necessary steps in order to bring the estate under the management of the Court of Wards. It cannot be doubted that it is the Collector who is the person to be approached in the first instance for any such proceeding. The Collector records an order which on the face of it does not at all appear to throw any doubt upon the genuineness of the document. It is contended by Mr. Chatterji that the very fact that such an order was passed would show that the Collector doubted the genuineness of the document; but it seems to us that unless there is some evidence to that effect it is difficult to construe the order in that sense. In the above circumstances, the Court below was apparently entitled to accept the document, 54 years old, as presumably genuine under the provisions of s. 90 of the Evidence Act.

The second point that is raised by Mr. Chatterji is that the anumatipatra is a forged document. Now there are two grounds that he advances in support of this proposition. The first ground is that when a man is stricken down with a fell disease like cholera, it is impossible for him to think rationally or to act rationally, and that it would, therefore, be unnatural if not impossible for him to execute a document of this character.

Now it is clear that for a Hindu at the moment of his death to realize that there is no one who can continue his line after him, is a very strong incentive for making due provision for adoption, and although it cannot be doubted that cholera is a disease which would very greatly impede a person's action in a serious matter such as this, it is also important to remember that in the circumstances of this case it would not be at all unnatural or improbable that he would strain all his nerves and take all the necessary steps to continue his line. The instrument of anumatipatra runs as follows:

"In the present situation I find it absolutely necessary that some one should be taken as an adopted son or snehaputra, so I, of my free-will and in a sound state of mind, authorize you, my wife Allahadini Dasi, to adopt a son, that is to say, my father's youngest son nick-named Chemo should be adopted for enjoyment and possession of my following properties after my death. Should there be any legal bar to take him as an adopted son, in that case you are to make him a snehaputra otherwise (or else) you are to adopt some other boy according to your liking or choice but with the opinion (or approval) of my father."

(1) 5 C. 918; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1193.

From the terms of the anumatipatra it will be seen that there was an anxiety on his part to have a son adopted. There were, no doubt, certain restrictions laid down in the anumatipatra with which I shall have occasion to deal later with reference to another objection raised by Mr. Chatterji. We are not in a position to come to a conclusion that the determination of this point by the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong. We are inclined to think that there is nothing in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, so far as it respects this issue, which can be open to the charge of being manifestly wrong or unjust. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken great pains to show that the charge of forgery has been, for the first time, seriously brought forward now There was a suit in the year 1894 by Sananda Prasad, the full brother of the present plaintiff, and there is also a statement of plaintiff No. 2 Sananda Prasad, otherwise called Chemo, that he and his other full brothers really litigated their claim through Sananda in that suit. That being so, it is very striking that in that suit there was no charge of forgery brought forward against this instrument of anumatipatra. Upon these and other considerations the learned Subordinate Judge, after having carefully surveyed the evidence, has come to the conclusion that he would not be justified in declaring the instrument of anumatipatra to be a forgery, and we do not think that we can take exception to that finding at this stage.

The last objection which the learned Vakil has put forward is that even conceding that the instrument was genuine, the actual adoption of Krishna Prasad Bose was not in accordance with the anumatipatra, and that, on the contrary, it was in direct violation of the terms of the anumatipatra.

The authority to adopt distinctly states that the plaintiff No. 2 known as Chemo should have the first chance of being adopted provided that there was nothing illegal in such adoption, and failing him some other boy according to the liking or choice of Allahadini Dasi might be adopted but with the opinion or approval of the father, Golak Prasad.

Now it so happened that Golak Prasad died four years after the death of Ram Prasad, that is to say, in 1873, and it was not till the year 1884 that the adoption took place. It is also proved in the case that Allahadini Dasi was a mere girl, a minor of tender years, at the time when Golak Prasad died. Subsequently she found that there were troubles with regard to the estate and there were conflicting claims set up by other parties and with a view to set at rest all these disputes she thought that she would exercise the power given to her under the instrument to adopt. At that time the condition which was laid down in the anumatipatra that the approval and the opinion of the father should be obtained was impossible of performance. The question is whether in the circumstances the power to adopt failed altogether. The learned Subordinate Judge has held to the contrary and he has given his reasons which appear to be quite cogent and we do not see any reason to dissent from his view, unless and until all the evidence is placed before us at the time of the hearing of the appeal.

All that we are concerned with at the present moment is whether on the face of them the judgment and decree are erroneous or unjust. We feel constrained to say that we are not in a position to take that view. If the appeal is heard as an ordinary appeal it will be for the Court, before which it comes, to form its own conclusions upon all the evidence placed before it. In the view that we take, the application must be dismissed on this ground, and, therefore, we do not think it necessary at all to deal with the other matter, namely, as to the extension of time under s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

Hindu Law—Succession—Father's sister's son and maternal uncle, preference between.

Under the Hindu Law prevailing in the Bombay Presidency the father's sister's son is a preferential heir to the maternal uncle of the deceased. [p. 820, col. 1; p. 823, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge at Thana, in Appeal No. 52 of 1922, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge at Panvel, in Civil Suit No. 270 of 1921.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondents.

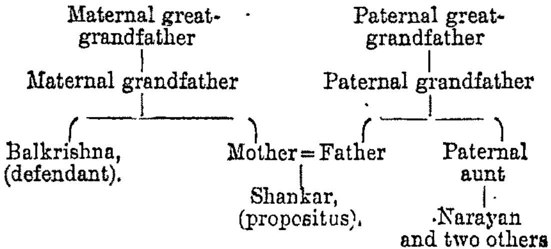
JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs in this suit sued for the possession and income of certain property, claiming to be the heirs as the paternal aunt's sons of one Shankar Balkrishna who died in 1918 unmarried; the defendant resisted the claim on the ground that as the maternal uncle of the deceased, he was the nearest heir.

The following pedigree shows the relationship of the parties and their ancestors:



The Trial Judge without giving any reasons said that the plaintiffs were the preferential heirs of the deceased and passed a decree in their favour.

The defendant appealed.

The Joint Judge said "The appellant as well as the respondents are sapindas to the deceased Shankar. Unquestionably the maternal uncle stands nearer to Shankar by sapinda relationship than the respondents. This is one of the grounds on which the maternal uncle should be preferred to the respondents. The other ground, viz., the doctrine of spiritual benefit proceeds upon the right to perform the parvana shraddha." He then considered, as the maternal uncle offered the pinda to the maternal grandfather and great-grandfather of Shankar, while the plaintiff offered the pinda to the paternal grandfather and great-grandfather of Shankar, and as Shankar was bound to offer the pinda to both his paternal and maternal ancestors that it would be difficult to determine the question who would confer the greater spiritual benefit on the deceased Shankar. He decided in favaur of the maternal uncle as Shankar would be under the obligation to offer the pinda to his maternal uncle while there was no obligation to offer the pinda to the paternal aunt's sons.

Accordingly the appeal was allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

The plaintiffs and defendant are atma-bandhus of the deceased. The question to which of two contesting atma-bandhus preference should be given is always arising, and though there is no dispute as to the texts which are applicable it has been found impossible by the Courts to lay down any common rules of inheritance which would enable the dispute between any possible pair of claimants to be decided.

Mr. Mulla in his Principles of Hindu Law gives a list of forty-two male atma-bandhus besides female bandhus and has endeavoured to state the rules which govern succession amongst them, but these rules, as he points out in his latest edition, are subject to alterations as the result of judicial decisions.

In Saguna v. Sadashiv (1) there was a contest between the father's half-sister and the maternal brother. The case came from Ratnagiri where the Mitakshara prevails.

According to the Vyavahara Mayukha the father's sister is a gotraja sapinda but it is not clear whether under the Mitakshara as interpreted in the Bombay Presidency she is a gotraja sapinda or a bandhu. Sir Lawrence Jenkins considered it unnecessary to decide this question as it was sufficient to say she was not more remote than a bandhu. He then dealt with the argument based on the decision in Narasimma v. Mangammal (2) that except where females were specially mentioned priority was given to male heir. It was conceded that as between heirs of the same line preference was given to males but that as between different lines of heirs sex had no place as a determining factor. The fact that the mother was given preference to the father in heirship to the son was not considered as influencing succession where the contest lay between those claiming through the father and those claiming through the mother. If there had to be a choice between the analogy furnished by the order of succession as between father and mother directly on the one hand, and by the order of succession as between pitru bandhus and matru-bandhus on the other, the choice would fall on the latter as being the closer, and for what it was worth the conclusion to which that led was in correspondence with the orders on which those internal lines were enumerated in the text cited by Vijnanesvara: "The sons of his own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister and the sons of his own maternal uncle must be considered as his own cognate kindred." That was supported by the opinion attributed to Balambhatta who contended that the father should have precedence over the mother "upon the analogy of more distant kindred, where the paternal line has invariably the preference before maternal kindred." It was, therefore, held that as between the deceased's own bandhus, those connected through the father were to be preferred to those connected through the mother. It will be noted that no mention was made of the question whether the spiritual benefit conferred upon the propositus by rival bandhus was to be considered as a ground of preference.

In Veeachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3) the contest was between the maternal uncle and the paternal aunt's grandson. The appeal came from the Madras High Court and their Lordships reviewed in an exhaustive manner the whole question of the order of succession amongst bandhus. The head-note* to the report does not seem to be absolutely correct as it can only be inferred from their Lordships' judgment that they disapproved of the decisions in Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliyar (4) and Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (5) so far as they held that among bandhus of the same class those ex parte paterna are to be preferred to those ex parte materna. Their lordships said (p. 359*): "Recent writers on Hindu Law have divided each class of bandhus into two sub-classes respectively designated as cognates ex parte paterna, and cognates ex parte materna. This sub-division is evidently based on an inference from the order in which the several bandhus are mentioned in the illustrative enumeration. For instance, among the atma-bandhus enumerated, the name of the father's sister's son is first given; then comes the mother's sister's son; and after him, the son of the mother's brother...From this it has been inferred that the expounder of the rule in question intended that each class should be divided into two sub-classes according to the side of relationship, and that in every case preference should be given to the father's side. Their Lordships, again, in the view they take of the rights of the parties in the present case, do not think it necessary to express an opinion how far this proposition is in conformity with the express rule that in each class propinquity should be the governing factor." Their Lordships then considered various Madras decisions: Narasimma v. Mangammal (2), where the maternal uncle was preferred to the father's sister; Chinnammal v. Venkatachala (6), where the maternal grandfather was preferred to the father's sister: Muthusami v. Muthukumarasami (7), where the mother's half-brother was preferred to the father's paternal aunt; Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliyar (4) where the paternal uncle's daughter's son was preferred to the sister's daughter and the mother's sister's sons and Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (5) where the sister's son's son was preferred to the maternal uncle's son. Among other reasons for the conclusion in that case it was stated at the end of the judgment (page 349†): "Another fundamental principle of the law in favour of the third defendant's preferable right is that among bandhus of a class those who are ex parte paterna take before bandhus ex parte materna." The learned Judges relied on this division of atma-bandhus into those two sub classes in para. 593 of the Sarasvati Vilasa (Setlur's Collection of Hindu Law Books on Inheritance, page 184): "Nor could it be urged here that the mother being nearer than the father, the matru-bandhus take the wealth before the pitru-bandhus. From the text, 'of these the mother is more important than the father,' (2) the mother's precedence alone is stated and not that of the mother's bandhus. Therefore, we think it sound that the matru-bandhus should take the wealth only after the pitru-bandhus." Their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked that a very small consideration would show that that passage had nothing to do with the members of the same class inter se. It only explained why pitru-bandhus were to be preferred to matru-bandhus, the mother's position being special to herself under an express rule.

In the end their Lordships, after considering the texts, the commentaries, the judicial decisions and the view of modern writers, fell back on the four propositions in Muthusami v. Muthukumarasami (7), which, as a matter of fact, give one very little assistance in deciding in a particular case which of two rival atma-bandhus is to be preferred. The third proposition is as follows: "The examples given in the text of Virdha Satatapa or Boudhayana are intended to show the mode in which nearness of affinity is to be ascertained." That proposition was useful in the case before the Court as showing that the maternal uncle's son was an atma-bandhu while the father's paternal aunt's son was a pitru-bandhu; but it does not help to decide whether the maternal uncle is to be preferred to the father's sister's son. The fourth proposition was as follows: "That as between bandhus of the same class, the spiritual benefit they confer upon the propositus is, as stated in the Viramitrodaya, a ground of preference." But how is spiritual benefit to be measured, and how far as a ground of preference will it prevail against propinquity? There would certainly appear to be some foundation for the opinion expressed by Sadasiva Ayyar, J., though their Lordships were not prepared to accept it that the introduction of such questions as spiritual benefit or of death pollution, or of the right of performance of obsequial ceremonies would only lead to inextricable confusion. In many cases who is the nearest heir can easily be decided without any consideration of such questions, but when the rival merits of the claimants are fairly equally balanced we have no guide as to the extent to which the answer to these questions can avail as a ground of preference. Their Lordships approved the express rule that in succession amongst bandhus to the nearest sapinda the inheritance belonged, and so far that would appear to conflict with the rule laid down in Saguna v. Sadashiv (1) but the test of nearness of affinity to the deceased had also to be regulated by the test of spiritual benefit. To what extent spiritual benefit is to be considered a ground of preference so as to overcome nearness of affinity still remains to be decided in each contest amongst bandhus. In the contest between the maternal uncle and the paternal aunt's grandson there was no difficulty, the former was the nearer heir and offered oblations to the maternal grandfather and great-grandfather of the propositus, while the latter offered no oblations to the ancestors of the propositus.

In Balkrishna Bhimaji v. Ramkrishna Gangadhar (8) it was held by this Court following Narasimma v. Mangammal (2) and Raja Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao Bahadur v. Raja Surenani Vehkata Purushothama Jogannadha Gopala Row Bahadur (9) that male bandhus should be preferred to females so that a mother's sister's son was preferred to a brother's daughter, but, as pointed out in Kenchava v. Girimallappa Channappa (10), Saguna v. Sadashiv (1) was not cited, so that whenever the two conflicting principles of preference of the paternal over the maternal line, and preference of the male over the female sex in the Presidency of Bombay, had to be weighed, the Court which weighed them would have to choose between the two decisions.

Now, if the bandhus on the father's side had to be preferred to those on the mother's side the paternal aunt's grandson would have been preferred to the maternal uncle in Vedachela v. Subramania Mudaliar (3) and the decision of the Privy Council in that case must, no doubt, be treated as preventing the rule in Saguna v. Sadashiv (1) being considered as a rule of universal application.

In the present case if we follow Saguna v. Sadashiv (1) undoubtedly the plaintiffs succeed. If we consider propinquity, together with the doctrine of spiritual benefit, the defendant is nearer to the propositus while the oblations offered by the plaintiffs to the paternal ancestors are more efficacious, since we cannot agree with the Joint Judge that the oblations offered to maternal ancestors are of equal value. Nor can we agree with the final test suggested by him with regard to the pindas to be offered by the propositus to the rival claimants. We are then confronted with the impossible task of expressing an uncertain measure of superiority of spiritual benefit in terms of propinquity or vice versa. Propinquity can be expressed in degrees of relationship to the propositus. Spiritual benefit can only be said to be greater, equal or less. Can the greater efficacy of the oblations offered by the plaintiffs to the paternal ancestors of the propositus overcome the fact that the defendant is one degree nearer the propositus than the plaintiff, and can the patneral relationship of the plaintiffs be counted in their favour? Perhaps it will be sufficient to say that in my opinion weighing all these considerations preference should be given to the plaintiffs.

The appeal is allowed and the decree of the Trial Court restored. The plaintiffs will get their costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Shah, J.—The question of Hindu Law that arises in this second appeal is as to who is the preferential heir between the father's sister's son and the maternal uncle of the deceased. The plaintiffs are the sons of the sister of the father of the deceased and the defendant is the maternal uncle of the deceased. The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiffs without giving any reasons and apparently without any doubt or difficulty about the point.

The learned Joint Judge who heard the appeal held in favour of the maternal uncle and dismissed the plaintiff's suit The reasoning of the learned Judge briefly is that applying the test of religious efficacy the maternal uncle is nearer than the father's sister's son.

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants before us that in the text relating to bandhus the father's sister's son is mentioned while the maternal uncle is not mentioned and that, therefore, he should be preferred. Further, it is urged that both being atma-bandhus the bandhu ex parte paterna, should be preferred to the bandhu ex parte materna among bandhus of the same class, that on the ground of propinquity the father's sister's son is nearer than the maternal uncle, and that the mere calculation of degrees in the case of one on the father's side and in the case of the other on the mother's side cannot help the Court in deciding the question of propinquity as the consideration of degrees from two different sides involves an element of difference which renders the mere number of degrees an unsafe guide. It is also urged that even if the test of religious efficacy be applied, the father's sister's son, who can offer oblations, to his three maternal ancestors, who would include the paternal grandfather and great-grand-father of the deceased, should be preferred to the maternal uncle, who can offer oblations to his father, paternal grandfather and great-grand-father who would be the three maternal ancestors of the deceased.

On the other hand on behalf of the defendant-respondent it is urged that propinquity is the only test for determining the question of preference among bandhus of the same class, that the maternal uncle being nearer from the mother's side than the father's sister's sons from the father's side the former should be preferred to the latter on the ground of nearer affinity. It is urged that in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3) the test really adopted is one of propinquity and that the test of spiritual benefit to the propositus cannot be considered as affording any safe guide in a case where one bandhu can offer oblations to the maternal ancestors of the deceased and the other can offer oblations to two paternal ancestors to whom the deceased could have offered oblations. Mr. Shingne did not argue—at least I did not understand him to argue—that the spiritual benefit conferred by the maternal uncle is greater than that conferred by the father's sister's son. Several decisions have been referred to in the course of the argument: but there is none directly bearing on the competition between the two particular bandhus, whose claims we have to consider.

On a careful consideration of the arguments I am of opinion that the father's sister's son should be preferred to the maternal uncle as a nearer bandhu. I shall briefly state my reasons for this conclusion.

At the outset it may be mentioned that both are atma-bandhus, both are males and one is expressly mentioned in the well-known text relating to bandhus referred to in the Mitakshara and the Vyavahara Mayukha. It is expressly pointed out in the Mitakshara and the Vyavahara Mayukha that the atma-bandhus exclude the pitru-bandhus and that the pitru-bandhus are to be preferred to matru-bandhus on account of their near affinity. It has also been held that the particular bandhus expressly mentioned in each class in the text are illustrative of the class and that the enumeration is not exhaustive. It has also been held that those expressly mentioned are not necessary to be preferred to those not mentioned simply because they are mentioned. This position was accepted by this Court in Mohandas v. Krishnabai (11) where the maternal uncle not expressly mentioned, was preferred to mother's sisters's son expressly mentioned, and in Rajeppa Ranappa Kundagal v. Gangappa Jotappa Maudwe (12) where the question of the relative rights of two male atma-bandhus related on the mother's side and expressly mentioned was considered independently of this consideration. In spite of the argument of Diwan Bahadur Rao based upon the foot note No. 3 in Mandlik's Hindu Law at page 82 of the translation which in its terms is based upon the rule quoted in the foot-note (No. 7) in the Sanskrit text of the Vyavahara Mayukha at page 54 of the same book, the preference of the father's sister's son to the maternal uncle cannot be based on that ground.

I also desire to point out that in this case there is no question of a nearer female bandhu being preferred or postponed to a more distant male bandhu : and there is no question here of weighing any conflicting principles of preference of the paternal over the maternal line and the preference of the male over the female sex in this Presidency. That conflict will have to be settled when it arises for consideration, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kenchava v. Girimallappa Channappa (10).

The test of preference is propinquity. The word used in the Mitakshara is antarangatva. In the case of bandhus we have to consider the blood relationship. The method of determining the nearness by calculating the number of degrees from the common ancestor cannot apply to bandhus so effectively as to sapinda sagotras. The maternal uncle, taking the common ancestor on the mother's side, may appear one degree nearer than father's sister's son as taken from the common paternal ancestor. But where there is not one common ancestor either paternal or maternal for the purpose of determining the relative position of the two bandhus, this way of determining the nearness cannot be decisive and the element of differences between the paternal and maternal line necessarily comes in.

In this Presidency the preference of the paternal over the maternal line among the same class of bandhus was approved in Saguna v. Sadashiv (1). That preference has not been totally negatived in any case. It is perfectly true that the universal preference given to the paternal over the maternal line has been definitely negatived by their Lordships in Vedachela Mudaliar's case (2); but in that case their Lordships do not go so far as to say that there is no scope for any preference whatever on that ground. Its application as a conclusive test with reference to the consideration of near affinity, has been negatived but its consideration as an element in determining the propinquity or affinity is not excluded. In fact it could not be excluded for in that very case their Lordships expressly approve of the test of religious benefit laid down by Muttusami Ayyar, J., in Muthusami v. Muthukumarasami (7) and in applying the test of spiritual benefit the possible superiority of the pindas offered to the paternal ancestors of the deceased over pindas offered to the maternal ancestor does come in for consideration in an apparently different form. But in substance it is the same thing as the preference of the paternal over the maternal line.

In applying the test of affinity unencumbered by any considerations of spiritual benefit, it must be remembered that the daughter and the daughter's son occupy a very high place in the list of specified heirs. Then the sister (i. e., the father's daughter) is mentioned as an heir in the Vyavahara Mayukha after the specified heirs before the agnates and in this Presidency under the Mitakshara also the sister, though not expressly mentioned, has got an equally high place. The cases with reference to the position of the sister in this Presidency are referred to at page 554* of the report in Dattatraya Bhimrao Subris v. Gangabai Ganeshbhat (13). In the Madras Presidency the sister would occupy a much lower place even among bandhus.

Then when we come to the sister's son though he is not mentioned as a bandhu he would occupy a high place among the atma-bandhus, in this Presidency; and certainly he would not be preferred to the sister as in Madras. It is sufficient to refer to the decision in Ichharam Shumbhoodas v. Prumanund Bhaeechund (14).

Then we come to the father's sister, that is the grand-father's daughter. According to the decision in Saguna v. Sadashiv (1), she would be preferred to the maternal uncle. I am willing to treat it as an open question whether on account of her being a female she will be able to retain the place which has been assigned to her by Jenkins, C. J., with reference to the maternal uncle, in view of the later decisions in Balkrishna Bhimaji v. Ramkrishna Gangadhar (8) and Kenchava v. Girimallappa Channappa (10) I do not desire to lay any emphasis on the decision in Saguna's case (1), beyond indicating that after consideration the paternal line was given preference over the maternal line, and that if that preference is not to be altogether excluded her son who is mentioned as an atma-bandhu would be considered a nearer relation on account of his connection with the paternal line of the propositus. As regards the maternal uncle while he is a very close blood relation on the mother's side, the idea of preference of the paternal over the maternal affinity cannot be altogether excluded. Without, therefore, attempting to generalise beyond the necessity of the case, in my opinion, the father's sister's son has closer affinity with the propositus on account of his connection through the paternal grandfather than the maternal uncle who is connected with the deceased through his maternal grandfather.

I have dealt with the question so far without reference to the test of spiritual benefit to the propositus. That test is difficult of application generally speaking as regards bandhus when one is connected through the paternal line and the other through the maternal line. It brings into operation the difference between the oblations which it is the duty of a person to offer at different kinds of Shraddhas. I shall refer briefly to Dharmasindhu and Nirnayasindhu as to the obligations to offer oblations to the maternal ancestors. Parvana Shradhas are of three types which are described as Ekaparvanaka, Dwiparvanaka and Triparvanaka in the Dharmasindhu. (The Nirnaya Sagar Press—2nd edition, page 285) (1). In the latter two kinds of Parvana Shraddhas the deceased in his lifetime would offer oblations to his three paternal ancestors as well as three maternal ancestors, while in the first type of Parvana Shraddha he would offer oblations to his three paternal ancestors. In the case of the father's sister's son he would offer oblations to his three maternal ancestors who would include the paternal grandfather and the great-grandfather of the deceased when he performs Shraddha of the Dwiparvana and Triparvana types. In the case of the maternal uncle he would be offering pindas to the paternal ancestors in all the three kinds of Parvana Shraddhas, to whom the propositus would be offering oblations under the Dwiparvanaka and Triparvanaka Shraddhas. And there is a fourth class of Parvana Shraddha in which Mahalaya and Tirtha Shraddhas for maternal ancestors can be performed as a Parvana. It is not without some reluctance that I have referred to these distinctions referred to in Dharmasindhu in the passage an extract wherefrom I have attached as note No. 1 to this judgment for ready reference. In the Nirnayasidhu the obligation to offer oblations to the maternal ancestors is referred to at page 279, Nirnaya Sagar Press, 2nd edition. I have put up this extract as note No. 2 (2). These references incidentally illustrate the difficulty of applying the test of spiritual benefit.

But in the present case, to put it in a simple form in which it has been referred to in the decided cases it would be accurate to say that the father's sister's son could offer oblations among others to his three maternal ancestors who could include the paternal grandfather and great-grandfather of the deceased, while the maternal uncle would offer oblations to his three paternal ancestors who would be the three maternal ancestors of the deceased. The religious benefit to the propositus would be greater on account of his participation in the offerings to his two paternal ancestors than from his participation in the offerings to his three maternal ancestors. There is no decision so far as I am aware which says that no preference is to be given to offerings to paternal ancestors over those to maternal ancestors: and without pausing to weigh with nicety the relative efficacy of the oblations, which may be or should be offered in different types of Shraddhas and to ancestors in different lines, I feel no difficulty in saying that judged by the test of religious benefit to the propositus resulting from oblations offered by the two bandhus in question the father's sister's son should be preferred to the maternal uncle.

I desire to make it clear that though I have considered the question of spiritual benefit to the propositus with reference to the two particular bandhus whose relative rights we have to decide, I rely largely upon the test of propinquity which is to be applied with due regard to the preference of the paternal over the maternal line within certain limits as indicated by the broad fact that all pitru-bandhus are to be preferred to matru-bandhus and that in this Presidency the sister is assigned a high place among the heirs.

I need hardly add that I accept Vedachala Mudaliar's case (3) as a conclusive authority for the proposition that the maternal uncle is to be preferred to the father's sister's son's son. But there is nothing in the judgment to show that the father's sister's son cannot be preferred to the maternal uncle.

I, therefore, concur in the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Coyajee, J.—I concur in the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT.
March 1, 1926.
Present:—Viscount Dunedin, Lord Shaw, Lord Sumner, Sir John Edge and Lord Salvesen.

MANECKJI PESTONJI BHARUCHA AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS
versus
WADILAL SARABHAI & COMPANY AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 121—Sale of shares of Company by delivery of certificates and blank transfers—Cheque for price dishonoured—Title in shares—Vendee transferring certificates and transfers to third party—Plaintiff vendor's suit for recovery of certificates and transfers—Proper remedy of plaintiff.

Plaintiff sold certain shares of Company to defendant No. 1. He took from various brokers blank transfers signed by the registered holders along with corresponding certificates and handed them over to the defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 1 gave the plaintiff a cheque which was dishonoured. The defendant No 1 made certain propositions as to the raising of money with defendant No. 2 and handed the certificates and transfers to him. Defendant No. 2 did likewise with defendant No. 3. In an action by the plaintiff against all the three defendants asking for return of the certificates and blank transfers or otherwise for damages:

Held, that as soon as the plaintiff handed over the certificates and transfers and the defendant accepted them and gave a cheque, property in the shares passed to the defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff had neither any jus in re of the certificates and transfers nor had he any statutory lien on them. The plaintiff could only sue the defendant No 1 on the cheque or on the price of the shares unpaid in respect that the cheque had not been honoured and could not sue defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for delivery of shares. [p. 826, col. 1.]

Messrs. A. C. Clauson, E. B. Raikes and H. Johnston, for the Appellants.
